Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,

From A. H. MACARTNEY, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. SHUBRICK, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No. 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

THE NILE EXPEDITION.

The difficulties of transport for Lord Wolseley's expedition are increasing greatly, and there are great fears that another block in the traffic will take place at Assouan. The most powerful engine on the line has broken its main crank, and two out of the five at Wady Halfa are disabled, one having run over a bridge into a ravine, and the other having also left the rails and stuck in a sand-drift. On the arrival of the Black Watch at Assouan on Sunday a case of small-pox was discovered among the men. The whole battalion has consequently been placed in quarantine.

At Assouan, says the correspondent of the Standard, we saw signs of military activity for the first time since leaving Cairo. A railway engine puffed as it drew a dozen trucks on the short journey of seven miles required to pass round the first cataract. Fellaheen were at work continuing the railway down to the banks of the river, and commissariat officers were busy amongst heaps of stores which were being unladen from numerous dahabeeyahs. But, strange to say, people professed not to believe in the real intention of the English Government to dispatch an expedition, the preparations having been delayed till it was almost too late.

The correspondent of the Daily News mentions that the arrival at Assiout of a whole train laden with nothing but boats was a subject of surprise to the ordinarily imperturbable natives, who had been daily expecting the advent of a formidable fleet steaming up the Nile. The boats were treated with the greatest care in their long journey from Alexandria. An officer in charge accompanied the train, and had under him a detachment of Blue-jackets, whose duty it was to perform this necessary labour at proper intervals, in order to prevent the seams from opening under the heat of Egyptian sunshine. The result of this was that the first batch of 30 boats has reached Assiout in admirable condition.

The London correspondent of the Liverpool Courier writes:—"Apart from all surmise as to what the Cabinet may have had under consideration, we have striking proof in yesterday's telegrams from Cairo that the immense cost of the expedition—the altogether unexpected cost—must at once engage Ministerial attention. It is notified that the Paymaster-General in Egypt draws for an expenditure of £25,000 daily, or £600,000 per month. This, at least, is to be the rate of cost in Egypt alone during the next two weeks. What has been the expenditure in England in preliminary preparations? The £300,000 voted by the House has long since vanished, and will be found to bear a small proportion to the amounts incurred for commissariat, Nile flotilla, and other costly items. When Lord Wolseley assumed the command of the expedition he attached the condition, so far as one in his position can ask conditions, that he should have carte blanche. And as he is drawing on it to the alarm and amazement of the Exchequer. Nor is there any calculation possible as to where the expenditure will end. The expedition may last till spring, and be about as costly to bring down as to send up the Nile. Under the most favourable course of events, the English taxpayer may look out for the heaviest war bill since that of the last Afghan War."

Telegraphing from Wady Halfa, the special correspondent of the Morning Post sends home a most interesting communication. He says:—"The first cataract at Assouan may be regarded as the first point whence difficulties seriously begin for the advancing force. Assouan itself, separated from Cairo by over 250 miles of railway and over 340 miles of way by river, nearly 600 miles in all, lies at no contemptible distance from the base of the expedition; but up to this point the railway and an unimpeded waterway provide an adequate means of transport. At Assouan intervenes a cataract, which has the double effect of arresting and delaying all transport that reaches it, and of limiting to a particular character all transport that goes beyond it. Steamers of moderate draught can be hauled up this cataract at fairly high Nile, but for the sake of rapidity it is better to forward men and stores by the five miles of railway by which the cataract is circumvented, and hence a delay for disembarkation and reshipment. The class of transport above Assouan is defined and limited by the difficulty of forcing steamers over the Assouan cataract, so that after a certain period in the fall of the Nile the fleet between Assouan and Wady Halfa cannot receive any powerful additions. The resources of transport which are now above Assouan, and which are being, and will continue to be, used for carrying forward the expedition to Wady Halfa, consist of three armed steamers, carrying each a Gardner gun, commanded by officers, and manned by a crew of the Royal Navy, aided by an Arab crew; six other steamers, commanded and manned by natives; four steam pinnaces, manned by the Royal Navy; a number of dahabeeyahs, sailing boats, and a few barges, or lighters. Until lately, there were four of the armed steamers upon this reach, but one of them, the Nassif Kheir, has at last, with much effort, been dragged up the second cataract, past Wady Halfa, and will now do service as far south of Wady Halfa as she can go, probably to Hamuk. The dahabeeyahs for the most part sail to Wady Halfa, but the most rapid transport is achieved by the steamers towing dahabeeyahs or lighters, themselves carrying at the same time a certain number of men and stores, and completing the journey in a little under five days. The current is everywhere strong, in some reaches so strong that if the bend of the river catches the wind unfavourably the steamers will sometimes fail to make way, and begin to be carried back until by dexterous steering, having cast about for a belt of less swiftly rushing water, they secure a path they can ascend. There is a difficult stretch of this sort immediately above Korosko. In estimating the difficulties of an expedition launched to such a distance from its base as this expedition is destined to compass, the capacity of the intervening country in the way of yielding supplies is a matter of the highest importance, for supplies, in a sense, annihilate distance, and render it as easy and as safe, where they flow plentifully, for a good army to meet its enemy in a far off country as to await him at home. Ammunition, which must come from the base, is the only necessary which qualifies this proposition. The country we pass through is practically a blank for any purpose connected with the support of an army. It yields neither meat, nor wheat, nor vegetables for the men, nor fodder for the beasts of burden. A general must reckon the road from Assouan to Wady Halfa as 250 miles of desert, superior only to most deserts because it has a waterway. Each trip for the transport of men and stores from Assouan to Wady Halfa and back may be set down as occupying from five to six days. For while the average voyage up-stream occupies five days, the return voyage down-stream is accomplished in less than 20 hours. By moonlight, of which there is none now, the steamers could travel through a part of the night, not the whole night, for they have at present only one pilot or look-out man and one helmsman each, who could not, of course, be kept uninterruptedly on duty for 24 hours. It is the practice now to make fast to the bank each night at sundown, about 6.30, and to start again at 4.30 next morning. Additional pilots, when we have a moon, would enable the period of this halt to be shortened, and the whole journey to be accomplished in a less time—say, four days. Each steamer, therefore, may be set down as needing from five to six days to deliver its freight from Assouan to Wady Halfa, and to be back at Assouan ready for a second trip. The men, during this voyage, bivouac at night upon the river banks. A steamer towing a dahabeeyah takes about 130 men—40 on the steamer and 90 on the dahabeeyah.

No transports being available for their use at present, the Heavy Brigade of the Camel Corps will encamp near the Pyramids, and will probably remain there until next week.

Lieut. Fortescue, Acting Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., has left Cairo to conduct the disembarkation of the 2nd Batn. East Surrey Regt.

Lord Northbrook went half way up the First Cataract on Thursday to witness the passage of the English rowing boats.

Major Chermside has been appointed Governor of the Red Sea Littoral, and Major Haggard to the command of the Egyptian forces.

The Standard correspondent at Dongola telegraphs:—"Considerable progress is being made here with the preparations for the advance of the British force. Supplies of food and camels are being brought in freely by the natives, the Kababish and other tribesmen contributing largely, and Gen. Stewart will be able to collect a considerable number of camels by the time the troops are here and in readiness for an advance. Should it be decided that the route across the Desert be taken, he will probably be able to get together from ten to fifteen thousand camels. But little news has reached us from the South. Two small tribes whose country lies on the line of march between Debbeh and Khartoum have sent in to offer their submission and promise to furnish supplies. Bedouins report that the Mahdi, after advancing as far as Haat, retraced his steps in the direction of Obeid, in order to suppress an insurrection which had broken out near Gebel Dair. The corps are now nearly all got in over the Soudan and the country to the South, and the period is approaching when, if ever, the bulk of the Mahdi's followers, having finished their labours in the fields, should assemble in force for action on a large scale."

A Cairo correspondent telegraphed on Wednesday:—"The Light Brigade of the Camel Corps arrived here this morning, and camped at Kasr-el-Nil; they will proceed to the front to-morrow. The Heavy Brigade will arrive here to-morrow evening, and will go up as transport can be obtained for them. The Canadians passed through Cairo en route for Assiout this evening. Dinner was provided for them at the Boolak Station. They are a rough, workmanlike body of men, and should do good service. Their strength is 355 rank and file and five officers."

Lord Wolseley inspected the hospital at Wady Halfa on Monday, and expressed his entire satisfaction with the arrangements made by Brigade-Surg. Norris, Surg.-Major Churchill, and Qrmr. Copping. His Lordship and Staff visited the second gate on the cataract, 13 miles above Wady Halfa on Tuesday, returning in the evening. On Wednesday he inspected the whole of the troops, including the Mounted Infantry. Part of the latter marched past on foot, their camel saddles not having arrived. The mounted men managed their camels perfectly.

The Standard says:—"On the recommendation of Col. Chermside, it is intended by the Khedive to specially recognise the services of the Egyptian troops who have assisted in the defence of Suakim during the past few months against the rebels. Although it is generally admitted that in the field, unless supported by British troops, the native army is comparatively worthless, the native force at Suakim has proved a valuable auxiliary to the Marines and other detachments in repelling the attacks of the rebels at that place. It is interesting to note, in connection with the proposed abolition of the Egyptian Army, that on Comdre. Molyneux recently handing over the command at Suakim to Major-Gen. Lyon-Fremantle, he addressed a letter to Col. Chermside, commanding the native troops, from which the following is an extract:—'The way the Egyptian troops have worked under you and your officers, and, above all, the remarkable steadiness they have acquired under fire, deserve every praise, and I cannot too heartily recognise the cheerful co-operation I have always met with.'"

The Times' correspondent at Dongola says:—"On behalf of my fellow-correspondents and myself, I desire to state that all our telegrams from or to England are subjected to a military visé, here and at Wady Halfa, before delivery to the addressee. The existing arrangements renders telegraphing practically valueless and wasteful."

The lady-nurses sailed from the Royal Arsenal on Wednesday in the steamer Cameo, the last of the ships specially engaged for the present special enterprise. Each of the nurses has been certified medically fit for the work, and each has been granted an allowance of £8 10s. for her outfit. They all wore the silver-grey cloaks and bonnets of the nursing sisterhood.

Col. Wilberforce furnishes the following list of steamers on the Nile to the Times:—

(a.) Under repair at Cairo.—The Rawza, 140 h.p.; the Rashid, 140 h.p.; the Miniya, 140 h.p.; the Tahta, 80 h.p.; the Sharakiyo, 80 h.p.; the Sudan, 60 h.p.

(d.) Steamers between Assouan (the First Cataract) and Wady Halfa (the Second Cataract).—The Masur, 80 h.p.; *the Mahalla, 60 h.p.; *the Nil, 40 h.p.; the Nasif Khair, 40 h.p.; *the Mahmudiya, 40 h.p.; *the Saidiya, 40 h.p.; *the Bani Sinef, 40 h.p.; *the Jiza, 40 h.p.; the Banha, 40 h.p.; *the Mubashir Khair, 20 h.p.

The eight steamers marked thus * belong to Messrs. Cook and Son, the tourist guides.

A telegram in which a message from the French Consul at Khartoum was forwarded has been received at Cairo. He completely confirms the news that the siege of the town had been raised, and says that the neighbourhood was entirely free from rebels, and that the victualling of Khartoum had become comparatively easy at the time of the despatch of his message. He also stated that he was going to accompany Col. Stewart and Mr. Power to Dongola. We trust, when the proper time comes, that the French Government will not forget the eminent services rendered by this gentleman, who in a most plucky manner placed his services at the disposal of his country, and proceeded to Khartoum after Gen. Gordon had gone there, at a time when very few men would have consented to incur the risks which were inseparable from such a mission.—Egyptian Gazette.

Sir Charles Wilson, Chief of the Intelligence Department, and Major Slade, Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., are under orders to leave for Dongola by the first opportunity.

Amongst other stores which are being sent out are felling-axes and "crow's-feet." The crow's-foot may be described as four spikes set upon a centre, one of these spikes, however the vicious thing may fall, pointing upwards. Scattered about the ground, these iron thorns would terribly torment horses and badly-shod men, and would suffice to check a charge by barefooted savages for a sufficient time to enable rifles to play with murderous effect on the attacking force.

Lieut.-Col. Tweedie, of the West Kent Regt., has been appointed Commandant of the Depôt at Kasr-el-Nil, and Lieut. W. Francis, of the Duke of Cornwall's L.I., has been appointed Adjuant and Quartermaster. This depôt is formed of men who, for various reasons, could not proceed to the front with their regiment or corps.

Capt. Blackburn, R.E., and Lieut. E. Roper, R.E., have left for Assiout, the former en route to Wady Halfa, and the latter en route to Assouan. Three officers and 37 non-commissioned officers and men of the 11th Company, Royal Engineers, proceeded up the Nile at the same time.

Surg. Harding, of the Army Medical Department, and a detachment of the Army Hospital Corps have proceeded to Wady Halfa. Surg. Swayne has proceeded up the Nile, in medical charge of Royal Engineers.

The Rev. O. A. W. O'Neill is under orders to move on to Dongola, as soon as he is relieved at Wady Halfa by the Rev. F. Beamish.

Baker Pasha has placed the services of Major Schaeffer at the disposal of Lord Wolseley.

The Canadians and Indians went on from Assiout on Thursday morning in the steamer Beherah.

THE CAMEL CORPS.

A native paper learns that each man of the Camel Corps will ride, like the Mounted Infantry, at the back of a native driver, whose assistance in the management of the animal is indispensable. Besides the two men, the camels will carry a good load of baggage, and probably one of the 12½ gallon india-rubber water-bottles.

VOLUNTEERS FOR EGYPT.

"W. G. G." writes:—"From an article in your issue, of Sept. 27, I extract as follows:—'It has been said that if the Infantry batttalions had responded with more alacrity to the call for volunteers for the Mounted Infantry, the Camel Corps would not have become a necessity, and would never have been heard of.' (p. 700.) The statement contained in the foregoing extract is likely to convey the erroneous impression that a general call was made upon the Line for volunteers, and that a sufficient number was not forthcoming. As a matter of fact. the call was very far indeed from being general, and now that the question has been raised, it would be interesting to know what, or at any rate how many, battalions had the opportunity afforded them of furnishing volunteers."

THE FRENCH IN CHINA.

A special telegram from Hong Kong, dated Wednesday last states that:—"Admiral Lespès, with a portion of the French fleet, has commenced the bombardment of Tamsui, the second port of Formosa. One battery on shore has been silenced. The attitude of the Chinese continues to be defiant, and there is no evidence that the destruction of some of their ports has in the slightest degree shaken their resolution, or that they will be frightened into conceding the French demands. The French are short of supplies, and their difficulties are likely to increase, as it is only by the pressure of the English authorities that any native labour can be obtained for their requirements."

A telegram from Shanghai, dated Thursday, announces that the bombardment of Tamsui still continues. The forts have been destroyed. The Chinese troops are strongly entrenched.

A correspondent who witnessed the engagement on the Min River writes:—"Every man-of-war (Chinese and French) had been cleared for action for weeks past, and all were lying with steam up and cables ready for slipping at a moment's notice. The French flagship Volta fired a broadside, and immediately every French vessel present opened fire. The noise was deafening. Both starboard and port batteries in the ships were discharging their projectiles with crushing effect. The starboard batteries of the French were concentrated on the forts on Losung Island, close to the Pagoda. So heavy was the fire, that in less, I should say, than five minutes nothing was left of the fort on the beach below the Pagoda but a crumbling, smoking heap of ruins. The other forts also received their share of attention, but kept up a desultory fire for about an hour—probably less—by which time they had suffered considerably, and, though flying the Dragon, were probably deserted for the time. The effect of the port batteries on the Chinese vessels cannot be imagined, or justly described. Three Chinese vessels were most favourably placed for receiving the concentrated broadsides poured into them. At the first discharge they presented the appearance of wrecks,—boats knocked away, spars gone in all directions, and hulls absolutely riddled. They slipped their cables, but seemed immovable, except that the tide took them slowly down the river. After ten minutes, as far as I could see for the smoke, neither of the three Chinese vessels fired a single shot, and I doubt very much whether any one of them got in more than their first broadside. Fifteen minutes from the first gun the sloop into which the D'Estaign had been principally firing sank amidst loud cheers from the French. The other two were on fire and drifting down, and the Triomphante, coming up, poured in deadly finishing broadsides, completing the destruction. The slaughter must have been enormous."

At the Admiralty, letters have been received from Rear-Admiral N. Salmon, C.B., V.C., Commander-in-Chief on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station. in the Boadicea, flagship, at Simon's Bay, up to Aug. 17 (was at Simon's Bay on the 7th). The Opal was at Fernando Po on July 20, the Flirt at the Cameroons on July 20, and the Stork at San Paul de Loando on July 18.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE IN IRELAND.

The Duke of Cambridge left Dublin for Cork on Monday. He was accompanied to the railway station by the Viceroy and Sir Thomas Steele, commanding the forces in Ireland, and was received at Cork by the Mayor and Sheriff, and a military guard of honour. His Royal Highness inspected the troops of the Cork garrison in the afternoon in the Park. The 11th Hussars marched in from Ballincollig, and looked extremely smart. His Royal Highness slowly rode along the line. Returning by the rear of the line, the Duke took up his position. The march-past then commenced, Major-Gen. Young leading his brigade, which numbered 1,000 of all ranks, and about 230 horses. The 11th Hussars marched past in squadrons, Royal Artillery half battery in line, and infantry in open column of double companies. The Hussars then trotted past in sections. The Royal Artillery also trotted past. The infantry then marched past in close column. Again the infantry marched past in line of quarter-distance column. The Hussars then trotted past in line, then wheeled about by troops, and cantered past by squadrons. They then opened out, and went through the sword exercise at a canter. The brigade then formed up at the end of the racecourse for the purpose of going through the attack formation. The Field-Marshal expressed to Major-Gen. Young the great satisfaction the inspection had afforded him. On Tuesday his Royal Highness visited the forts in Queenstown Harbour, returning to Dublin on Wednesday. His Royal Highness left Ireland in the evening for London, and arrived at Gloucester House the following day.

Referring to the visit to Cork, the Irish Times says:—"The Duke of Cambridge has been well pleased with his reception in 'Cork's own town.' No one of sense could have had any apprehension as to the character of his welcome. Whatever differences of political opinion there might be between parties, we could rely upon the chivalry and generosity of the Corkonians—known all the world over—for a courteous greeting to the stranger. Sir George Penrose, in proposing the health of his Royal Highness, who was the guest of the High Sheriff on board the City of Cork, expressed the hope that his Royal Highness might be induced soon to repeat his visit to the capital of the South. The Duke, in reply, thanked those present for the kind way in which they had received his health. He had experienced great gratification, he said, from the reception accorded to him by all classes. He would take an early opportunity of informing her Majesty of the enthusiastic manner in which her health had been received. During the time he had served in Ireland he had not had the opportunity of visiting either the North or South. He regretted not having done so, seeing how well he had been received in both Belfast and Cork. He wished all peace, plenty, and prosperity to Ireland. The Mayor repudiated the name of 'rebel Cork' as applying to the city, and expressed the opinion that more frequent visits of the Royal Family would keep alive the flame of loyalty. The Queen, he said, would be received again as cordially as she was on the occasion of her visit in 1849. Altogether, the Duke's experience seems to have been a pleasant one, and possibly he may feel inclined to renew his acquaintance with the beautiful South on another occasion 'in mufti.'"

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Sir Thos. Steele and Staff, inspected the Curragh Brigade on Oct. 1. The troops were drawn up in line at open order facing south, at 9.15 a.m., when, after the usual marches past, the force was divided, and ordered to take up a certain position for a sham fight. His Royal Highness expressed satisfaction at the smart and soldierlike appearance of the troops.

THE LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY.

The Lords of the Admiralty on Thursday began their annual inspection of Chatham Dockyard, having remained at Chatham on board the yacht Enchantress from attending the launching of the Rodney on Wednesday. On landing at the Dockyard yesterday, their Lordships were received by Rear-Admiral Watson. Proceeding to Admiralty House, they remained some time in consultation with heads of departments, the matters under consideration having reference to the new armoured ships and other vessels proposed to be constructed during the approaching year, as well as the new buildings and other works to be undertaken. It is understood to be the intention of the Admiralty to lay down two large armoured ships at Chatham Dockyard during the next twelve months, one of which will be commenced as soon as possible. In addition to the armour-plated ships, two other vessels, of a class to be hereafter decided upon, will also be commenced at Chatham in the course of the year. Having visited the extension works, their Lordships inspected the Ajax and Conqueror, armoured ships, as well as the Calypso, unarmoured fast cruiser, all three of which are quite ready to hoist the pennant. In the basins are also the unarmoured screw frigates Phaeton and Leander, while the Arethusa, an exactly similar vessel, is in dock being prepared to be commissioned. The only large armoured ship now building at Chatham Dockyard is the Hero, four guns, 6,200 tons, 4,500 horse-power, but there are also two fast-steaming ocean cruisers, the Mersey and Severn, under construction. Their Lordships also inspected the factories, workshops, saw-mills, and other departments, and afterwards lunched at the Admiralty House, the residence of Admiral Watson. The afternoon was devoted to the inspection of the division of Royal Marines and a visit to Melville Naval Hospital. Their Lordships left Chatham in the Enchantress, and commenced their inspection of Sheerness Dockyard yesterday.

The Admiralty have received letters from Capt. H. W. Brent, of the Amethyst, on South-east Coast of America, dated Sept. 15. The Amethyst, Algerine, and Wrangler were at Pera, on the date above-named, and the Ready was on passage to Falkland Island.

Charles Tree, boatman, of the Coastguard; William H. Heard, coxswain, second class, of the Neptune; and John Thomas Shotey, quartermaster instructor, of the Minotaur, have been awarded the long-service and good-conduct medals.

IMPROVEMENTS TO PORTSMOUTH HARBOUR.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

Many years since, enormous sums of money were expended in fortifying our Naval arsenals; in fact, more than two-and-a-half millions were expended in and around Portsmouth alone. It would naturally be supposed that the important harbour of Portsmouth (the Magna Porta of the Romans) would then also have been materially improved; but, beyond the dredging necessary for the enormous extension of the dockyard, but little has been done. Portsmouth Harbour is admitted by the most competent Naval and Military authorities to be the chief in this Empire, and the utmost attention on the part of the Admiralty should be exercised to secure that pre-eminence for the future. It is now many years since we pointed out that in the event of a Naval engagement with any of our maritime neighbours the spot most likely to be selected would be between the port of Cherbourg on the French, and Portland on the English coasts. Should any of our ironclads be crippled, they would inevitably resort to Portsmouth for repairs; and it behoves us, therefore, to see that that harbour should be in a thoroughly fit state to receive them. It seems to us that in this all-important question the essential point to be considered is, How is the scour of the harbour to be increased? It is proposed, we understand, by a civil engineer well acquainted with the coast around, to reclaim the mud lands on the eastern side of the island of Portsea, known as Eastney and Nelder Lakes, by throwing up an embankment from the promontory near Cumberland Fort, to the "Great Salterns," which property itself was reclaimed from the sea in the early part of this century. This, it is fully believed, would materially increase the in-scour of Langston Harbour—the tide at which is two hours later than at Portsmouth—and as a matter of necessity increase the scour of Portsmouth Harbour. In addition to this, it is proposed that a similar embankment should be carried out in a westerly direction from the western end of Hilsea Creek—which it is determined should be widened and deepened for the passage of gunboats—touching Horsey and Little Horsey Islands, thence from the latter in a southerly direction, and afterwards in an easterly direction to the mainland at Tipnor. The land thus reclaimed might be entirely devoted to Government uses, and any new establishment thereon would be under the immediate shelter of the forts on Portsdown Hill. The whole of these works could be well performed by the convicts in Portsmouth Prison, under the supervision of the Director of Works' Department, and the necessary materials, principally old oak and fir, could be obtained from the Dockyard, instead of being, as now, sold by auction. Cumberland Fort itself could be converted at a small cost into a temporary prison whilst the first portion of these reclamations is being carried on.

Letters have been received by the Admiralty from the Com.-in-Chief on the China Station, dated Aug. 30. The Vigilant, flagship, was at Pagoda anchorage on the above date, as were also the Sapphire and Champion. The Merlin was at Foochow on Aug. 30, and the Swift at Canton on the 19th. The Cockchafer was at Tamsui, Formosa, on the 15th, the Cleopatra at Shanghai on the 23rd, the Albatross in Yang-tse River, at Chinkian on the 14th. She was ordered to Hankow. The Curacoa was at Chefoo on the 18th, and left for Hong Kong, the Espoir being at Tientsin on the 16th. The Daring was at Shanghai on the 26th, and about to leave for Nangpo. The Firebrand, on passage from England, to remain in Straits Settlements division.

Joseph Noble, engine-room artificer, of the Hibernia; Alfred Le Chapman, commissioned boatman, and Alfred Richards, boatman, of the Coastguard, have been awarded medals for long service and good conduct.

Lieut. George Herbert Blake, R.N., has been placed on the Retired List, with permission to assume the rank and title of retired commander.

The under-mentioned officers, belonging to the Royal Marines, have, in accordance with orders issued from the Admiralty, embarked for a term of service afloat:—Royal Marine Artillery:—Capt. L. R. Connolly, from head-quarters to the Agamemnon. Royal Marine Light Infantry.—Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. G. H. Colwell, Portsmouth Division, from head-quarters to the Indus; Lieuts. J. R. H. Oldfield, Chatham Division, to the Excellent; C. H. Willis, Plymouth Division, from leave to the Excellent; T. M. Nelson, Portsmouth Division, from head-quarters to the Duke of Wellington; E. E. Chown, Portsmouth Division, from Hythe to the Valiant; W. E. Binne Pohrtsmouth Division, from Hythe to the Indus; V. J.y, Bucanan, Plymouth Division, from head-quarters to the Hector; J. R. Goddard, Chatham Division, from Woolwich to the Asia; C. M. Parsons, Portsmouth Division, from head-quarters to the Duncan; and W. H. Warrand, Chatham Division, from head-quarters to the Royal Adelaide. The following officers, having completed a period of service afloat, have disembarked and joined their respective divisions:—Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. Philips, C.B., Plymouth Division, from the Indus to head-quarters; Lieuts. F. C. Johnson, Chatham Division, from the Indus to head-quarters; H. P. Tate, Chatham Division, from the Asia to head-quarters; W. S. Harvest, Chatham Division, from the Northumberland to head-quarters; J. Bernard, Plymouth Division, from the Asia to head-quarters; C. Clarke, Portsmouth Division, from the Duke of Wellington, on leave; H. G. Cotterill, Chatham Division, from the Duncan to head-quarters; R. H. Montgomery, Portsmouth Division, from the Hector, on leave.

THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—As you have paid me the compliment to publish the letter I addressed to you lately on the subject of "Militia Reorganisation," I am encouraged to trespass once more on your patience by supplementing it with a few remarks touching the want of officers in the Force, and the reason for this serious deficiency. The subject is occupying a great deal of attention, and a number of letters, chiefly from Militia officers of many years' standing, bearing on this question, have recently appeared in the papers. But it seems to me that few trace the evil to the right cause; some attribute the falling-off to the expenses officers are put to during the annual trainings, some to insufficiency of pay, others to the failure and unpopularity of the Regimental Depôt system. The latter may have something to do with it, but not very much, for the real cause lies in the rottenness of the whole Militia system, and to the fact that, considered as a Military body, the present Militia is a sham service, while it holds out no inducement or encouragement to those who have its true interest at heart. The rank it confers, if assumed, is a reproach rather than an honour. The force is slighted and neglected by the authorities, and sneered at by the Regular Army; its officers are held to be "mere civilians" even by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief himself;* whilst the rank and file are maintained solely as a means of furnishing recruits to the Regular Army, which, without them, would be reduced to a far worse condition than it is now in.† The military authorities and military men generally never pretend that the Militia has, or ought to have, any other mission; and Ministers, although anxious to delude and mislead the country, hold the same view. Herein lies the whole secret of the decay of the Militia, and consequently of the want of officers—more particularly of officers of the right stamp. Few people care to identify themselves with a sham, therefore the country gentlemen, the most desirable class from which to officer this branch of the service, have ceased to enter it as they used to do; and it is becoming every day more difficult to find others to replace them. No good purpose is served by tinkering a useless machine; it has been tried over and over again and failed. A money inducement may attract some, to whom a few extra pounds a year is an object; the desire to acquire a military title may influence others, but they are not the kind of officers we want in the Militia. The service, to be of any value, must undergo entire reorganisation, be placed on a sound footing, and have its legitimate duties assigned to it;‡ when that is done, there will be no lack of men of the right sort, ready to accept commissions in it; and men, too, who would not be deterred by the little expenses it would entail upon them. If the Government are unwilling to make these wholesome changes in the constitution of the present voluntary Militia, they had better do away with it altogether, and spend the money in raising an additional 40,000 or 50,000 men to complete the regiments of the home army to a proper strength, and in taking over the Militia Reserve and placing them on the same footing as the Army Reserve. They are a fine body of men, well worth preserving. The country would then have a respectable army at hand, backed by the Volunteers (who ought to be encouraged in every possible way), ready to meet an invasion. If afterwards a crisis were to arise requiring England to put forth her whole strength, the Government of the day would be free to call out the Militia on the old constitutional lines. For the time is not far distant when conscription, in some form or another, will beyond dispute be the basis upon which the principle for the formation of a national army for home defence must rest.—I am, &c., Monitor.

THE STATE OF THE ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—That our Army is not nearly numerous enough for all the work it has to do is a fact admitted by all military men, and it ought to be clear to the more rigid economist of the public purse. Every year brings its own military trouble: costly expeditions to every part of the globe are, and must be, an annually recurring necessity, unless, like a snail, we retire within the shell of our island home, and abandon the empire won for us by our forefathers. It seems impossible to make the country realise our naval and military necessities, and hopeless to attempt to obtain any really valuable increase to the strength of either our Army or Navy. Nothing but some ghastly misfortune—which will assuredly come upon us if we do not look out—will open the eyes of our rulers and the country at large. If the country does not really care to have an army sufficient for its necessities, it might at least try to equalise the discrepancy between it and other armies, by providing it with the best possible weapons. I maintain that our soldiers, being so few, should be armed with weapons which should give them the shooting powers of two men. Every man of our Regular Army—and, indeed, I do not see why not of our Auxiliary Forces—should be armed with a repeating rifle. I read lately that all our Regular Forces were armed with the Henry-Martini, and that there were 280,000 of the Henry-Martini rifles in store. This means, I suppose, that the old Snider is the weapon of the Militia and Volunteers. A nice state of things! How far would 500,000 Henry-Martini rifles go, if we were involved in a European war. The military authorities say that the Treasury, or whatever intangible bogey it may be, will not give the money. Lord Hartington will say to the military authorities, "If you tell us that a repeating rifle is absolutely necessary, and which repeating rifle is the best, we'll find the money." The military authorities say, "We'll appoint a committee to find out the best weapon." Thereupon a valuable Military Committee is appointed to examine every repeating rifle that is known. They examine 20 good forms of repeating rifle. These are buried in sand, drowned in water, put in the fire, used as pokers, fired with an ounce of dynamite, and tried under the most impossible conditions. At last, after some three or four years, a report is sent in saying that none of the rifles tried are perfect; but that such a one is best. Then the gunmakers are set to work, and more trials take place. At last one is fixed upon. About 1,000 of these are made, and a few are sent to each regiment stationed in every quarter of the globe, to try. Such a process takes about 10 years. At last, some dozen years after, we read a proud paragraph in the papers that, at last, the whole Regular Army is armed with the perfect "Bogus" system repeating rifle, and that there are positively 250,000 more in store. But I maintain that any good repeating rifle issued at once would be better than this minute and lengthened search after impossible perfection. The ingenuity and zeal for improvement in our military authorities never seems to go beyond an improved button or a more perfect way of laying down a kit. What does it matter (I mean in comparison with efficiency) if a recruit occasionally blows off the head of his front-rank man because he does not properly understand the management of his weapon! Is the Army to be inefficiently armed because there are noodles in it? In these days of sentiment, if an occasional accident happens, there is a cry of "Take away such dangerous weapons from 'our boys.'" I must confess, however, that if it had not been for the Volunteers and the civilian element generally, and civilian inventors in particular, we should have been firing now with the old muzzle-loading rifle. I remember the unreasoning hatred of the old officers in my regiment to a change when the Snider was given us. "It was so dangerous"—"so wasteful"—"it was so nice"—and "it struck such terror into an enemy (Fenians, &c.) to hear the old ramrods ring"—"it was so pleasant to see the clean (or dirty!) bit of rag when you examined arms." I should insist, if I were Lord Hartington, on the Army being armed with a repeating rifle at once. If I could not give men, I would increase the firing-power of every man I had. I think we have one or two able young men about Lord Wolseley who could write a drill for it at a moment's notice; and I daresay Mr. Winchester (if there is such a person) could oblige us by sticking a bayonet on the end of it, if those are the great difficulties. And while I am liberating my mind on the subject of weapons, I might mention that in all probability, among other nasty businesses on hand, there is a particularly nasty business hatching at the Cape. We are not at all out of the Boer business, and the longer we let it grow the worse it will be. It will be no question of mowing down Zulus; it will be a question of "sharpshooting." I say, take time by the forelock, and increase the force at the Cape at once, and prepare immediately two strong battalions of "sharpshooters." I do not mean mere first-class shots in a musketry sense; I mean battalions of picked shots, capable of doing something more than hitting an unarmed haystack sitting. I know there are the Rifle Brigade and Rifle Corps, but they are no more battalions of sharpshooters than the rest of the Army. What we want for Cape work, and indeed for most of our little wars, are men more accustomed to shooting than to marching-past and battalion drill. I would pick these men and enlist them with the greatest care. I would arm them with the best double-barrelled breech-loading rifles, with sporting sights up to 500 yards. If a man with such a rifle can shoot accurately up to 500 yards, he could, by such judgment as the Boers use in their shooting, hit a group of men up to 1,000. I would quarter such a corps when in England at some such place as Hythe, where rifle shooting should be continuous and their main exercise, and would practice them in every way that is possible to make them quick and reliable shots. Why, I would let them take shots (long ones) at one another, so as to make them careful and understand the value of cover. If such a corps were quartered on the Cape frontier, and in the hands of a body of officers whose heart was in their work, it might be made the most perfect shooting body in the world. You have no conception of the advantages for teaching near most of the stations. Rocky hills, with scattered bushes, wooded kloofs, hundreds of ant-hills for marks, the dry and dusty soil showing, without any need for markers, where each shot strikes. What could be better? Only allow plenty of ammunition, and if they shot buck, so much the better. Many letters have appeared lately from young men who were unable to get commissions, but who are anxious to get into the ranks of a select corps. Now, here is a chance. Many of these young fellows are accustomed to shooting; utilise their services. One last suggestion I would throw out. Let the authorities try and get a reserve for active service from the Volunteers. We see that it is possible by the Post-office Corps. We could not expect a very large Volunteer Reserve; still, among 200,000 Volunteers there are many young men who would like to have the chance of active service. Although I have said some things jokingly, I would suggest seriously—(1), the issue of any good repeating rifle to the Regular Forces; (2), the formation of a corps of sharpshooters; (3), a Volunteer Reserve available for active service abroad.—I am, &c., Field Officer.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS. —The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

MILITARY EDUCATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Will you allow me to point out one or two inaccuracies in the article on "Military Education" contained in your number of Oct. 4? 1. So far from the authorities at the Public Schools saying—as you represent their doing—"at the age of 17 or 18, when boys begin to get tiresome, we like to get rid of them," the universal complaint is that, just when boys are beginning to be useful in the school, to take a lead in work or games, and to learn the responsibilities which such a position entails, the necessity for entering the Army at the earliest moment possible deprives us of their help. 2. Again, "they bother us (i.e., the school authorities), and require supervision and special treatment." But that is just the very reason why modern sides have been established, in order that boys may get the "special treatment" they undoubtedly require, along with the advantages which are generally considered to make a Public School desirable; and they do get it, as your readers would see at once if a list of entrances into Woolwich and Sandhurst direct from the Public Schools for the last ten years were to be issued. 3. "Our old Public Schools declined and still decline to prepare for these special examinations." May I be allowed to ask which of them? Rugby is at this moment the only one among them that has not got either a modern side or a large Army class, which is the same thing, and Rugby had the second place in the Woolwich list less than two years ago. 4. The allotting of 600 marks to colloquial knowledge in the new scheme is not the doing of the head masters, and is, as a matter of fact, contrary to their opinion, which was, in answer to a Circular from the War Office (laying stress on the teaching of conversation in modern languages, and asking whether it was practicable at school), that it was not practicable. At the same time, the schools will now, of course, do their best to enable their candidates for the Army to obtain marks for conversation, both by extra classes out of school hours, and by a careful choice of quarters for their boys abroad during the holidays. So far from the new scheme being a great mistake, as your article leads your readers to suppose, I believe that a candid and impartial examination of its working—made either at Clifton, Marlborough, Cheltenham, or here—would show that it will facilitate the entry into the Army direct from the public schools of many boys who, under the old system, had to go to crammers in the interval. The obvious result, if this be true, will be the saving of much expense to parents, and, as we are bound to hope, an education which will at least aim at something above the "ill-digested knowledge which," in the words of your article, "private tutors and crammers force into their pupils."—I am, &c., H. A. B.

Letters from Vice-Admiral Sir John E. Commerell, Commander-in-Chief on the North America and West Indies station, dated Sept. 26, have been received by the Admiralty, from Halifax. The Northampton was at Halifax, and will remain until the beginning of November, when she will proceed to Bermuda. The Garnet was on passage from Quebec to Halifax. The Tenedos was at Newfoundland on the 10th ult., she being the senior ship on fisheries. The Dido, senior ship on the Barbadoes Division, was at Barbadoes on Aug. 24. The Griffon, on fisheries service, was at Newfoundland on the 15th ult.; on being relieved by the Lily, she will return home. The Fantôme left Halifax for Bermuda on the 18th ult., and the Mallard was on fisheries service at Newfoundland on Aug. 30.

The Poonah, chartered transport, embarked on Tuesday morning, at Portsmouth, drafts of Marines and troops for Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, and Alexandria. Although the embarkation was completed shortly after 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, the transport did not leave until Wednesday morning, the delay being partly attributable to the issuing of an order that, in order to prevent being placed in quarantine at Malta, it was necessary that every passenger for that place should make a statutory declaration that he had not visited any infected port or town. The Marine contingent supplied from Forton for service in Egypt consisted of Capt. Pyne, Lieuts. Harris and Hubbard, eight non-commissioned officers, and 88 rank and file. After being paraded and addressed by Col. Meade in the barrack square, they were played by the Norfolk Regt. to the Clarence Victualling Yard, whence they were conveyed on board. The Poonah also takes out a draft of 124 men from the 2nd Durham L.I. for Gibraltar, 39 men Royal Artillery, 112 men 1st Shropshire Regt., and 52 men 2nd Royal Sussex for Malta; the families belonging to the 3rd Batn. King's Rifles for Cyprus, and a draft of the 1st Yorkshire Regt. for Alexandria. At Queenstown the Poonah embarked eight officers and 305 men of various corps.

A court of inquiry was recently held on board the Ganges at Falmouth, with the object of discovering the cause of certain deficiencies of provisions and clothing. A short time since one of the stewards of that ship-was sent to the Naval Hospital at Stonehouse suffering from the effects of excessive drinking, and an examination of his accounts and stores during his absence from the Ganges led to a discovery which has resulted in his being placed under close arrest. The court of inquiry has made an exhaustive report, and it is understood that the Admiralty will order a court-martial to be held, and that more than one person is likely to be implicated.

The report of Capt. Chetwynd, R.N., chief inspector of lifeboats to the National Lifeboat Institution, as to the effect of "Oil on Troubled Waters," is a complete and interesting statement. The result of Capt. Chetwynd's experiment is, that under certain conditions, oil of any kind is efficacious in moderating the influence of a rough sea, especially such as would endanger the safety of small open boats. For the boats of the Institution he considers there would be no advantage in the use of oil, as they could not be kept long enough within its influence, having a particular destination. He believes that oil is more beneficial in the open sea than off shore, and he strongly recommends vessels to carry oil, with perforated canvas bags for its distribution.

* We cannot agree with our correspondent, and we doubt if the Militia officers who have "lain" with Line officers will agree with him. There are "snobs" in all branches, unfortunately. The Duke of Cambridge, we venture to say, never expressed the opinion attributed to him.—Ed. A. & N. G.

THE MAXIM GUN.

We are justified in stating that the Maxim machine-gun, of which we made mention last week, will be tried presently by the War Office, when certain improvements have been effected. The Surveyor-General, the Inspector-General of Fortifications, and the Director of Artillery have inspected Mr. Maxim's gun, and examined the mechanism and results, which have proved generally satisfactory. Mr. Maxim was present during the Inchkeith experiments, and was enabled to see the various machine-guns in action against the forts. Many accounts of his guns have appeared in the morning papers, among which we select the following from the Morning Post:—

"Mr. Maxim's gun has a barrel of the ordinary service regulation calibre of 0·450 in., and weighs with its tripod stand 126 lb. It stands about 3 ft. high, and is 4 ft. 9 in. long from the muzzle to the rear of the firing mechanism. The gun may be elevated or depressed, and set at any angle by adjusting screws, and traversed radially over any desired horizontal range. It may also be detached instantaneously from the screws, so as to be moved freely in every direction by hand. When the gun is once adjusted for a certain speed it maintains the fire at that rate independently of human agency until all the cartridges have been discharged. Should the man working the gun be killed, the gun will still continue firing as long as any cartridges remain to be fired. But as both the gunner and the cartridges are placed below the level of the gun, as described above, they are exposed to fire only to a minimum degree. The only hitch to the continuity of the firing can be caused solely by a faulty cartridge, and in this respect, as also with regard to the rapidity of firing, the Maxim gun is distinguished from other machine-guns. In the ordinary machine-gun, very great speed cannot be obtained with a single barrel, because a certain per-centage of the cartridges do not explode at the moment they are struck by the hammer. Consequently, if one of the ordinary machine-guns is worked too rapidly, some of the cartridges will be drawn from the barrel before they explode. Hence very great rapidity of firing is excluded—in fact, the action must be sufficiently slow to meet the requirements of the slowest cartridge of the series. And it is just at this point that the great value of Mr. Maxim's invention comes in. With his automatic gun, a cartridge cannot be withdrawn from the barrel until after it has been exploded—that is to say, only the empty shell can be removed. The gun fires the quickly-exploding cartridges rapidly, and slow ones slowly, if such present themselves. Thus should a cartridge hang fire even for five minutes it would not be ejected from the barrel until it had exploded, the gun, in fact, waiting for it. This action constitutes the secret of attaining great rapidity of firing—as high as 600 rounds per minute—with a single barrel. As in practice with continuous firing the barrel would become heated, it is surrounded with a water-jacket to prevent over-heating. Mr. Maxim has also other systems of feeding his gun, but the one described appears the most practicable. His gun may be said to have emerged from the experimental stage, and it only requires a thorough testing of its capacity under conditions resembling actual warfare to establish it as the most formidable weapon of modern times. As such, it ought to attract the attention of our War Office. As it delivers a perfect hail of bullets—being, in fact, a most terrible and irresistible slayer of men—besides being automatic in its action, and thus, as has been shown, requiring less exposure on the part of the man serving it, it probably will in time supersede all other machine-guns."

According to L'Annuaire de l'Armée Française for 1884, the number of officers on the Active List in the French Army is slightly less than in 1883, but there has been an increase of no fewer than 1,797 in the number of infantry officers of the reserve. On April 1, 1883, there were 2,670 sub-lieutenants of the reserve; at the same date this year there were 4,467, besides 22 lieutenants, 84 captains, and five lieutenant-colonels. The officers on the Active List included in the infantry 165 colonels, 177 lieutenant-colonels, 964 majors or chefs-de-bataillon, 4,214 captains, 3,404 lieutenants, 2,736 sub-lieutenants,. The list of cavalry officers is proportionately numerous; some regiments, however, are short of sub-lieutenants. The artillery list now includes 85 colonels, 79 lieutenant-colonels, 331 majors and chefs-d'escadron, 769 captains of first class, 649 of second class, 1,029 lieutenants, 306 sub-lieutenants. The reserve artillery reckon 14 colonels, three lieutenant-colonels, 26 chefs-d'escadron, 25 captains, 54 lieutenants, and 1,554 sub-lieutenants. Sixteen battalions of fortress artillery have been called into existence during the last year. With respect to the distribution of the army, a larger proportion of its effective strength is, it is stated, quartered in the districts bordering on the German frontier than elsewhere.

We are requested to inform officers lately serving on the China station that the China Squadron Silver Challenge Cup is on view at Messrs. E. and E. Emanuel's, 3 The Hard, Portsea (by whom it was designed and made). This cup is to be competed for annually for eight years, and is to be held by the ship whose small-arms men make the highest score at the annual rifle meeting, and eventually to go to the Royal Naval College, Greenwich. The cup ,which is oval in form, is of matted silver, and round the body of it are eight bright raised silver bosses, encircled by a rope coil, and the name of the ship to which the winning team belong, with the date of the competition, will be inscribed on one of these medallions. The cup is supported by a group of dolphins, and stands on an ebony base, on which is a shield bearing the designation of the cup.

An Admiralty Circular has been issued directing that all officers, clerks, and others belonging to her Majesty's naval establishments, are to retire on attaining the age of 60 years, provided they have completed 40 years' service for pension.

Major-Gen. Dillon will leave England for India on the 22nd inst.

London Amusements.

Provincial excursionists are now filling our theatres, and the dramatic season has fairly commenced. The CRITERION has been reopened with Mr. Albery's adaptation of "Tête de Linotte," so successfully produced here four months since under the title of "Featherbrain," and the farcical comedy, acted with unflagging vivacity, is once more diverting laughter-loving audiences. Mr. Maltby is now the substitute for Mr. Mackintosh as the representative of Mr. Coney, but in other respects the cast is unchanged.

The NOVELTY THEATRE has commenced a new season with a two-act comic opera, called "Polly," written by Mr. James Mortimer, and composed by Mr. Edward Solomon, whose music falls agreeably, if familiarly, on the ear. The plot is a whimsical perversion of the well-known "Daughter of the Regiment." The heroine, impersonated by Miss Lilian Russell, is supposed to be the orphan child of a British Grenadier, adopted by a regiment of Hussars, who, in a fantastic parade dress, perform some remarkable evolutions in the court-yard of the Horse Guards, of which an easily-recognised view is given. The mystery of Polly's parentage is cleared up, a suitable husband is found for her, and the slight story is told. The musical extravaganza, obviously framed on the Gilbert and Sullivan model, has been effectively placed on the stage.

The last representation of "Claudian" took place at the PRINCESS'S THEATRE on Friday, and next Thursday will be brought out an elaborate revival of "Hamlet." In the meantime, the theatre will be closed for night rehearsals.

"Romeo and Juliet" at the LYCEUM will be performed next week, if the extensive preparations being made are sufficiently completed. The cast will include Miss Mary Anderson as Juliet, Mrs. Stirling as the Nurse, Mrs. Calvert as Lady Capulet; Mr. Terriss as Romeo, Mr. Herbert Standing as Mercutio, and Mr. J. Anderson as Tybalt.

On Monday next Mr. Herman Merivale's burlesque, "Called There and Back," will be produced at the GAIETY, supported by Miss E. Farren, Miss Gilchrist, and Messrs. Elton, Royce, and Squire.

The comic opera of "Dick" has been this week transferred to the EMPIRE THEATRE, with Miss Fanny Leslie as Whittington, and a cast but slightly differing from the one associated with the recent performance of the piece at the Gaiety.

A change of programme will take place this evening (Saturday), at the SAVOY THEATRE, the comic opera of "The Sorcerer," originally brought out at the Opera Comique in 1877, being reproduced with "Trial by Jury" as the afterpiece.

Under Mr. Mayer's direction, a winter season of French plays will be commenced next week at the ROYALTY.

Mr. Clarke will open the AVENUE THEATRE early in November with a new three-act comedy by Mr. Burnand.

On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at ST. GEORGE'S HALL was recommenced for the season, the only novelty being a very lively musical sketch by Mr. Corney Grain, called "The Troubles of a Tourist," illustrating some of the discomforts of travelling both abroad and at home, but "Cherry Tree Farm" was as improbable and as pleasant as ever, and the audience were good-humoured enough to put up with "A Terrible Fright" as of yore.

The ALHAMBRA (Leicester Square) is announced to be re-opened on Saturday next as a "Theatre of Varieties." The new form of entertainment will consist principally of operatic and other selections by the orchestra (to be conducted by Mons. G. Jacobi), grand ballets on the same magnificent scale as heretofore, and a miscellaneous performance, introducing novelties and varieties from the chief places of amusement on the Continent and elsewhere. The prices of admission will be upon a reduced and popular scale. The directors have appointed Mr. Charles Morton as acting manager.

The Duke of Cambridge will hold his annual inspection of the troops in Portsmouth garrison on Monday and Tuesday next.

THE St. James's Gazette, in a forcible article, sought to create a kind of counterblast to the effect produced by the "Truth About the Navy," which appeared in its evening contemporary and rival on the other side of the political stream. By some such manipulation probably as that which enabled the Standard to obtain possession of a Redistribution Scheme, our Conservative contemporary got hold of an important State paper, and we have to be grateful, in common with the country, for the forbearance which has been exhibited in turning the information contained in the document to use. The St. James's Gazette sounds a note of alarm which is intended altogether for the domestic interior. If the truth were divulged, as it is set forth in the paper to which our contemporary has had access, it might animate to a dangerous activity those for whose benefit it is not intended, and might spur a willing horse in the direction of the Himalayas. Whether it was by favour or a happy accident, we know not, but the possession which has been achieved of the important memorandum from which our contemporary extracted one sentence textually has not been turned so far to any mischievous end. Nevertheless, a secret which is everybody's property in Government offices may pass the Straits of Dover, and get abroad to places never intended for its reception. It is most important that those who have the direction of public opinion in this country and in India, and above all those who are conversant with affairs and who direct the course of foreign policy, should not only be acquainted with the "strategical study" to which we refer, but that they should master profoundly all its contents, for a more convincing, careful, almost mathematical demonstration of the existence of a great danger and of its proper antidote, never was placed by the zeal and intelligence of a public officer and department in the hands of a Ministry and a Government. The writer may well say:—"I challenge any one to disprove either my premisses or conclusions. I hold that certain troops can arrive at certain places in certain stated times, and I challenge anybody to prove that they cannot. But, remember, I ask for proof. I do not want vague statements about impassable rivers, impracticable deserts, stupendous mountains, want of food, bad water, enormous distances, heat, invincible Sepoys, and enthusiastically loyal Indians. If any one does not agree with me, let him show why and wherefore. If he can show me that no army ever has or ever can for some reason I know not of, accomplish one or more or the whole of the marches I have given, I will be glad to consider whether it is impracticable, or whether the point cannot be turned in some way. But if he only tells me the usual impossibilities, that Russia is too good to covet anything English, and least of all India; that she is bankrupt, and cannot feed her Army; that she will soon break up into a dozen States; that an invasion of India is beyond the imagination of a nineteenth-century Commander or the power of a nineteenth-century Army; or that it is too remote for us even to begin to think about it, I shall continue to raise my voice to point out what I believe to be a very formidable and near-approaching danger." These are words which may well be addressed to such an accomplished statesman and administrator as Lord Dufferin, who, on the eve of his departure on the mission in which all wish him "God-speed!" has raised up his voice to express his entire confidence in the good intentions and pacific declarations of the able Minister to whose hands is entrusted the foreign policy of Russia in Europe and Asia.

A LONG-PENDING and much-needed reform has been decided upon by the Prime Meridian Conference, which has been sitting at Washington since the commencement of the month. The necessity for a fixed and unvarying standard has been generally admitted in the interests of geography, navigation, and science, and the settlement of this question is to be noted with satisfaction. Twenty-one nations voted for the Greenwich line, the representative of the little Republic of San Domingo alone offering formal opposition, whilst the delegates of France and Brazil abstained from voting. At one time it was anticipated that the Conference would have altogether failed, in consequence of the opposition of the French representatives, who declared that it was impossible to make such a concession to England as to indicate longitude on French charts as reckoned from the meridian of Greenwich. Wise counsels and good-sense, however, prevailed, and the delegates of France contented themselves with simple abstention, which is, under the circumstances, as much as could be expected. The necessity for recasting the system, which has been practically adopted by almost the whole world of navigation, has thus been obviated, and although the Conference was not authorised to bind the Governments represented at Washington, it is probable that the decision will ultimately be ratified generally. The settlement of this question was not so easy as may be imagined, considering the almost unanimous conclusion arrived at, for national susceptibilities and international rivalries had to be overcome in order to bring about the desired agreement. The Conference declared that it would be a great advantage if all charts, whether prepared in England, France, Germany, or America, should be available for the seamen of any nation; but the French delegates objected to the Congress attempting to settle a particular prime meridian line. Utterly failing in this objection, they next proposed a "neutral meridian," and suggested that the common meridian should run through Behring's Straits, or through one of the islands of the Azores. This proposal, which would have rendered necessary the rearrangement of existing maps and other important alterations, was also rejected; and it was proposed by the Canadian representative that the 180th degree of longitude east of Greenwich should be selected. Other places, including Jerusalem, having been suggested, the Conference came to the almost inevitable conclusion that, if a Prime Meridian which had already been used for the purposes of calculation was to be selected, then the reasons for selecting Greenwich were insuperable and paramount. Sentimental differences at length gave way to practical expediency, and while it is undoubtedly agreeable to record the honour paid to England of selecting the Greenwich line, there is not the slightest reason for French susceptibilities to be offended. The adoption of the Greenwich Prime Meridian will answer "the world's convenience" better than any other, and the weighty statement of Sir Frederick Evans tended to settle the whole argument when he said that the shipping tonnage controlled by the Greenwich standard was 14,000,000, while that controlled by the Paris Prime Meridian was only 1,735,000. Originally, other places besides Greenwich might reasonably have been selected, but taking into consideration the enormous English shipping interest, and the common use of English-made charts, it was almost a necessity that Greenwich should be selected. San Domingo can adopt a meridian of its own, but the penalty attached to such a course will be that which is inseparable from speaking in a language which must be translated to be understood. The important result of the universal adoption of the Meridian passing through the centre of the transit instrument in Greenwich Observatory must be that all charts will, in future, be drawn upon the basis of calculating the degrees of longitude from that meridian. The Prime Meridian agreed upon being one that is already in use in most maps, charts, and books of geography will be adopted without difficulty, and the least possible inconvenience will result to nations from the almost unanimous agreement. The inconvenience, unnecessary risks, and the diversity between the charts of different countries, which led to great confusion, will no longer be a constant source of anxiety and trouble. The objectionable system which led to the Conference at Washington rendered necessary, difficult, and perilous calculations, as navigators were frequently compelled to avail themselves of charts with which they were unfamiliar, and hence considerable risk had to be run, in consequence of the chaotic state of affairs. The decision of the learned gentlemen who have assembled in the Federal Capital of the United States to dispassionately deliberate on questions of great international consequence, will tend to remove all past difficulties, anomalies, and vexatious impediments, and also to relieve responsible navigators from much unnecessary anxiety. It will in future be unnecessary for a navigator "to determine the position of his ship east or west of a particular meridian, but simply its position in east or west longitude. It will not be necessary that his chronometer should indicate Greenwich mean time; it will be sufficient if he marks the difference between the time of his chronometer and that of Greenwich, and adds or subtracts according to known differences between the two." It may be assumed, however, than when all the charts are marked with the Greenwich meridian, all chronometers will indicate Greenwich time. The International Prime Meridian Conference has accomplished the first and most important work for which it was convened, and the other suggested reforms will be watched with interest. The question whether longitude shall be counted in two directions from Greenwich—180 degrees east being plus, and west minus—or westward continuously up to 360 degrees all round the world, has been fully discussed, and a resolution agreed to, proposing the adoption of a universal day for purposes for which it may be found convenient. The Conference has yet to discuss an additional resolution that the "universal day" shall be the mean solar day, to begin for all the world at the moment of the mean midnight of the initial meridian, coinciding with the beginning of the "civil day," and that "the date of that meridian be counted from zero up to twenty-four hours." A revolution in our clocks and watches, of counting the hours from one to twenty-four, and of having one universal time throughout the whole world, will probably result from the Washington Conference.

A RASH attempt by some interested official to mislead the public, through the Times, as to the purport of the then unpublished evidence taken by the Committee on the Supply and Transport Arrangements of the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, brought out a crushing rejoinder in the shape of a pamphlet by Dr. Cameron, M.P. The whole evidence is now printed, and anyone who chooses to wade through the 731 pages of the Blue-book, with the supporting appendices, can arrive at an independent opinion. For ourselves, we must confess that it did not take us long to come to the decision, which was confirmed by every page, that Dr. Cameron has shown to the Committee that the present system of providing for the supplies and transport of the Army is inherently faulty. Lord Edward Cavendish put the questions (Nos. 9,664 to 9,668) to Mr. Watt, who had been the Commissary-General at Head-quarters during the preparation for a continuance of the campaign :—"Would you not say, if it [the system] did not break down, that that proved that the system was not a failure?" Reply: "No, I could not say that."—"But you would not go the length of saying that the results obtained did not justify the steps that were taken, would you?" Reply: "I say that in spite of the system the results were successful, and because the system was not thoroughly carried out. For instance, I, as Commissary-General, was nominally under the Adjutant-General, but I acted almost as a subordinate of Mr. Lawson (the Assistant-Director of Supplies), for the good of the Service."—"It seems rather a strong thing to say that if there were not a failure in the actual working of the system, it broke down?" Reply: "The system failed, and whatever the success it was in spite of the system." These replies were given, be it remembered, by an officer who had been (see 9,407) 44 years in the Commissariat; by the Commissary-General, who for five years had been "trying to work the system," which he here so strongly denounces, by the officer who (see reply 9,741) owed his position as Commissary-General to his consent to try that system, but who now on his retirement from the Service, writes (see page 718, Appendix 30) :—"The peculiar combination of circumstances was, therefore, sufficiently favourable that the system (though theoretically and practically vicious) did not break down until after the transfer of the Commissariat to the Military Department, where, during the absence of Mr. Haliburton on account of illness, the Egyptian War brought out more strongly than before that the separation of the command of personnel from the administration of the supplies was, and is, fatal to the efficiency of the Commissariat of the Army whenever any campaign on a larger scale be undertaken." The only fault we find with these replies of Mr. Watt, is that he accepts the assumption that there is a system, whereas the evidence now before us proves an utter absence of system. It may be asserted that the very essence of the Surveyor-General's Department, its very raison d'être, is the concentration, in one hand, of the responsibility for the Departments of the Army. This is true, but here the evidence of witnesses, and, perhaps even more strongly still, the questions put by the Surveyor-General himself, show that responsibility has been so divided between the Surveyor-General's Department and the Military Department, that all attempt to trace failure to its source is baffled in the mazes of routine. The constitution and management of the House of Commons' Committee probably tended to increase the difficulty of ascertaining what the Supply and Transport system is or pretends to be. The inquiry itself was aimed at the administration; it was not the Commissariat officers in the field, but the Surveyor-General's Department which failed in the bureau. The public has only now learnt through this inquiry that there are two distinct agents in the supply and movement of an army, the Civil Department in the War Office under the Surveyor-General, controlled and managed by the Director of Supplies, and the Military Department in the Field, under the General Officers, dependent entirely upon the knowledge and forethought of the Director at home, from whom they obtain their supplies, their animals, and the requisites for the campaign. It is, of course, possible for the Commissariat in the field to break down through their old fault or their own weakness, but the lesson taught to this Committee is that "Commissariat failure" probably means "War Office mismanagement," against which the Department, which the public knows as the Commissariat, can make no provision. By the Order of Council (609 and 610, Appendix 19) which created the Surveyor-General, that official was made absolutly responsible to Parliament for the very arrangements which Dr. Cameron assured the House had broken down. Yet we find that for the four days during which Commissary-General Morris was examined, the Surveyor-General was in the Chair! When a correspondent asked Truth whether the Surveyor-General should be addressed as "the Chairman at the Bar" or "the Prisoner in the Chair," it is not surprising that Truth replied, "We also are puzzled." Of the tone of the Chairman's cross-examination, we leave those who have the Blue-book to judge; and the fact that the Surveyor-General, on the very point upon which the Committee divided, recorded his vote, with only one supporter, against the acceptance of the evidence of Commissary-General Watt, is strong proof of the unwillingness of the War Department to let the inquiry take its course. The Committee decided to divide the investigation into two parts, the first relating to the instances of failure, the second into the organisation under which defects arose; but though such a division was undoubtedly wise, as tending to test the results before inquiring into the cause, it was practically impossible to exclude from the first inquiry such evidence as to facts as could not be separated from evidence of failure of system. And the admission of this evidence in the first part of the inquiry was the more necessary, as it afforded a direct contradiction to the statements made on the part of the Surveyor-General's Department, and notably those of the Director of Supplies, which, without dealing with the first part of the inquiry, most ingeniously took leave to traverse the second issue. That in spite of the difficulty under which Dr. Cameron laboured of having but a restricted access to the records in the War Office, he was able to prove so much, leaves a strong presumption that more is behind; but he may rest assured that there is sufficient evidence now in the hands of the House to support him in his praiseworthy efforts. We propose on a future occasion to notice some of the proofs which show the weakness of the organisation upon which the success of a campaign may depend.

IN our issue of last week we published a letter from a correspondent signing himself "H. A. B.," dated Wellington College, containing some criticism upon our leading article of the 4th inst. We were glad of having the opportunity afforded to us of laying before our readers the views of the authorities of one of our leading Public Schools on one of the most important topics of the day in connection with the Army; but we confess to a feeling of disappointment in regard to our correspondent's letter. That letter failed to throw any new light upon the subject under discussion, and left our main objections to the proposed new regulations—we can as yet regard them as nothing but proposals—unanswered. In the minor points on which "H. A. B." joins issue with us, he—inadvertently, no doubt—confirms our assertions and strengthens our armour. We are ready to admit that within the last ten years some modern Public Schools, and even the elder ones, have made efforts to meet the requirements of the public services, in response to great pressure from without. But what has been the net result of their exertions? "H. A. B." invokes statistics, and relies upon them for proving the triumph of the Public Schools over the crammers. We are willing that stern facts and figures should be the arbiters, and quote the following from the book "How we Educate our Officers"*:—

Thus, of 198 Sandhurst cadets, 150, or 75 per cent., had been aided by crammers to pass their entrance examination; and of 180 Woolwich cadets (including 36 coming from private—not public—schools), 56, or 37 per cent., had been aided in the same way. We have quoted the latest statistics obtainable, as likely to be more favourable to the schools than the preceding period, viz., that prior to the establishment of "modern sides." Yet what do these figures prove? They prove that, notwithstanding their vast resources, their high fees, and the many other advantages they possess, the Public Schools have been easily distanced by that bête noire, the crammer, and by less pretentious institutions of more recent date. For instance, Wellington College passed in 1883, as we have seen, 13 into Sandhurst, of whom nine had previously to pass through the crammer's hands. Of 21 Woolwich candidates, five were similarly aided. The Oxford Military College passed eight candidates into Sandhurst and five into Woolwich during the same period, one having in each case been aided by the crammer. The Head Master of Wellington College is reported to have stated at the last College Speech-day that "since the founding of the institution, 400 officers had passed into the Army from it." This is well, so far as it goes. Wellington College was founded in 1853, or more than 30 years ago, and at the lowest computation, some 10,000 boys must have passed through it. The Oxford University College was founded in 1876, and according to statistics recently furnished to us, 450 pupils have been entered on its books since its foundation. Of these, 130 are still at the College, and 150 are serving her Majesty and their country as officers. Eton College, with 1,000 boys, passed, during the said period of 1883, 19 candidates into Sandhurst, or the Line, and six into Woolwich. Of these, 16 and four respectively were aided by crammers. So far for statistics. As regards getting rid of boys when reaching a troublesome age, the author of "How we Educate our Officers" says :—

> "The evidence of the Head Master of Uppingham School, before a Royal Commission, is characteristic of the feelings by which many of these autocrats are animated :—'Our main market is the University. The Civil Service and other Government examinations have thrown the schools very considerably out of running of late years, and the boys have to go to crammers.'—'You do not prepare boys for these examinations specially?'—'No; I should not break through my school curriculum to send a boy to any examination in the world. I should not alter my school curriculum to meet the demand of any particular examination: we prepare mainly for the University. A boy could go to Woolwich from my upper sixth form straight off; but as it is, most of them leave earlier.' Ex uno disce omnes."

We think crammers will support us in saying that a large per-centage of their pupils are those superannuated at Public Schools. Boys are superannuated ostensibly because they fail to reach a certain standard in the dead languages; but the knowing ones are perfectly well aware that in numerous instances this is merely a clever device for getting rid of the more troublesome pupils. But, as already said, the gravest objections raised by us against the proposed new Warrant are left unanswered by our correspondent,—viz., the virtual extinction of English history and literature, and sciences, as a study for Army candidates. In the words of the author of "How we Educate our Officers,"—"Henceforth an Englishman may be ignorant of the very names of Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, and Macaulay, or ignore the most common events in the history of his own country, and yet be thought a fit and proper person to serve her Majesty as an officer." He must know the language of Schiller and Goethe or Molière. A parrot-like knowledge of these will carry him further at the examination than the most profound knowledge of his own mother-tongue, history, and an extensive knowledge of science. As for the study of science, it would be an insult to the common-sense and understanding of our readers were we to enter here upon the advantages of a scientific training to an officer. Yet even "H. A. B." will acknowledge, if he has any practical acquaintance with preparing candidates for the Army, that since the publication of the latest Warrant, nine candidates out of ten have given up English and science as subjects that "do not pay." Our correspondent says:—"So far from the new scheme being a great mistake, as your article leads your readers to suppose, I believe that a candid and impartial examination of its working—made either at Clifton, Marlborough, Cheltenham, or here—would show that it will facilitate the entry into the Army direct from the Public Schools of many boys who, under the old system, had to go to crammers in the interval." Now, here is the rub! These words go to the root of the matter; they confirm our contentions, namely, that the new Warrant was not framed with a view to satisfy modern requirements, and keep our public servants abreast, if not ahead, of those of other nations, but to suit the conveniences and prejudices of the pedagogue, and to defeat their pet aversion, the crammer. Ergo, although common-sense and utility may combine in pointing out how all but indispensable a knowledge of science and freehand drawing is to an officer, the utter absurdity of neglecting the study of our history and mother-tongue, yet so long as our pedagogues are permitted to indulge with impunity in their deeply-rooted prejudice against modern subjects, and can induce a paternal Government to legislate for their special behoof, these pleas are urged in vain. The new Warrant means nothing more nor less than the reintroduction of the exploded principle of protection and bounty. If the authorities of our Public Schools are really so desirous as they profess to be to abate cramming and its concomitant evils, there is an honest, straightforward way open to them for carrying their intentions into effect,—namely, to enter into a fair and open competition with the crammer, and beat him, if they can, at his own game, and with his own weapons. The raison d'être of the crammer is not the competitive examinations and the subjects required for them, but the apathy of our Public Schools. What we desire, then, is that those important subjects named above—viz., English history and literature, and science—whether they be crammers' subjects or not, should, at least, be placed on a footing of equality with Latin, Greek, German, and French, and that more encouragement be given to freehand drawing. In these reasonable and rational demands we feel confident of being supported by the general public, who owe a debt of gratitude to the author of "How we Educate our Officers" for the very able manner in which he has brought before them the defects and real purport of the new Warrant, and the many shortcomings of our educational system for the Army.

BOTH in form and substance, "The Truth about the Navy" was a hit. "Every one," that is, some few people in the Pall Mall Gazette, have a shrewd guess that the writer of the paper is a gentleman who knows a good deal about Naval architecture and shipbuilding, if his business has not been very much on the waters; but whoever he is, the indictment drawn by him is a very strong one, and it placed at the bar of public opinion not so much any one Government as several Governments, and the whole of the system on which under these Governments the Navy has been ruled, and planned, and armed. The Admiralty of to-day has, it is observed, made no reply to the article. How or why should it? Lord Northbrook is away, and if he were here he would reserve any reply he might have to make to "the truth" till he was asked in his place in Parliament. Now, if it be granted that the condition of the Navy positively and relatively is as bad as it is said to be, there ought to be immediate action to make the Navy what it ought to be; and it is for the experts to determine by what means the end should be accomplished. First, there must be a large grant of money, and that grant will depend on the conviction of Parliament that there is an immediate necessity for the increase of the Fleet and of all the accessories of Naval war. The convictions of Parliament will depend on the official declarations of responsible Ministers, and not on the assertions of anonymous journalism. There is, however, danger of a reaction, and even of a sudden rebound into overweening confidence, in consequence of some official assurances and contradictions, or the exposure of a mistake or two in the indictment; but on the whole, there will be, we hope and believe, a sufficient weight of public opinion to compel the Government, we trust not unwillingly, to increase the Naval resources of the Empire, and to do what is necessary to enable us to maintain the Empire itself, the calls on which are becoming more serious and sustained every day. And if that result be achieved, the Government and the service, not to speak of the country at large, ought to feel grateful to the hand which held the pen that has at once penned their condemnation in the past and extorted their apology in a promise of amendment for the future. The uneasiness which exists as to possible complications should be a lever in the hands of capable statesmen to open the doors of the Treasury, the natural enemy of the services which keep it filled and going. But given the money, there is the question,—how is it to be used? And that is one not easily answered, so many and various are the proposals for spending it. We are told our Naval supremacy is gone, and that it must be restored. We say "Amen" to the conclusions from the depths of our hearts. But the problems presented by the execution of the work are not easily solved. It is assumed that we have sailors enough and stokers enough, and that what we want is ships and guns. For the ships we must rely on dockyards and private builders. The dockyards must rely on the private firms for armour-plates, just as Woolwich must rely on Whitworth for steel for their guns. The Government must rely on Elswick for the big guns and carriages which Woolwich does not produce; and having built armoured ships and armed and manned them, there comes next the provision of torpedo-boats to act with the fleets, and for the defence of our ports, and the erection of forts to guard the ports where these torpedoes and torpedo systems are centred, and the creation of fast cruisers for escort of our own and for destruction of the enemy's commerce on the seas. It is to be a factor in this calculation of ways and means that there is danger—imminent danger—of attack, either because there are enemies who may at any moment become active, or because we are engaged in designs which will prabably provoke resistance; but it may safely be assumed as a fixed fact that many pretensions and rights we make and claim would be resisted and violated, if it were thought that we had not adequate Naval power to insist on their recognition. That may be a matter for argument. There can be no possible pretext advanced for the reduction of our Fleet to impuissance. There can be no toleration for a moment of any condition of inefficiency which leaves this Empire and its dependencies at the mercy of any probable armed coalition at sea.

THE annual inspection of the dockyards and Naval establishments by the Lords of the Admiralty has been rendered of especial interest this year by alarming statements respecting the weakness of our first line of defence. The periodical visits of the Admiralty to the several ports of the United Kingdom have been generally regarded as formal inspections of works in progress, made in obedience to custom. The usual routine was carefully observed, and the programme having been carried out with exactitude, the Lords of the Admiralty, having performed an agreeable duty, involving a pleasant voyage in the Admiralty yacht and a certain number of festive ceremonies, returned to Whitehall. Events have arisen which have given the present Admiralty inspection an unusual degree of importance, and some results are justly anticipated. The absence of Lord Northbrook is regretted at a time when the presence of the First Lord of the Admiralty is particularly desirable; but it was not deemed expedient to postpone the inspection until the return of the First Lord from the East, and the officers who are responsible to him will be able to acquaint him with results in time for the commencement of business in Parliament. The visit of the Admiralty to the Naval stations will doubtless prove of use; but it is unreasonable to anticipate that the inspection will have the effect of almost immediately solving some very difficult problems in connection with the British Navy. It has been contended that, "for the first time in the history of this generation, the Lords of the Admiralty have an opportunity of placing the Navy in an adequate state of efficiency." This assertion would throw an enormous amount of responsibility on the Admiralty, if it did altogether ignore the fact that they have not the power to effect the revolution. Their Lordships will have the advantage of ascertaining the views of able officers and eminent men during their tour; but it remains with the Government, and not with the Admiralty, as a department of the State, to embrace the alleged opportunity, bringing with it "great responsibilities." Boards of Admiralty have ever had to contend against financial difficulties, and the amount annually voted has been comparatively so small in relation to our exigencies, that its disposal to the best possible advantage has proved a source of constant anxiety. To maintain the Fleet in a thorough state of efficiency and to build new ships of war with the sum voted has not been possible. The Navy Estimates have been kept at the figure at which they stood fifteen years ago, although our national wealth has increased enormously, and despite the additional outlay of at least 40 per cent. by rival powers on their nava establishments. If the Lords of the Admiralty are to "embrace a great opportunity," the sinews of war must be provided ungrudgingly. Within a few days Parliament will assemble, and it remains to be seen whether the nation "is resolved that, cost what it may, its irresistible superiority at sea shall be restored." Naval matters will assuredly command the attention of the Government, and the annual inspection by the Admiralty is opportune. The Lords of the Admiralty need not be informed by "their ablest officers at the various ports" of the true state of affairs, for the simple reason that the members of the Board who are visiting the dockyards and Naval establishments are thoroughly acquainted with the position. For the last three years the expenditure in shipbuilding has steadily grown from £3,106,000 in 1879-1880 to £3,891,000 during the current financial year, the number of workmen employed in the dockyards having been considerably increased, whilst the armoured construction has nearly doubled. A similar increase has taken place in the building of unarmoured ships. From these statements it is obvious that, despite our unsatisfactory position, relatively "the Naval supremacy of the country is being annually strengthened by an accession of war-vessels of improved types." The Admiralty inspection, this year, commenced under favourable auspices, the launch of the Rodney being the initial event of the official tour. The Eastern yards received every attention, and it is understood that two large armour ships will be commenced at Chatham during the next twelve months. The Ajax and Conqueror, armoured ships, and the Calypso, unarmoured fast cruiser, are ready for commission at Chatham. The only large armour-plated ship now building at this Dockyard is the Hero, two fast cruisers—the Mersey and Severn—being under construction. The condition of Naval affairs at Portsmouth has occupied the serious attention of the Admiralty, who have made an exhaustive inspection of almost every Department connected with the service. The result is by no means unsatisfactory, although it appears to be admitted, with candour, that a special effort must be made to strengthen the British Navy without the least delay. It has been boldly asserted that "if the Lords of the Admiralty were to convey to the ears of the Premier one-half of what they heard at Portsmouth from their ablest officers, not even anxiety as to the fate of the Franchise Bill will be allowed to stand in the way of instant action." Their Lordships have gathered all requisite information from the most reliable sources, and it is now simply a question of means. If the finances are forthcoming, the dockyards will give results that will show a practical determination to render the Navy thoroughly efficient, and allay national anxiety. Since the Admiralty inspection at Portsmouth last year, the Impérieuse, armoured barbette cruiser, and the Calliope, a wood-sheathed corvette, have been floated and launched. The Camperdown, double barbette, is the only vessel actually building, although provision has been made for the laying-down of a new ship—probably an improved Conqueror—during the year. The Colossus, Edinburgh, Collingwood, Polyphemus, and Impérieuse are being completed; and among the ships which are ready for sea are the Dreadnought, Devastation, Rupert, Active, Volage, Cordelia, Mercury, Triumph, and Bacchante. Increased attention has been devoted by the Admiralty to the importance of torpedo warfare, which demands constant watching, as other nations have shown remarkable activity in this direction. European Powers are expending immense sums upon torpedo-boats, and Germany has voted £840,000 to the building of seventy torpedo craft. A novelty has been introduced into the shipbuilding policy of the Admiralty for the current year, in the "New Hecla," a torpedo storeship, specially designed to supply torpedo craft of the first class. The construction of a new torpedo cruiser, the Scout, has been sanctioned. A new class of boats has also during the year been attached to several of our ships-of-war, as part of their ordinary complement, which are capable of performing the duties of torpedo craft, in connection with the vessels to which they belong. While progress is being made in the torpedo service, it is imperative that constant activity should be maintained. The important improvements effected, in several directions, to the ships in course of completion at Portsmouth were brought to the notice of the Admiralty. The sponsons of the Calliope —the only representative of the armoured class now in hand—were regarded with particular interest, each being fitted aft, as well as forward. The engineering innovations applied to gunnery, and various mechanical details, indicate that there has been no falling-off in really useful, economical, and practical inventions. One of the events of the Admiralty inspection was the complete trial of the suitability of electric lighting to a man-of-war, made on board the Colossus. The result was most satisfactory, especially as illustrating the ease with which the illumination of the vessel can be controlled from the dynamo room itself, and the reliability of the light. It may be anticipated that the system will be largely adopted in the Navy, as its advantages are extraordinary. The Lords of the Admiralty have still much work to perform before their annual inspection is completed; and it may reasonably be anticipated that a very careful inquiry into the existing state of affairs in our Dockyards and Naval Establishments will be productive of beneficial results.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, is ready for the winter cruise. Rear-Admiral Whyte, second in command, having returned from leave, and hoisted his flag on board the Agincourt at Devonport, has been directed by the Admiralty to be in Plymouth Sound with the Western Division of the Squadron to-morrow, and to await the arrival of Vice-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh. It is regarded as improbable—even if his Royal Highness should arrive on Sunday with the Eastern Division —that the Squadron will leave until Monday, and Madeira will then be its destination. Gibraltar, Lisbon, and Vigo will next be visited, but beyond Madeira no official intimation of the ports to be visited during the cruise has yet been promulgated. The squadron is likely to return to England during the first week in December. The Duke of Edinburgh has been entertaining the officers of the Minotaur, flagship, at Eastwell Park.

Captain J. W. East has been awarded a good-service pension of £150 a year, vacant by the retirement of Captain F. T. Thomson.

The Pall Mall Gazette has supplemented the article on the Navy, which created considerable sensation, by publishing "The Truth about our Coaling Stations," which is also written by "One Who Knows the Facts." This article maintains that in any survey of the position of the British Empire in case of war, it is impossible to separate the safety of our coaling stations abroad from the question of the efficiency of the Navy. The question is treated in great detail in the first of a series of articles, and the writer is evidently master of the subject. Details and data are given to support statements, and various separate heads denote the several points, which include "The Coal Capacity of our Ships," "Coaling Stations and Commerce," "Docks," "The Cause of our Weakness," "Our Naval Stations," &c.

When Admiral Lyons, commanding the Pacific Squadron, attains the rank of Vice-Admiral, the Pacific command will be taken over by Rear-Admiral Baird.

Referring to the proposed Committee of Enquiry into the state of the Navy, a correspondent of the leading journal urges that "It should include statesmen, experienced Naval officers, gentlemen of high standing in the engineering professions, representatives of the mercantile marine, and possibly representatives of the principal colonies. It would have to deal with the whole of the subjects embraced in the Naval defences of the Empire—an inquiry too long deferred. Among those subjects would be included the numbers and characteristics of the fleets for Channel and European service, and of the squadrons for distant foreign service; the best means for protecting our mercantile marine and commerce from the attacks of an enemy; the extent of the assistance which the mercantile marine could lend to the national defence; the arrangements for the defence of the colonies, possessions, and coaling stations against an enemy's cruisers; the methods by which the construction of war ships may be made more rapid, and the unrivalled shipbuilding resources of the country made more readily available for the public service. Even with the best organisation this inquiry would occupy a considerable time, and there are obvious objections to suspending action entirely until it is concluded."

The command of the Diamond, Australian station, commissioned at Sheerness on October 25, 1881, becomes vacant on the expiration of Captain Dale's term. His successor will, it is understood, be Captain Clayton, who has seen much active service.

A number of suggestions from "one of the most able, scientific, and distinguished officers on the Active List of the Navy" has just been published by a contemporary. The writer is evidently well informed, but his suggestions do not throw any new light on the subject. They recapitulate facts well known and recognised in the service:—1. Make our mercantile ports, building yards, and coaling stations safe by means of torpedo boats, submarine mines, and such forts as are necessary to keep an enemy in check until the ironclad fleet can be summoned. The men for this work should be entirely local engineers and stokers from the local workshops, local pilots to steer the boats, local fishermen and artificers to lay the submarine mines, and retired Naval officers in command. 2. Complete rapidly all ironclads in hand, and replace the obsolete ships of the Channel Squadron with the best of them, so as to form our first line of defence, afterwards replacing the Coast-guard ships with next best. 3. Push on fast ocean-going torpedo vessels, and similar craft, which can be built rapidly by contract, to be the eyes and feelers of the ironclad squadrons. 4. Build unarmoured cruisers of the highest speed attainable with moderate dimensions. The Esmeralda appears to be the best existing type. 5. Make the project of utilising armed merchant ships a reality, and test it thoroughly by arming one or more annually, changing the class of vessel every year, making use as far as possible of the officers and men of the Naval Reserve to man them. These five points entail an amount of work that we can scarcely hope to accomplish speedily, unless a great scare comes over the land.

Captain John Reginald Fullerton, R.N., who recently relinquished the command of her Majesty's ship Sapphire, one of the vessels of the China Squadron, has been selected for the command of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert at Portsmouth, in place of Captain Frank T. Thomson, retired. Captain Fullerton was presented by her Majesty with a valuable ring, in recognition of his conduct on the occasion of the collision between the Royal yacht and the Mistletoe, in the Solent, in 1875.

Paymaster A. Turner, R.N., who has been serving since January, 1883, on board her Majesty's ship Vigilant, in Chinese waters, has been appointed to the Duke of Wellington, flagship at Portsmouth. Paymaster Turner was awarded the medal with clasp for his services in the Perak Expedition of 1875.

Referring to the information given by Vice-Admiral Close on "moon-blindness," in connection with the loss of the Wasp, a correspondent, "R.N.," remarks that if no other reason than that of "moon-blindness" can be given for the loss of the gunboat, or for the narrow escape of the Trident, he does not think "that it will do." "Moon-blindness," writes "R.N.," "if such a thing exists, is supposed to have the effect of causing those affected to grope about as though in the dark when the moon shines brightly, but that a moon-blind person cannot see a light in a lighthouse and burning brightly half a mile off, 'because it looks like a full moon,' is really such a novel theory that I think it must be accepted with caution. I've known moon-blind men—often malingerers—cured by extra duty by day to make up for the duty they evaded by night."

The progress of "ironclad science" renders the following note of interest in the present state of affairs:—1854. Armoured gunboats first built for the Crimean war; 4-in. plates, perfectly shot-proof.—1862. Merrimacs and Monitors used in the American war. —1874. 10-inch plates penetrated by 9-ton (Woolwich pattern) guns, with projectiles of 200 pounds.—1876. 22-inch Creuzot steel plates pierced by 100-ton Armstrong gun.—1880. Krupp's experiments at Essen. The $9\frac{1}{2}$-inch Krupp gun, with a 350lb. shot, penetrated 18-inch steel plates, which the British $11\frac{1}{2}$-inch gun, with an 800lb. shot, failed to penetrate.—1882. The Italian ironclad Lepanto armoured with 36-inch steel plates.

As the Eastern Telegraph Company are about to extend their line in the Cape de Verde Islands to Senegambia, one of the French possessions on the African coast, it is desirable that arrangements should be made without delay to bring our possessions in that quarter into telegraphic communication with Great Britain. Sierra Leone is only about 500 miles distant from Senegambia, and there would be no great difficulty or expense in connecting the two places. Taking into consideration the important British interests in that part of the world, and the fact that half-a-dozen vessels-of-war are stationed in the vicinity, it is undesirable that it should be so isolated. In order to communicate with the Naval Commander-in-Chief on the station, vessels have now to send their correspondence to Madeira, from whence it is forwarded by the Cape packets, a mode of procedure which not only occupies a great amount of time, but is exceedingly inconvenient.

It is satisfactory to know that the health of the Marine battalion employed in Egypt is reported to be good. Only two Marine officers have been permitted to join the expedition up the Nile, although 100 Marines were detached for the Camel Corps. When it is considered that the Marine Corps supplies about one-seventh of the total force in Egypt, two officers in the Camel Corps and one on the General Staff appear to be a small proportion.

A new composite ironclad has been laid down at St. Petersburg, her type being that adopted for the Sachsen. Preparations are also being made for the construction of a torpedo-boat, 127 feet in length, for the Black Sea Fleet; and it is stated that 10 boats for laying submarine mines, 16 feet in length, are shortly to be built at Nicolaieff. Referring to the reported increase in the Navy Estimates, it is explained that this is strictly in accordance with a scheme—sanctioned in May, 1882, and published in December, 1883—for the reconstruction of the Russian Navy within a period of 20 years. On the laying of the keels of the ironclads Tchesme and Sinope at Sebastopol, and of the ironclad Katharina II. at Nicolaieff, his Imperial Majesty dispatched the telegram to the Grand Duke Alexis:—"I rejoice at the new birth of the Black Sea Fleet. God grant that the spirit of the old Black Sea Fleet may also revive to render good and honourable service to the Fatherland!"

The immediate effect of the New Guinea Protectorate will be to preserve the Torres Straits from being divided between the Queenslanders and some European Power. This is all that the Australian colonists desire. Probably a fort or two will be erected to mark our occupation; but efforts will be directed to the avoidance of embarrassing relations with the Papuans. That is simply the reason why no English settlements are at present to be allowed.

The Boers may or may not be arrogant boasters, but certainly the Globe writers would give the windiest braggart of them all a pound in the stone "easy." However, when our evening gamecock crows over the Transvaal Volksraad, he may be outcrowed at Pretoria. The Boer leaders certainly are not what the Globe says they are, "men to tremble at the first exhibition of firmness." Sir T. Shepstone was very firm when he annexed the Transvaal by surprise. Sir O. Lanyon was firm when he proclaimed Boer meetings, and Sir G. Wolseley was very firm when he told the Boers that as long as the sun rose the flag of England should float over the Transvaal for ever. But the leaders—these men, Kruger, Pretorious, Joubert—did not tremble for all that. They did not tremble either when a British force, under one of the most skilful theorists of the age, Sir G. Colley, was concentrated to attack them; nor did they shun an encounter with our troops at Laing's Nek, at Ingogo, or Majuba. Nay, more; they did not tremble when Sir E. Wood was about to flood their plains with a formidable army. It is but justice to say this. It is gross injustice to our own troops to revile their successful enemies as paltry cowards. The officers and men who fought them, and those who were prisoners in the hands of the Boers, will repudiate with contempt the slanders on the courage and humanity of the men whom, for inscrutable, but, we fear, discreditable purposes, certain organs of the Press here delight to assail and vilipend. Mr. Forster's proposal for the preservation of order in Bechuanaland would inevitably lead to a sanguinary guerilla. But the colonists will not fight on the terms.

In August last, the French Minister of the Marine and Colonies asked for a million and a half sterling, and has now been obliged to come forward to ask for £250,000 more in consequence of the violation of the treaty of Tientsin,—the treaty concluded on the part of France by Captain Fournier, of the Navy, and which, as a diplomatic document, left much to be desired. By the report furnished by Admiral Peyron, we see that there are 10,000 European troops in Tonquin and 6,000 native troops. Of the Europeans, 5,000 were about to be brought home when the Lang Son affair occurred. It was, therefore, lucky for France that the Celestials struck when they did, and before the Home Government had reduced the expeditionary force by half. Had this intention been carried out, it is not improbable that the French would have been driven out of Tonquin, and have been obliged to recommence everything. The Minister of Marine states with regard to the Naval forces that he had been obliged to reinforce the Chinese Squadron by four cruisers drawn from the Pacific station; he has also to provide for 1,994 sailors who were to have come home, or who are on board the cruisers sent to join Admiral Courbet. In the meantime, the French are somewhat consoled for this extra expenditure as far as Tonquin is concerned, by the victories of Lang Kep and Chu, in which battles the Chinese, although they fought with a good deal of obstinacy, and were manœuvred on European principles, suffered severely, and were utterly routed. Of the former affair, a French military writer says:—"This is the first time that our troops have been able to take the enemy by surprise. At Bacninh and Honghoa the Chinese fled without waiting for us; at Langkep, if they waited for us it was solely because their line of retreat was cut. It was to Captain Fourtoul, of the Artillery, that this result was mainly due. Being in command of the advanced guard he unexpectedly fell on the rear of the enemy, who were shut up in Lang Kep, and who found themselves between two fires. The manœuvre was daring, for Captain Fourtoul ran the risk of being crushed by an offensive movement on the part of the main body of the Chinese." However, in this, as in other cases, fortune favoured the brave, for, to believe the French accounts, the Celestials lost 1,000 men and a great many officers in this affair. At Chu, the Chinese loss is said to have been even greater. It is true that up to the present we have only one side of the story.

Colonel the Hon. C. J. Addington, half-pay, who commanded the Provisional Depôt Battalion at Shorncliffe during the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, has been appointed Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, Cork District, vice Colonel N. Stevenson, appointed Deputy-Adjutant-General in Ireland.

The following little statement as to how things are managed with the Nile Expedition, although not at all surprising, may perhaps afford some index to the feelings of officers in Egypt who have borne the burden and heat of the day. On board the hired transport Bulimba, which left last month, amongst other persons and things were five Naval lieutenants doing nothing, an officer of Household Cavalry, and some Nile boats. It might naturally be supposed that the boats would be under charge of one, or more, of the Naval men; but, no! a Cavalry officer was apparently selected as more suitable. The time of the Naval gentlemen was, however, to come, for, on arrival at Alexandria, they were sent to take charge of the steam launches starting up the Nile, while the feelings of the lieutenants who had been a long time on the station may easily be imagined. The officers sent are mere youngsters, so that the excuse of the leader of the Expedition that he only wants "tried men," will scarcely apply to them. They are as follows:—A son of Lord Chesterfield, another of Lord Colville, a third of Sir John Abdy, a son of Admiral Inglefield, and a son of Sir Cooper Key, First Lord of the Admiralty, all excellent officers, we believe; some, indeed, super-excellent, but not altogether selected for merit, to the supercession of their seniors.

Captain Hill, 62nd Regiment, has been appointed Superintendent of the Gymnasium at Gibraltar.

A singular feature in connection with Aldershot Camp reconstruction is that the roofs of the new buildings are neither slated or tiled, but covered with felt, which, as in the case of the condemned huts, similarly covered, will require to be tarred at least once a year. It is not easy to perceive the advantage of this mode of roofing. Those whose lot it is to dwell in the huts which are being slowly replaced, are well aware that the felt covering of the roofs does not keep out the rain, no matter how copiously tar may be be applied. The annual tarring of the hut-roofs at the Camp is a very serious item of expense, and is also a great nuisance. The prospect of felt and tar in perpetuity at Aldershot is not a pleasant one. The appearance of the new brick-built barracks is certainly not improved by this obsolete mode of roofing.

It has been notified to the various mounted corps to whom the experimental "Goodenough" horseshoes have recently been issued that these shoes are to be paid for, and the value credited, in accordance with clause 85, Army Circulars, 1881.

In a report in the Morning Post of the 15th inst. of a speech made at Birmingham, it is said:—

> "Col. Burnaby reiterated the statement he made on a former occasion in Birmingham that the system prevailing at the War Office and Woolwich was a system leading to corruption. The guns of the Navy had been recently criticised. Those guns were not obtained in the first instance through the Naval authorities, but through the War Office, who were responsible for the inefficiency of our artillery on board our ships at the present time. The individual who was mainly responsible for those guns was the Surveyor-General of Ordnance, a certain Mr. Brand. About 20 years ago that gentleman was a lieutenant in the Guards, with a salary of about £100 a year, and who was a very dear bargain to the country at that price. Since then he had entered Parliament, and become Surveyor-General of Ordnance, with a salary of £1,500 a year, but whether he owed that to his own ability or to his relationship to the late Speaker he must leave the English people to decide."

Colonel Burnaby goes in for "slogging," but he hits very wildly sometimes. The Navy, of course, must get their guns through the War Office, as there is no naval gun factory; but now the Navy mount their own guns and make their own specifications, and we do not believe that the charge of "corruption" could be sustained, or that it ought to be made. The present Surveyor-General of Ordnance is dry-nursed by the Director of Artillery in his ordnance duties, and by the Director of Supplies in commissariat affairs, and in no way chargeable for the failures of either. Sir John Adye—thanks to his position in the War Office—was able to force his isolated opinions in the manufacture of guns which were the laughing-stock of Europe. Mr. Brand's faults doubtless are great enough, without his being saddled with those of his predecessors.

An abstract of the Aldershot Race Fund has been circulated during the week, which shows a balance credit of £1,409. This satisfactory state of the Race Fund is due to the management of Lieutenant-Colonel Toogood, the hon. secretary.

A new pattern great-coat, to be worn in conjunction with the "mud suit," is now on trial at Aldershot, four Infantry battalions having received 25 each for this purpose. This coat is said to be waterproof, but practically it is remarkably porous. The principal feature of this garment is a large pocket which is provided behind, underneath the cape, intended to contain a "fighting kit,"—i.e., rations for three days, towel, socks, soap, the "Soldiers' Pocket-Book," and the Bible; breast pockets are also provided for 100 rounds. This coat, having been but a short time on trial, has not yet been reported on.

Colonel Robinson, the recently appointed A.Q.M.G., in succession to Colonel Harrison, Aldershot Division, was married in the parish church of Farnborough on Thursday, to the eldest daughter of Sir Archibald Alison, commanding the Division.

Although the Aldershot drill season terminated on the 15th inst., when the furlough season commenced, a show of doing something is still kept up at the Camp. Experimental fire tactics were carried out by the 3rd Infantry Brigade, on the Cæsar's Camp Ranges, on Wednesday last, in order that all officers engaged might acquire a practical knowledge of the use and value of the various sorts of musketry fire, and of their application in the field.

The statement in one of the leading weekly papers that the highest personage in the realm had caused an expression of his disapproval to be conveyed to a distinguished military officer on account of the publication in a local paper of certain letters attributed to him, is one which we are not in a position to affirm or deny. But one thing is quite clear. The officer in question fell into a trap, very artfully set for him by an unprincipled person. He has expressed the strongest possible disgust at the conduct of the "gentleman" who, for his own ends, led him into such "a hole," and who betrayed him when in it, by publishing, in violation of all honour and decency, letters which were strictly private. The officer in question might have been spared a reprimand if, indeed, any were addressed to him, for he was not at all likely to execute the intention attributed to him after what has occurred; and he has, indeed, written to England to say that under no circumstances will he ever take notice of or communicate with that "gentleman" again. So much for one "patron," whose name has been made use of in printed circulars. As to the other "patron," the distinguished officer representing the sister-service, whose name also was used in these circulars, has written to say that he never justified or authorised the use made of his name, which has greatly surprised and annoyed him. So much for patron No. 2. The originals of the letters referred to are in the possession of the Editor of the Army and Navy Gazette.

Under the management of Lieutenant-Colonel French, Queen's Bays, Master of the Divisional Drag-Hunt, the Aldershot Drag-Hounds seem to be in better working order than they have been for years past. The accounts show that a sum of £200 has been subscribed by the officers of the Division for the maintenance of the pack up to the present month, and that there is a balance credit of £35.

The French Government have at last come to the conclusion that it is absolutely necessary to have a Colonial Army, so that the home battalions may not be disorganised every time an expeditionary force is required. It might have been supposed that the simplest way to have done this would have been to augment the number of marine infantry regiments. However, what is proposed is this:—The colonial army is to be under the orders of the Minister of War, and act like the marine infantry and the expeditionary forces in Tonquin and elsewhere, under those of the Minister of Marine. The colonial army will consist of eight regiments of Infantry, two regiments of Tonquin Riflemen, one regiment of Anamite Riflemen, one regiment of Senegal Riflemen, two companies of Indian Sepoys, two companies of disciplined troops, two regiments of Marine Artillery, and drivers, and Gendarmes. This will not prevent the formation of new native corps should they be required. Each infantry regiment will have 20 companies, in ordinary times 12 will be quartered at home and eight abroad. The new Army will be recruited on the voluntary system, and the recruits will receive something more than the Queen's shilling on volunteering—between £8 and £12, according to circumstances—and enjoy high pay. Algeria will continue to have its special Army, which is called the 19th Army Corps.

Nine retired officers of the Army Pay Department are still temporarily employed. But, consequent on the number of officers required for Egypt and the Soudan, and the unpopularity of the Department, there are 49 Paymasters wanted to fill vacancies in nine District offices, three Cavalry, and 37 Infantry regiments.

The manœuvres of the 17th French Army Corps were followed with great interest by French critics, because the officer in command, General Lewal, is looked up as the War Minister of the future, and because he is strong in theory. The Avenir Militaire has a good many faults to find with the way in which the manœuvres were conducted. It points out much delay occurred in the transmission of orders, and refers to instances where troops were turned out at 4 a.m., and did not march until 8 a.m., thus fatiguing the soldier uselessly. Nothing, says the writer, is more calculated to engender want of discipline than this carelessness. In several engagements, says the Avenir, the heads of columns did not debouch until too late, to the great annoyance of the Director-General, who manifested his irritation. The Avenir has also many faults to find with the method of cantonment adopted by General Lewal, and which was at variance with the regulations. In consequence of what happened, the troops, after their day's manœuvres, had long to wait, with empty stomachs, before knowing where to go. On the whole, therefore, the men of the 17th Corps, what with turning-out too soon and not being able to turn-in in time, must have had a mauvais quart d'heure of it. Fault is also found that everything was cut and dried in advance, and nothing left to initiative.

The French are always accusing us of having carried Tel-el-Kebir with gold, and not with steel. The night march and the storming of the place were shams, and Arabi and his chiefs had so many guineas in their pockets that they could scarcely escape. It appears, however, from the following letter, written by a field-officer, and published in the Figaro, that our neighbours are not above buying off troublesome enemies. The letter says:—"At Geryville (in Algeria) I met Si Amas, the religious chief of the south, who got up the late insurrection with Bou Amena. He insisted upon being presented to me. He is a handsome fellow, whose influence over his compatriots, male and female, is such that he has but a sign to make to obtain as many of the fair sex as he wishes. As the price of his submission he draws £600 a year from the French Government, and passes his nights at the military club playing at baccarat and drinking gazouse—the generic name for all liquors." The Figaro adds on its own behalf:—"Better this than driving him, by means of Zouaves and Chasseurs, into a desert where there is no drawing at five, no complaisant ladies, and no gazouses;" and where he would be the source of infinite trouble and heavy expense to the Republic, whose exchequer is not in the most flourishing condition just now.

PRELIMINARY DRILL, MILITIA.

A correspondent writes:—"As 'one of those concerned,' allow me, through your columns, to differ with your correspondent as regards doing away with the term 'Preliminary Drill,' Militia. This year, in a battalion in this, an agricultural district, over 170 attended the preliminary drill. Only 25 drill on enlistment, notwithstanding the extra bounty, and every obstacle being placed in their way by the 'finance' department. I trust the authorities will never do away with preliminary drill in agricultural districts, for, if so, recruiting would stop, as it has effectually been done, except for the months previous to preliminary drill."

Letters have been received at the Admiralty from Vice-Admiral Sir William N. W. Hewett, K.C.B., V.C., Commander-in-Chief of the East Indies station, on board the flagship Euryalus, at Aden, up to the 1st inst.:—The Dragon was at Muscat on the 19th ult., and was to leave for Sharjah and Bushire on the 24th ult. The Philomel was at Kurrachee on the 19th ult., and was to leave about the 24th for Muscat. The Arab and the Decoy were at Aden on September 23, and the Ranger at Berberah on the same date.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

The employment of Reservemen is still being discussed everywhere. Following the example of the Artillery, the Derbyshire Regiment at Lucknow have held a meeting and passed resolutions in favour of the formation of a regimental agency in which the county magnates are to be invited to assist, and the Lancashire Regiments are being invited on the initiative of the commanding officer of one of the seven Lancashire battalions in India to unite in forming a county agency, which would be a great boon, as "Lancashire" recruits are drawn from all parts of the county; and the seven regiments by banding together could very well help the men belonging to one regiment at the district head-quarters of another. It is stated that Major Hill, R.E., and Lieutenant N. A. K. Burne, 23rd Pioneers, have been obliged to resign the Boundary Commission, owing to ill-health. The Zhob Valley Expedition started on the 20th:—First, the 4th and 10th Companies, Bengal Sappers and Miners, to improve the road. Next, one squadron of Bombay Lancers and the 2nd Bombay Grenadiers. The Sappers joined at Kach and Gwashki, the 2nd Grenadiers at Zandra. Twenty-five sabres of the Bombay Lancers keep open communications with the second column, which consists of 9th Battery, 1st Brigade, Northern Division, R.A. (a screw-gun battery), the 2nd Staffordshire Regiment (98th), 45th Bengal N.I. (Rattray's Sikhs), and a detachment 1st Madras Pioneers. The 1st Bengal Native Infantry have left Pindi en route to join Sir O. Tanner's force. The regular reliefs in Bengal commence about November 1. The list (which was brought out in March this year) has already had to be modified, and it is said that further modifications are to be expected shortly. The relief is an exceptionally heavy one. There is a curious story from Bombay which, if true, involves a certain amount of hardship. The Barracks at Baroda are in a bad state of repair, and as the Guikwar, who owns them and pays a subsidy for the troops too, would not repair them, the detachment of Royal Artillery and two companies of the East Yorkshire Regiment were ordered to move. Officers and men sold off their furniture, &c., and made ready, when on the very morning of the start the order was cancelled, and they all had to start afresh in their old quarters. Brigade-Surgeons O'Halloran and T. Davis, Surgeons-Major I. Hoysted, F. Turton, F. Wilkes, E. Lloyd, J. Scott, W. Creyk, J. Maxham, W. Burnett, J. Riddick, J. M'Cracken, W. Charlton, and P. Connolly, and Surgeon L. Ward proceed home during the coming trooping season. In future a squadron of Bengal Cavalry from Allahabad are to be stationed at Calcutta during the cold weather. Allahabad has raised a corps of Volunteer Cavalry. Major Barlow, of the 2nd Manchester (late 96th) Regiment, has been appointed a D.A.A.G. for Musketry, vice Captain Whittaker, of the York and Lancaster Regiment. Captain E. Lloyd, 1st Punjab Cavalry, at present employed in the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department, has been transferred to the Foreign Office. He has passed the Staff College. Fever has been running through Peshawur, and one or two months have been positively unhealthy. Government have sanctioned the formation of a small camp of exercise at Poona.

THE A.M.D. EXAMINATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The senior surgeons-major of the A.M.D. owe you a debt of gratitude for taking up their cause, and protesting against the indignity they are about to be subjected to in having to undergo an examination for promotion to the rank of brigade-surgeon. Indeed, not only is it an insult to the senior officers, but to the whole Department. Lord Morley's Committee recommended that the system of examination for promotion to the rank of surgeon-major—which, for reasons best known to the authorities, for several years was allowed to lapse—should be restored, and such is the opinion of most members of the Department; but the Committee never recommended the institution of a new examination for the higher ranks, subjecting officers of many years' field rank to examination in rudimentary professional subjects, the want of the knowledge of which would have unfitted them for the position they held for over 20 years. Even if the examination was restricted to administrative subjects only, and confined to officers of less exalted rank than lieutenant-colonel, there might be an excuse; but certainly none in subjecting senior officers holding the relative rank of lieutenant-colonel, and of ages varying from 42 to 51 (the surgeon-major last promoted is in his 51st year), is carrying examination to an extreme, and at variance with the custom in all other branches of the service, and likely to disgust rather than infuse zeal into the members of the Department. Surely there is a mistake somewhere, and the examination is intended only for those surgeons-major who were promoted to the rank during the time the examination for promotion was allowed to lapse, and not for those officers who have already undergone the ordeal, acquitted themselves favourably, and performed their duties satisfactorily since. The examination those officers have already undergone was somewhat similar to that now instituted for surgeons-major, embracing a medico-topographical report of some district or country, which they are again called upon to furnish. The article in your issue of Aug. 30 clearly points out the absurdity of the whole thing. Surgeons-major whose incompetency, or more probably self-respect, causes them to decline subjecting themselves o an examination of the sort, will be passed over, all branded, no doubt, alike by the Army in general as ignorant professional men; and though they are not considered fit for promotion to the higher grades, where to a great extent the duties would be administrative, and professional ignorance not of so much moment, still they will be allowed to continue in charge of her Majesty's troops, performing their duties possibly in the same non-efficient manner as they must have been doing for the last 20 years, and will continue doing till removed from the Army by the Age Clause at 55. I am at a loss to understand why the medical papers are so reticent on the matter. Is it they have such a low opinion of the professional abilities of officers of the Department, that they look on approvingly at men of high standing in the Army being subjected to this examination in rudimentary professional subjects? Fancy the outcry in civil life were practitioners of from 20 to 26 years' standing subjected to a test examination in operative surgery and practical medicine before being considered fit for appointment to, say, a hospital, &c. Still, over 40 of the senior surgeons-major of the Army Medical Department are in their 26th year of service, and these veterans now have to submit to this indignity or be passed over, and have their small prospects blighted, after these long dreary years of service in all climes. No doubt many will retire in disgust sooner than submit to such humiliation, and possibly this is what the authorities are driving at for the sake of hastening promotion; but is it English fair-play, or is it to the good of the State? and, as you say, Mr. Editor, "Will the Government never take warning?" If it is desirable to hasten promotion, which undoubtedly it is, as can be inferred from the age of the last surgeon-major just promoted—viz., 51—as well as from the number of senior surgeons-major who are in their 26th year's service, would it not be fairer to limit the administrative officer's appointments to a fixed time, similar to what exists in the other branches of the service, and not allow them to hold these coveted appointments till excluded by age (60)? By this means all officers of the Department would have a chance of attaining the higher grades, which at present is impossible; and the retiring pensions of deputy-surgeons and surgeons-general are sufficiently good that compulsory retirement after, say, five years or seven years in both ranks would be no very great hardship to them.—I am, &c.,

VETERAN.

ALDERSHOT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—All officers and men who have served at Aldershot know well the excessive fatigues that have to be performed there causes much discontent, and is very ruinous to the men's clothing. These fatigues are to a certain extent necessary, as there are many empty lines, roads, and gutters to be kept clean. Every one knows how short-handed the garrison is at present, and even with putting recruits on fatigues the number of men required daily cannot often be furnished. I would suggest that the prisoners be employed to do all fatigues. There are generally over 100 in the prison, and if these men were employed on fatigues for nine hours a day, the time now spent by them at useless shot-drill and oakum-picking, good soldiers would be able to spend more time at their drill and the other accomplishments they have to learn to make them perfect.—I am, &c.,

OLD SOLDIER.

THE NAVAL GREAT-COAT.

"Confusion" writes:—"As the season is now approaching when Naval officers will lose their identities inside the 'service great-coat,' will you permit me to repeat the suggestion which appeared in your paper last winter, viz., that distinguishing marks, in the form of stars and crowns, should be worn on shoulder-straps attached to the coat, the stars, &c., to be embroidered in gold for executive officers, and in silver, centred with the usual colour, for officers of the civil branches; and that in number and character these marks should indicate the relative military rank of the wearer?"

Staff-Col. Buturlin has been appointed Military Attaché to the Russian Embassy in London.

It is understood that the Government have signified to Germany that Great Britain accepts the West African Conference in principle, but that no formal acceptance of the invitation has yet been sent.

A Fleet Circular, referring to postal orders and postage-stamps, has just been issued. Postal orders are only to be issued for the use of the officers and crew of her Majesty's ships, who are not to be charged with any poundage on account of the same. Every person to whom a postal order is issued should keep a record of the number and date, to facilitate inquiry at the Post Office, if the order should be lost.

The Standard says:—"The Eastbourne Corporation is considering a proposal from the War Office in connection with a plan for making that part of the South Coast of greater military importance. Among other things the Government contemplate erecting new barracks near that town, in the place of the Redoubt Fort, which is temporarily occupied during the summer months by military for carbine and artillery practice. The War Office seek to dispose of this redoubt to the Corporation on such terms as will give the town a new east-end park, in exchange for land for new barracks to be provided for 250 men, to cost about £12,000, and to be situated near the coast-line between Eastbourne and Langney Fort."

A telegram from Shanghai of yesterday's date announces that the Chinese, being harassed by the natives in the south of Formosa, have asked for reinforcements. Five French war-vessels are stationed before Kelung, and eight others before Heunes, near Kelung. The Chinese are fortifying the heights, and refuse to surrender. The French landed and attacked Heunes on the 8th inst., the Chinese making a vigorous resistance. It is believed that the latter affair refers to the attack on Tamsui.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards. Capt. Brocklehurst has been taken on the strength of the British Forces in Egypt, with the status of deputy-assistant-adjutant-general, for service with the Expedition.

3rd Dragoon Guards. The strength of the regiment proceeding to India in H.M.S. Jumna is 19 officers and 402 men.

6th Dragoon Guards. Lieut.-Col. Blake and Lieut. O'Farrell are en route to India in Jumna.

1st Royal Dragoons. Capt. Ames has joined at Lichfield, and taken up the appointment of Adjt. of the Staffordshire Yeomanry.

20th Hussars. In a regimental order issued to the Staffordshire Yeomanry, the Marquis of Anglesey says:—"Lord Anglesey regrets to have to inform the regiment that his efforts, supported by petitions from the whole of the troops of the regiment, to have the services of Major Graves, the adjutant of the regiment, extended, have failed, the Commander-in-Chief, in concurrence with the Secretary of State for War, having decided that it is utterly impossible to form a precedent by breaking the existing regulations. Lord Anglesey takes this opportunity of thanking Major Graves for what his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief was pleased last year to call 'his untiring zeal and energy' on behalf of the regiment. The efficiency of the regiment has under his instruction increased in every department, and in bidding him farewell Lord Anglesey is assured that Major Graves carries with him the hearty good-will and best wishes of every officer, non-commissioned officer, and member of the Queen's Own Royal Yeomanry."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Capt. Ind, Lieut. Hunter-Blair, and 70 men, R.H.A.; Majors Smyth, Nutt, and Buckle, Capts. Burrows, Berber, and Moberley, Lieuts. Haygate and Du Cane, and 270 men, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th Brigs., R.A., are en route to India in H.M.S. Jumna.

The Government of India have published a correspondence between the War and India Offices respecting the status of regimental colonels, lieutenant-colonels, and majors of Royal (late Indian) Artillery in respect of promotion and retirement. The War Office brought to the notice of the Secretary of State for India, so far back as Sept., 1882, that the Warrant of 1881 acted detrimentally to the interests of these officers, as both their employment and promotion was seriously affected. After detailing in what respects they would be so affected, the War Office made the following suggestions:—That all regimental colonels and lieutenant-colonels on the lists of the late Indian Artilleries promoted to these grades since Sept. 30, 1877, should, on completion of five years' service in the respective ranks, be removed to a supernumerary full-pay list; that all majors on the Indian Lists promoted to that rank since the same date should be similarly dealt with on completing seven years in the rank or on attaining the age of 48 years, promotion to be made in the room of all officers not seconded so placed on the Supernumerary List; the regimental colonels so removed on completion of five years' service would be ineligible for further regimental employment after removal, but would still be eligible for staff or extra regimental employment; the lieutenant-colonels would be eligible for employment for five years in regimental commands and appointments, now held by regimental colonels, and for staff and extra regimental employment; the majors on removal to the Supernumerary List should be promoted to the brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel, to place them on an equality with majors on the old Royal List who on removal to half-pay are removed as lieutenant-colonels. These officers would remain without regimental employment until brought back to the effective list of regimental lieutenant-colonels as vacancies occur, but they would be available for staff or extra regimental employment while on the Supernumerary List. The Earl of Kimberley points out that there seems no provisions in the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, for the compulsory removal of officers as suggested; that the Royal Artillery Commission of 1877, seeing this, had proposed certain extra annuities to expedite retirements; that these recommendations were adopted, and the rules framed in consequence are still in force; that the Commission had recommended the gradual absorption of all regimental colonels of Indian artillery, as this rank was not a guaranteed rank, having been created after the transfer of the company to the Crown. This was adopted: That it was expected that these annuities would induce voluntary retirement to the same extent almost as the Royal Warrant by compulsory removals on the Royal list; in short, that the junior officers of the Royal Artillery would at one time benefit by one plan and at another by the other. That this anticipation has been realised: For these and other reasons duly detailed, the Earl of Kimberley was unable to accede to the suggestions. He had no objection to the removal from commands of lieutenant-colonels and regimental colonels after five years' terms; subsequent to which they would remain unemployed, but on the receipt of full pay, and the lieutenant-colonels would be eligible for employment on commands hitherto held by colonels. These officers, however, would remain on the establishment, and no promotion be made in their room. The War Office accepted this last proposal, and removed to the unemployed list from January 1, 1884, on 18s. a day, a number of lieutenant-colonels of Indian lists. The officers so removed, however, claimed to be entitled to reside in India on Indian pay and allowances. To this the Secretary of State has acceded, and further, has sanctioned the provision of free passages to India of as many of these officers as desire to return here. He has also ruled that as these officers will be on full pay, 1,002 rs. 4 annas per mensem, with horse allowance for one horse if employed on any military duty, their service will count for pension and extra annuity. Lastly, the Secretary of State has approved of the promotions being made on the removal of each lieutenant-colonel from his command, the majors so promoted being in excess of establishment in the higher grade of each of the Indian cadres."

The funeral of the late Col. Barnes, commanding Royal Artillery, whose unexpected death has cast a gloom over Cairo society, took place at Cairo on Sept. 30, the cortège starting from the residence of Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Stephenson at 4 o'clock precisely. The whole of the arrangements were carried out under the directions of Col. Hammond, R.A. The firing party, furnished by the 1st Batn. Berkshire Regt., lead the way, followed by the bands of the regiment and of the 1st Batn. Cameron Highlanders. The coffin was covered with beautiful wreaths of flowers, and bore the helmet, belt, and sword of the deceased. The pallbearers were Col. Hammond, of the 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders; Comy.-Gen. Wilkinson; Col. Ralston, of the 2nd Batn. East Surrey; Lieut.-Col. Lloyd, R.A.; Col. Olivey, C.B., Chief Paymaster; Col. Webber, R.E. The deceased officer's charger followed, with boots reversed over the saddle, led by his servant. Then came the batteries R.A., Lieut.-Gen. Stephenson, Major-Gen. Dormer, officers of the Staff, &c. At the English cemetery the cortège was met by Garrison Chaplains Hacket and Smith, who performed the last mournful rites over the remains of the much-respected officer. A correspondent writes from Cairo:—"Knowing that little of the valuable services rendered as a subaltern in the Bengal Horse Artillery by the late Col. Barnes, would be mentioned by himself, I enclose a short account, of his services during the Mutiny, &c. On the mutiny of the Neemuch Brigade on June 3, 1857, Lieut. Barnes rode with Lieut. Rose into Oodeypore, a long and critical ride, with despatches from the beleaguered British to Major Showers, the Political Agent. He returned with that officer and some Oodeypore horse, relieved the refugees, and afterwards volunteered for the pursuit of the rebels. He equipped and commanded two guns, and was wounded at the siege of Neemuch. With Lieut. Thackwell, 15th Bengal N.I., he rescued three men of the 83rd Foot, who were surrounded and attacked by an armed band, but not before two of them were severely wounded. In 1856, he was seized with a choleraic attack, brought about by his attention to sick troopers. During this epidemic, 150 men died out of 500. Lieut. Barnes received the thanks of the authorities for his services."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Capt. H. H. Kitchener has been promoted to a brevet majority, in regard of his services in Egypt. His name has lately been prominently before the public by reason of his services with the advanced guard of the Nile Expeditionary Force.

Lieut. Hill and 16 non-commissioned officers and men of the Telegraph Battalion of the Royal Engineers left Cairo for Assiout on Oct. 4, on the Upper Nile.

It has been decided that the revised scale of Staff salaries recently sanctioned for the officers of Royal Engineers holding Staff appointments in the corps of Bengal Sappers and Miners, should also apply to similar officers serving with the Bombay corps of Sappers and Miners, and holding the appointments of "Adjutant and Superintendent of Instruction" Quartermaster and Interpreter, and "Superintendent of Park and Field Train" respectively. These officers who at present receive a Staff salary of 250 rs. to 400 rs. per mensem, according to grade in the Public Works Department, will in future be allowed the following Staff salaries:—On appointment, 250 rs.; after 18 months, 300 rs.; after three years, 400 rs. per month. They will hold their appointment for five, instead of four years, as at present, and will no longer be graded with officers of the Public Works Department.

2nd Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regiment). Major Beale, 2nd Batn., has been appointed superintendent of the Gymnasium at Umballa. Capt. R. C. Thomson, late of the regiment, died at his residence, Castleton, Belfast, on the 9th inst.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Major Maclean, 1st Batn., has been selected to proceed to Hong Kong in charge of the draft ordered to join the 2nd Batn. The 1st Batn. moved yesterday from Dublin to Buttevant. Capt. Spens, 1st Batn., has been selected for the adjutancy of the 2nd Rifle Volunteer Batn.

7th Royal Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. will embark for Gibraltar, according to present arrangements, about the middle of December. Capt. Anderson retires upon half-pay, with a view to his appointment to a Militia company.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Stockley has vacated his staff appointment in India, and returns to regimental duty.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Lieut. Gayer, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 21st Madras N.I., on probation. The 1st Batn. moved yesterday from Buttevant to the Curragh.

16th Bedfordshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Robinson, 2nd Batn., is en route to India in Jumna.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Lieut. Lean, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs.

22nd Cheshire Regiment. Lieut. Boileau, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 3rd Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. Capt. Webber, 1st Batn., has been appointed station staff officer at the Darjeeling Convalescent Depôt.

25th King's Own Borderers. Lieut. Gordon, 1st Batn., has been appointed an extra A.D.C. to the Viceroy of India.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Major Spratt, Capt. Moss, and a draft of 147 men are en route to India in Jumna. Lieut. Pym has been permitted to resign his probationary appointment for the Madras S.C.

32nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry moved yesterday from Cork to Dublin.

43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Lieut. Hodson is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and is appointed to the 28th Madras N.I., on probation.

45th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Capt. and Adjt. Bulpett has been noted at the War Office for appointment as an adjutant in the Auxiliary Forces.

46th Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. The Egyptian Gazette of the 22nd ult. says:—"The 46th arrived a few days ago at Assouan from Keneh, and is encamped on the banks of the Nile, to the north of the town. The health of the battalion has greatly improved since its arrival at Assouan, and all ranks were anxiously looking forward for orders to move to the front. Col. Richardson, C.B., on arrival at Assouan assumed command of the British troops at that station. Major-Gen. Earle and staff arrived at Assouan on the evening of Sept. 16. The Major-General made an inspection of the different encampments of the troops on the following day; he expressed himself as particularly pleased with the camp of the Duke of Cornwall's L.I."

47th North Lancashire Regiment. The Irish Times states that "Major Cooper, Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. and Qrmr.-Gen. in Ireland, has been appointed to the Staff of Lord Dufferin, Viceroy of India."

ROYAL MARINES.

A detachment of Royal Marines, about 100 officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, have been placed under orders to embark in the Tamar for passage to the Australian station, to recommission the Nelson and Diamond, on that station.

Corpl. Henry Lever, 15th Compy., has been awarded a medal for long service and good conduct.

Lieut. W. F. Trotter has passed the examination in subjects (a) and (b) for promotion.

Lieuts. J. R. Johnston, W. E. Binney, L. J. Hadley, A. L. Harries, and B. L. Hubbard, 1st-class extra; E. E. Chown, 1st-class, have completed a course of musketry instruction at Hythe, and received certificates.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Col. Sir Cromer Ashburnham, who has been appointed Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. at Dover, is succeeded in the command of the 3rd Batn. by Lieut.-Col. Ogilvy. The Standard says:—"Major Hutton has arrived at Cairo, and proceeded to Dongola to resume the command of the Mounted Infantry at that place."

78th Seaforth Highlanders. Major Grant is en route to India in H.M.S. Jumna.

89th Royal Irish Fusiliers. H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge presented medals to the regiment for the Soudan Campaign after his inspection of the troops in the Portsmouth Command on Southsea Common on Monday. The number of those entitled to the honour was 290, of whom 285 were entitled to receive both medals and clasps. Owing, however, to several of the men being on leave, in hospital, or having left the service, the number of actual recipients amounted to only 207, among whom were the following officers:—Col. Robinson, C.B., Brevet Major Gordon, Major and Pymr. Plomer; Capts. Reeves, Munn, Rogers, Smith; Lieuts. Macdonald, Moore, Hill, Davidson, Hext, Nurse, Brinckman, Angell, Williams; Surg. Foster, Qrmr. J. Watkins, and Serjt.-Major Toohey.

96th Manchester Regiment. Capt. Graham is en route to India in H.M.S. Jumna.

Rifle Brigade. Capt. Pemberton, 1st Batn., is ordered home from India to join the depôt for two years.

1st West India Regiment. Lieut. Errington, a probationer, officiating wing-officer 1st Bombay N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C., from Feb. 3, 1883.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. On Oct. 1 the remains of Qrmr. J. A. White, who died after a short illness in Egypt, were interred with full military honours, at Kait Bey, near Ramleh. The deceased, who was a most efficient and popular officer, was followed to his last resting-place by Major-Gen. Lennox, his Staff, and officers representing every corps in his command. The band of the Yorkshire Regt. was in attendance. The funeral and firing parties were furnished by the same regiment. The service was performed by the Rev. F. Darnell, Chaplain to the Forces. A large number of civilian friends were present, evidence of how highly esteemed the lamented officer was outside as well as within the service in which he had been so long, and in which he had performed his duty so well.

Medical Department. The Morning Post says:—"Under the reorganisation of the Army Medical Department and Army Hospital Corps, an identical colour of uniform will be adopted for both corps, which is now practically merged into one department. This colour will be blue, though those officers now wearing the red uniform will be permitted to wear out their present suits. Many of the new regulations, including the revival of examinations for officers, are very unpopular in the department."

Veterinary Department. Vet.-Surg. Clayton remains in veterinary charge in Cairo. Vet.-Surg. Smith retains charge of the 19th Hussars. Vet.-Surg. Mitchell assumes the duties at Abbassiyeh, whilst Vet.-Surgs. Burt and Griffith will proceed up the Nile with the Camel Corps.

Pay Department. During September the following appointments, promotions, retirements, and changes of station have occurred in the Army Pay Department. Appointments—Capts. Pinkney, St. George, Powell, Thackwell, Smythe, and Tunnard. Promotions—Major Huddlestone, staff paymaster, to be chief paymaster and lieut.-col.; Majors Gaham to be staff paymaster; Carey to be staff paymaster, vice Davis (all three Sept. 10); Capt. Lloyd to have the hon. rank of major (Sept. 5). Retirements—Lieut.-Col. Bryson and Major Davis (Sept. 10); Lieut.-Col. George (Sept. 23). Changes of station—Lieut.-Cols. Huddlestone, to Colchester District Office, from R.E., Aldershot; Rippon, from Gibraltar, on passage home; Majors Feilden, to 9th Regtl. District, Yarmouth, from Woolwich; Drage, from Halifax to|Egypt; Creagh, 47th Regtl. District, Preston, to R.E., Aldershot; Willoughby, 37th Regtl. District, Winchester, retired on account of health; Barnes, from Yarmouth, to District Staff, R.A., Woolwich; Vander Meulen, to 47th Regtl. District, Preston; Stoker, from Malta District Office, to District Office, Gibraltar; Lawrie, 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, to Egypt; Dawson, to Egypt; Sanford, to Unattached List; F. E. Webb, to Devonport District Office; Webster, to 19th Hussars; Howard, to 37th Regt.; Mackie, to Camel Corps, en route to Soudan. Capts. De la P. Robinson, to Egypt; Ridgway, to 106th Regt.; Reid, to Egypt; Drury, to Unattached List; Sherrard, to 52nd Regt.; Long, from Egypt, to leave; and the following, Powell, Thackwell, Smythe, Pinkney, Tunnard, and St. George, are unattached to any corps at present. The number of probationers has increased from 13 to 15.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Lancashire Fusiliers. Col. the Hon. C. J. Fox Stanley, youngest son of Edward, 13th Earl of Derby, died on Monday at his residence, Halcot, near Grange-over-Sands, in his 77th year, having been born in April, 1808. Col. Stanley was in the Grenadier Guards for many years, but retired in 1841. He was colonel of the 2nd Batn. of the Duke of Lancaster's Regiment from 1848 to 1852, and in 1855 he was appointed hon. colonel of the 3rd Batn.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE'S INSPECTIONS.

The Duke of Cambridge made an inspection of the troops at Portsmouth on Monday, and afterwards presented medals for service in the Soudan. His Royal Highness arrived at Portsmouth at 1 o'clock, under salutes from the Duke of Wellington and the garrison. He was met at the station by Admiral Hornby, Gen. Sir G. Willis, &c., and a detachment of the 4th Dragoon Guards. The Duke proceeded direct from the station to the new Clarence Barracks—a fine pile of buildings, one block of which is completed, which he inspected. After lunching with Gen. Willis, his Royal Highness was present at a parade of the whole of the troops on Southsea Common. There were present a detachment of the 4th Dragoon Guards and the Depôt, 3rd Brigade, R.A.; 1st Brigade, R.A. and R.M.A. (two battalions); 2nd Brigade, R.E., 1st Norfolk Regt., 1st Gloucestershire Regt, and R.M.L.I.; 3rd Brigade, 2nd North Lancashire Regt., 2nd Royal Irish Fusiliers, 2nd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The Duke of Cambridge arrived on the ground at 3 o'clock. He made a minute inspection, after which he took up a position, and the troops marched past.

His Royal Highness visited Chatham on Thursday, and inspected the troops there. In the afternoon the Duke proceeded to Dover, arriving there in the evening. His Royal Highness dined with Major-Gen. Newdigate at the Castle, and yesterday witnessed and inspected the troops, and saw the new form of attack practiced.

"The less Dr. Clark and other apologists for the Boer bandits in Bechuanaland say," observes the Pall Mall Gazette, "about the death of Mr. Bethel the better. The story of the murder of that gallant young Englishman is one upon which it would be better not to say too much in the hearing of his countrymen. Of course all the reports may be false, but we have no right to assume that all Englishmen in South Africa are liars, even to please Dr. Clark, and the story that reaches us is to the effect that the Boers butchered our wounded countryman with every circumstance of brutality, and that after he was dead they satiated their vengeance and celebrated their victory by mutilating his corpse as the Turks mutilated the Russian dead in the Schipka Pass.* We are loth to believe it, but as that is the English story it is the one which Englishmen will believe, and if attention is generally called to it there will be an outburst of indignation that may lead to much graver consequences than Dr. Clark may care to contemplate."—[* We do not believe a word of it.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., speaking at the Cutlers' Feast at Sheffield on Thursday, said:—"I should shudder to think of the consequences to England if we were found unprepared with a fleet capable of dealing with any enemy in any part of the world. We are circumstanced absolutely differently from any other people on the face of the earth. We are not self contained; we do not grow food for one-half the population, and the industries which support the people depend for the raw materials upon foreign producers in all parts of the world. It is therefore clear, absolutely clear, that the seas must be made as safe as our roads if our people are to eat and drink and to work in safety at home. So after an examination of the question, I am bound to say I think the Government ought to grant an inquiry which should be made at once, and should give such assurance by some authoritative means as will satisfy the community at large, that the provisions they are about to make will be adequate to the defence of the country, and will be adequate to the security of the seas—security I mean in the sense that neither our grain, nor our cotton, nor our exports shall be liable to seizure upon the open seas. The events which we are witnessing every day satisfy any reasonable man that the days of war are not yet gone, and the man who does not take provision against such a casualty, which he would take in the way of police or of fire-engines, is a man whose lunacy ought not to be questioned, and who certainly ought not to interfere with the peace and prosperity of his neighbours."

The Daily News says:—"The vacancies caused in the Household Cavalry and the Brigade of Guards in consequence of a number of the men having joined the Camel Corps in Egypt, are being rapidly filled up by first-class recruits, chiefly drawn from the north and west of England."

Commodore Molyneux, whose health has suffered from his long stay in the Red Sea during the hottest months of the year, left Suakim on Sept. 30 on board the Sphinx for Suez, in order to have a few days' change of air in a more temperate climate.

Vice-Admiral Sir W. M. Dowell, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief on the China station, was, according to telegram received at the Admiralty on Monday, at Hong Kong on the 13th inst., and proposed to leave for Amoy on the 15th.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MARINE.—It is quite a matter of taste.

R. I. P.—Thanks! But the operation of "tumping" would not be possible at the Tongwa Cascades at this state of the Nile.

X. Y. Z.—A Lieutenant so promoted can take promotion in the case you mention, if he be otherwise qualified, as long as he is in the active list of his regiment.

VOLUNTEER ADJUTANT.—There is no truth in the report you mention.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1884.

IN the October number of the Fortnightly Review Colonel F. Keith Fraser has written a valuable article on the present condition of the cavalry arm of our forces, which will not be received with less attention because it is written by an enthusiastic cavalry officer. We presume that it sometimes occurs to the military authorities of this country that England may be kicked into a European war, and, in that case, that the composition of her Army, or expeditionary contingent, would certainly be deficient in the one arm to which experience and the opinions of the greatest strategists attach special importance, at present, in consequence of the introduction of far-reaching artillery and small-arms, and consequent changes of formation in the bodies exposed to their fire. Colonel Fraser, well known as a smart—to use a technical term—officer of one of the Household Cavalry regiments, has had a wide range of experience abroad, having visited, either officially as an officer attending at the autumn manœuvres, or as a highly-esteemed visitor, the great displays in Austria, Russia, Germany, France, &c., in peace time; and in the war of 1870-71 between Germany and France, he had the means of making practical observations in the field, accompanied by some unpleasant experiences to himself. But all that Colonel Fraser can do, all that Inspectors of Cavalry, or the representations of a cavalry soldier like the Duke of Cambridge can do, will never succeed in moving the Government of this country to give a proper complement and efficiency to the Cavalry branch of the service, as long as our rulers have a latent conviction that Great Britain will never be employed in such a war as would involve in its course disastrous consequences to an army not properly provided with cavalry. "We can always mount infantry." Since the days of Marlborough, when the proportions of Cavalry to Infantry were the reverse of what they are now, the English Army has been generally steadily deficient in everything except the quality of its horsemen; but by an extraordinary chance the English Army was enabled to put a thousand sabres ashore at Old Fort in September, 1854, when the French at hand had only a squadron of irregulars. The Cavalry, indeed, was not properly used at the Alma; though it showed to advantage in the affair at the Buljanak the day before. Half of it was destroyed practically a month afterwards at Balaclava, and the other half was rendered inefficient and sent away before the winter was over. But that expedition afforded no measure at all of the demands a regularly conducted campaign would make upon the composition of an army. It is a mere truism to remark that the finest infantry and artillery in the world dare not march in an enemy's country in the face of an equally powerful and better-provided army, if they were destitute of cavalry to cover their front, guard their convoys, go in search of information, and, in fact, live with their eyes open. The Duke of Wellington was harassed for want of cavalry, and it may be fairly said that thousands of men were sacrificed and great results forbidden owing to the deficiency of that arm in the Peninsular War. Failing to obtain a sufficient force of horse at home, efforts were made to provide the Duke from abroad, and the admirable German sabreurs, whose services are recorded in the annals of the Peninsular War, imparted to our own troopers some of the qualities in which the latter were rather wanting, tempering their enthusiasm and temerity with steady, soldierlike discretion. The blot which Colonel Keith Fraser especially hits, however, is the unreadiness of such Cavalry as we have. He points out the unpleasant fact that we have got but 10,899 horses on our establishment for 15,956 men. As he observes, army corps, divisions, and brigades exist only on paper, and his analysis of the composition of each regiment of cavalry does not encourage us to expect that, even if the paper could become galvanised into life, the efficiency which ought to be certain would be at all attained in the field. "It is evident," says Colonel Fraser," that by taking every available animal, it would be barely possible to supply a sufficiency of horses for the Cavalry of one Army Corps. There is no reserve of horses." None whatever! Although there may not be anything new to those who are acquainted with the state of the Cavalry arm in our service in the facts stated so clearly and conclusively by Col. Fraser, the paper puts in a very striking way, so that all may read without special knowledge, the considerations which should impel the War Office to propose some amendments on the present system in preparing the estimates even for a paper army. India, which is our great field of service, furnishes the real cavalry complement to the infantry and artillery required in the field, as the contingent of British regiments is comparatively small. But as Lord Wolseley, quoted by Colonel Fraser, exclaims:—"Alas! for the army that is weak in cavalry." And we add:—"Alas! for the country that has a weak army and Ministers to match!" Officers of all arms can read Colonel Fraser's paper with great advantage, and we hope it will be taken to heart by all whom it concerns—a far larger number it may be than now turn their thoughts to the matter.

We understand Lieutenant-General Sir F. Maude has been offered the post of Director of Military Education, which becomes vacant on the completion of service of Lieutenant-General Sir B. Walker.

When the advanced politicians who are represented by the Pall Mall Gazette come into power we shall have fine times of it—an overwhelming Fleet, an effective Army, and swinging taxation. Last night our contemporary very properly rated the people who hoodwink Mr. Gladstone, and do Le Bœuf to our Napoleon; and the continuation of the able and interesting papers on our coaling ports, accompanied by a useful map of the Naval stations and colonial depôts, in our contemporary, winds up with a comprehensive scheme for the completion of telegraphic communications, the defence of stations, &c., which would be done, we think, for about £5,000,000 sterling, and might "be cheap at the money."

The uses of "luncheon" as an official institution are becoming, if not rapidly developed, more widely recognised in the services. We do not allude to the humble little meals which may be seen in transit on mouldy trays in the passages of Government offices between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. daily—the mutton chop under its battered tin cover, the mealy potato on its cracked throne, the modest pint-pot, mediæval mustard and pepper stands, borne by swift-footed myrmidons to the scenes of toil, where exhausted nature demands its daily bread,—no; these interpolations between breakfast and dinner play no great part in official life, though they contribute to official efficiency, and absorb a certain portion of public time. But the luncheon of a F.M.C.C., or an Inspector-General, or of a Lord of the Admiralty, on their travels is a serious, important, if not always wholesome function, playing a great part in the business of life. We never read of a field-day or an inspection by Sir Biley Bunkum, K.C.B., Commanding the X. Y., that we do not come upon the fact that "His Excellency was entertained after the inspection by Colonel Tadpole and the officers of the Ethiopian Rifles at an elegant luncheon, to which were invited," &c. How the Admiralty Lords can "stand" the luncheons they are taking just now is what no fellow with moderate digestion and appetite can understand. These are no light meals—no petits dejeuners—but substantial, many-coursed banquets, thought over with care each day by chefs and butlers, who seem animated by the best spirit towards their employers, and anxious to make things go off pleasantly, so that the hours after lunch and before dinner may be passed under benign influences.

The forthcoming inquiry into the conduct of a young officer of the 44th Regiment, at Aden, is likely to bring to light a rather extraordinary state of things, if all accounts be true. No such case has happily occurred for some years past. The last was in the 3rd Battalion, 60th Rifles, under Colonel Kennedy. In the present instance there appear to be faults on both sides.

Promotion in the Commissariat and Transport Staff is slow enough, yet, when there is an opportunity of giving a step, the most extraordinary delay ensues in filling up the vacancy. Deputy-Commissary-General Pigott retired in August last, and his successor has not yet been gazetted. As promotion to this rank is, according to Royal Warrant, entirely by selection, every Assistant-Commissary-General may indulge in the hope that he may be the chosen individual. If the officer to be promoted happens to be in the Tropics, the delay in gazetting him means a very serious pecuniary loss, as he can only draw the allowances of the higher rank from the date of the promulgation of his promotion at his station. Then, again, suppose the one selected should die before the Gazette appears, not only would his estate have lost the arrears of the higher rate of pay to which he would have been entitled had he lived, but, if he be a married man, his widow will be deprived for life of the difference between the widow's pension of a Lieutenant-Colonel and that of a Colonel.

The Government would feel greatly indebted, we hear, to any of the many counsellors who are inveighing against them for the want of a "bold and vigorous policy" in regard to Egypt and Russia in the East, who would sketch out a plan for execution by which the desired boldness and vigour could be effectively displayed without hazard to our friendly relations with Europe and to the public peace, and which would show how the march of Russia could be arrested without the employment of force or any great expenditure of money.

We must express the strongest doubts of the correctness of the statement in Truth that the Queen positively refused to allow General Lord Wolseley to avail himself of the services of Baker Pasha, and that her Majesty has intimated that her decision in the case is final and unalterable. We have reason for equal want of faith in the report of another contemporary, that the occult influence which bars Baker Pasha's re-employment is that of Mr. Gladstone. It was most certainly not the Queen who caused the Government to insist that Baker Pasha should be removed from the command of the Egyptian Army, when Lord Dufferin was in Egypt; but there is reason to think that Mr. Childers entertained strong opinions, and that he favoured and favours the doctrine of eternal punishment in Baker's case. When the unfortunate Pasha came home to be operated on for his terrible wound or its consequences, he was the object of widespread sympathy and interest. He was fêted by his old regiment, the 10th Hussars, to the inspection of which, at Shorncliffe, he accompanied its Colonel, and he was present at the regimental dinner. He was well received in general society, and it is stated, as an open secret, that the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, and Lord Hartington were among those who were in favour of his restoration to the British Army as a non-effective, so as not to affect the interests of officers on the Active List, which was the favour and grace he sought. His case was, we understand, referred to a Cabinet Council; and if there be a final decision upon it, the occult influences which prevailed against him were, we venture to say, not those alone of Mr. Gladstone—if, indeed, his influence was exerted in a hostile sense—or that of the Queen.

We wish the recruiting staff of the Sutherland Regiment would beat up for recruits among the 1,200 men, descendants of the crofters who, to their great benefit, were removed from Strathnaver seventy years ago, and that the Serjeants would see if they could not get some likely lads to join the colours, instead of marching up the glen, to come back again and lose a good day's work.

We advise our readers to look at the address at the top of every telegram they see in the London papers from North and South Africa, and to apply the following canons to enable them to form their judgment respecting the degree of credence to be attached to them. No. 1. Distrust a telegram from Alexandria with "news" from Cairo or places to the south of Cairo. No. 2. From the capital itself distrust all except official telegrams. No. 3. Telegrams from Assiout, Assouan, Wady Halfa, and Dongola may be trusted when they relate to events at the places whence they are sent, but all newspaper telegrams are under military control south of Assouan. No. 4. Full intelligence from places above the First Cataract can only be had by letter. No. 5. Distrust telegrams from the Cape relating to Bechuanaland, the Basutos, Angra Pequena, the Germans on the coast, and the natives. No. 6. Distrust telegrams from Durban generally, but especially withhold credence from those Natal telegrams which relate to the affairs in Zululand, the Transvaal, and the Orange River Free State, and await the text of another and official documents as a general rule.

Major-General J. I. Murray, C.B., succeeds Lieutenant-General Cureton, C.B., in command of the Lucknow Division of the Bengal Army, when the latter vacates.

We do not believe there is a vestige of truth in the assertion of the Pall Mall Gazette "that a letter of Zebehr Pasha was seized the other day, encouraging the Mahdi to fight to the last." In an interesting letter to the Pall Mall Gazette, a Cairo correspondent gives us some information, from the lips of a Greek merchant, about affairs at Khartoum and El Obeid, at the latter of which places he spent last year. The news altogether is, if true, not pleasant. Gordon holds Khartoum with slaves bought at £20 apiece. He made a great mistake in sending away the Bashi-Bazouks from Khartoum, at all events, as these brave fellows died at Berber to the last man fighting for the Khedive. Gordon, it seems, treats all the natives as enemies, for in his expedition he destroys the water-wheels and uses the wood, which is very scarce, as fuel for his steamers. That means no crops and absolute starvation this autumn and next year, and the cessation of life and labour in the district ravaged. The Greek states that there is no "Vizetelly" or "O'Donovan" at El Obeid. The Mahdi has now 40 guns and 10,000 men armed with Remingtons, but at least 100,000 men will answer to his call in Darfour, Kordofan, &c., if he be attacked. He has 5,000 well-mounted cavalry, but they would be more than tripled if he summoned the Darkamar and Darkamet tribes. Perhaps the Mahdi will remain quiet if let alone. He will resist fiercely if attacked, for he does not like being smashed.

The time has gone by—if it ever was at all—for a newspaper in the position of the Times to declare to the world that "India was won by the sword, and must be kept by the sword." If it were true, it would not be wise to proclaim it. But it is false. India was not won by the sword. It was won partly by treaty, partly by alliance, partly by civil war—in one or other of which we took sides—partly by direct conquest; but in no case were our troops alone. They were helped by allies or by native levies, even in the suppression of the Mutiny of 1857-8, and the reports of the British officers quoted in the interesting work referred to by the Pall Mall this week, state that there is a large proportion of loyal natives who need no sword to secure their fealty.

There is an outcry from "old colonists," "other old colonists," and the "oldest colonists," we suppose, cry loudest, because the Germans are settling themselves in more ways than one at Angra Pequena, and their cousins the Boers are land-grabbing in Bechuanaland and Zululand. The cry at home seems to be,—"Colonists, aid yourselves, and then you will not want our aid at all." But truly we can do little. There are no men to spare. In the Cape command there is one battery Royal Artillery, one company Royal Engineers, and seven companies of the 2nd Battalion, Northamptonshire Regiment. In Natal there is one regiment of cavalry, the Carabiniers, one battery Royal Artillery, the 2nd South Lancashire, five companies of the 1st Battalion, Welsh Regiment, and one battalion Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders.

Commanding officers, whose battalions are clothed in the experimental Active Service Uniform, have been ordered to forward reports on the clothing to Army Head-quarters, without delay, particularly as to whether it has (1) worn well; (2) kept its colour; and (3) is inconspicuous. The garment speaks for itself. It is already unserviceable, and ought to be unequivocally condemned; and none are more dissatisfied with this convict-like garb than those who are compelled to wear it.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Oct. 10, 1884.

Royal Marine Artillery.—The promotion of Capt. R. H. Alexander to his present rank, notified in the Gazette dated July 22, 1884, is antedated to May 21, 1884, vice Tucker, specially promoted.

T. J. Quick, W. R. Boxhall, and J. Jerome have been awarded the Greenwich Hospital pension of £25 a year each from May 19, 1884, in accordance with the provisions of the same date.

Assistance, Capt. St. Clair, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday from Portsmouth, and embarked military drafts of about 200 of various ranks, for conveyance to Greenock and Queenstown. She is expected to return to Plymouth to-day (Saturday).

Bellerophon will, according to Admiralty orders, be brought forward for completion at Devonport. Each of her batteries is to be fitted for the armament of ten 8-inch breech-loading guns, mounted on the Vavasseur principle.

Cambridge, gunnery-ship at Devonport, Capt. G. S. Bosanquet, was inspected on Tuesday by the Naval Commander-in-Chief, Sir W. Houston Stewart, K.C.B.; after which he inspected the Gorgon, Sabrina, Plucky, and Bullfrog.

Collingwood is being pushed forward at Portsmouth with all possible speed, in order that she may make a trial of her gun-gear. The ordnance screw steamer Panmure has brought to Portsmouth, from Woolwich Arsenal, a couple of 43-ton breech-loading guns for the Collingwood.

Dreadnought, Capt. the Hon. Edmund R. Fremantle, hoisted the pennant at Portsmouth on Tuesday morning. She is intended to relieve the Inflexible in the Mediterranean Squadron, though a month will probably pass before she takes her departure. The Dreadnought was launched at Pembroke on March 8, 1875, and was sent round to Portsmouth on Oct. 9 in the following year to complete for sea. Though a sister-ship to the Devastation and the Thunderer, she marks a great step in advance, several important improvements having been introduced, in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee on Designs. In bringing her forecastle and after-deck up flush with the breastwork, not only has the objectionable cul-de-sac been removed, but the accruing freeboard has made her a drier ship, and greatly improved her seaworthiness. The space in the citadel has also been greatly increased by bringing out the armour flush with the sides. Mr. Barnaby also introduced an important structural alteration in erecting a watertight bulkhead between the sets of engines and boilers, so that in the event of one set being disabled by torpedoes, ram, or shot, it can be effectually shut off, and the other set used to propel the ship. This principle is now generally adopted in all twin-screw ships. The Dreadnought is a larger and more powerful vessel than either of her sisters. The armour tapers from 8 in. to 14 in., and goes 7½ in. further below the water-line than the protection of the Thunderer. The turrets are arranged along the middle line, and are armoured to the uniform thickness of 14 in. She carries four 38-ton guns. These are loaded and worked by hydraulic gear, but the turrets themselves are rotated by steam. The engines are by Messrs. Humphrys and Tennant, and at the six hours' trial developed 8,216·28 horses (the contract being for 8,000), while the ship in her then condition realised a speed of 14½ knots. The bunker capacity is capable of storing 6,192·2 cubic feet, the furnaces consuming, when the engines are under full power, 2·27 lb. of coal per unit of power developed. Pymr. T. N. Firth, R.N., has been selected for service in this ship. He was attached to the Staff of the principal transport officer to the Abyssinian Expedition, and in 1871 was officially thanked for his services in connection with the transport of provisions for the relief of Paris.

Dryad, Com. E. J. Hulton, arrived in Sheerness Harbour on Monday from Bombay—last from Plymouth. The Dryad, which is to be put out of commission, hoisted the pennant at Devonport on Dec. 18, 1879, and was re-commissioned at Zanzibar at the end of last year for three years' service on the East Indies station. Owing, however, as previously stated, to the defective condition of her hull, it was considered advisable to send her home to England before the completion of her commission. The Dryad was officially inspected on Tuesday; she will be taken into the steam basin, and when she has discharged her ammunition is to be dismantled. Her crew will turn over to the Kingfisher, now fitting for sea at Sheerness.

Fantôme, Com. S. L. Osborne, arrived at Bermuda from Halifax on Sept. 23, to be docked.

Flamingo, Com. R. N. Custance, sailed from Bermuda on the 16th inst. for Devonport.

Hecate has been taken in dock at Devonport for repairs and refitment, preparatory to active service.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, arrived in Portsmouth Harbour on Monday from Bombay, whence she had brought three officers and 21 men of the East Surrey Regt., besides 24 women and 43 children. From Malta she gave passage to one officer and 35 non-commissioned officers and men, drafts from several regiments, with 29 wives and 47 children, and from Gibraltar a warrant officer and two privates, a soldier's wife, and three children. She left Plymouth in June with the 2nd South Lancashire Regt. for Durban, and drafts of the Northampton Regt. for Cape Town. She was then ordered to Bombay, and conveyed to Suez the 2nd Batn. East Surrey Regt., bringing their wives and families to England. Two deaths occurred during the passage, a child and Private J. G. Symonds, of the East Surrey Regt., from dysentery, in the Red Sea, on Sept. 21. The Himalaya proceeded to Plymouth Sound, where she arrived on Tuesday night, and was afterwards docked.

Lily, Com. Gibson, made a preliminary trial of her machinery on Monday, outside Plymouth Breakwater. The vessel was in charge of her own commander, the Steam Reserve being represented by Mr. Bird, chief engineer, and the steam branch of the dockyard by Mr. Fowler. The results of the trial were as follows:—Draught of water, forward, 10·3, aft, 13·7; steam in boilers, 60·5 lb.; vacuum in condensers, 24·25; revolutions, 116·5; indicated horse-power in high-pressure engine, 418, low 398—total, 816; speed by log, 10·8 knots. The trial proved very satisfactory, and the Lily was about to return to harbour when a defect was discovered in the main feed engine for the supply of water to the boilers. Orders were immediately given to blow off the steam and to drown the fires, and Com. Gibson on being apprised of the mishap, at once signalled the fact to Admiral Sir Houston Stewart at Mount Wise. At the same time all hands were called to make sail, and in a remarkable short time all plain sail was set. This was done with such smartness as to reflect the greatest credit on all on board, especially when it is considered that this was the first time sail had been made in the ship by her new complement of officers and men. The Lily continued under sail until the defects in the feed pump were made good, when sail was shortened, and she proceeded into Plymouth Sound to moorings. On Wednesday the vessel was taken outside Plymouth Breakwater for her three hours' full-speed trial, with the following results:—Draught of water, forward, 10 ft. 6 in., aft, 13 ft. 7 in.; steam in boilers, 63 lb.; vacuum in condensers, 25·1; mean pressure, high, 38·7 lb., low, 12·1 lb.; indicated horse-power, high, 442, low, 405; total, 847; speed by patent log, 11·3 knots. There were no hot bearings or priming of the boilers; there was a good supply of steam, and the stokehole was well ventilated. The trial was considered in every respect satisfactory. The vessel was in charge of Com. Fortescue, of the Steam Reserve. The machinery was in charge of Mr. O. N. Brooker, Chief Inspector of Machinery, of the Steam Reserve, assisted by the chief engineer of the ship, Mr. R. T. Rundle; and the steam branch of the dockyard was represented by Mr. D. Rudd.

Mariner, at Devonport, has been completed in her engine fitments, and turned over to the dockyard authorities, the contractors, Messrs. Hawthorne and Co., having fulfilled the condition of their contract.

Neptune, Capt. Maxwell, left Portsmouth Harbour on Wednesday morning, having completed her refit, and anchored at Spithead. She subsequently took on board ammunition and shell.

Northumberland, Capt. Robinson, and the Achilles, Capt. Buller, were moved out of Plymouth Harbour and into the Sound on Wednesday, to complete for sea.

Orontes, Capt. Andoe, arrived at Trinadad on the 12th inst., and afterwards proceeded to Jamaica.

Rapid, Capt. Campbell, C.B., left Plymouth on Tuesday for the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station. She is to call at Madeira.

Rifleman, Com. P. H. W. Mayow, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Saturday night from the South-East Coast of America. She was commissioned at Sheerness on Jan. 18, 1881. After coaling, she proceeded to Sheerness to pay off, having been relieved by the Ready, which left the Medway last June.

Royal Adelaide, flagship at Devonport, was inspected by Admiral Sir W. Houston Stewart, K.C.B., on Monday.

Starling, Lieut. and Com. Francis W. Sanders, refitting at Sheerness, is ordered to be ready for sea as soon as possible, for service with the Channel Squadron.

Sultan, Capt. Tracey, left Portsmouth Harbour on Wednesday, after completing refit, and anchored at Spithead, where she took on board ammunition and shell.

Tourmaline, Capt. R. H. Boyle, arrived at Malta on the 8th inst. from the East Indies station, and proceeded to Gibraltar on her voyage to Devonport.

Triton, Staff Com. Tizard, attached to the Duncan, flagship of Vice-Admiral Edward Brydges Rice, C.B., having completed her surveying duties for the season, will be placed in the First Division of the Medway Steam Reserve until next April. The Triton left Sheerness in May last, and has been employed throughout the summer in the preparation of new charts of the English and Scottish coasts in the Nore district, which extends from Dover to the Firth of Forth.

Watchful, Lieut.-Com. J. E. C. Goodrich, arrived at St. Vincent, Cape de Verde Islands, on the 25th ult., from Madeira, en route to the West Coast of Africa. She left Madeira on the 18th ult., and accordingly made a rapid passage—for a gun-vessel—to St. Vincent. Her orders on leaving England were to complete with coal at the latter place and proceed to Sierra Leone; but on her arrival at St. Vincent, telegraphic orders were received from the Admiralty directing her to proceed direct to Cape Coast Castle, fever being prevalent at Sierra Leone. At both Madeira and St. Vincent the Watchful was placed in quarantine by the Portuguese authorities, on account of having arrived from Europe.

Wye, Staff Com. A. W. Miller, refitting at Sheerness, is ordered to be ready to leave England next Thursday for the West Indies. She will take out a new crew to the Mallard, gunboat, which was commissioned at Devonport in March, 1881. She also takes out a number of supernumeraries for that station, and will return with the paid-off crews, time-expired men, and invalids.

The under-mentioned men have been awarded the medal for long-service and good-conduct:—Frederick E. Gardner, plumber, of the Asia; Charles L. French, chief gunner's mate, of the Defence; Frederick John Evea, gunner's mate, of the Cambridge; Stephen Barkell, leading stoker, of the Indus; William Glover, armourer, of the Belleisle; Joseph William Born, 1st-class domestic, of the Shannon; John Thomas Sherey, quartermaster, of the Minotaur; William H. Heard, 2nd-class coxswain, of the Neptune; George H. Roberts, signalman, of the Inflexible; Samuel Symonds, chief boatswain's mate, of the Temeraire; Lorenza Bezzina, ward-room steward, of the Alexandra; J. Sullivan, chief gunner's mate, of the Hibernia; Harry Geake, engine-room artificer, of the Inflexible; Henry J. Pitts, coxswain, 2nd class, of the Garnet; J. Lennox, boatswain, J. Pink, commissioned boatman, and Charles Tree, boatman, of the Coastguard.

The following movements of her Majesty's Fleet in the Mediterranean and Red Sea have been received by the Admiralty:—Admiral Lord John Hay was at Alexandria on the 15th inst., with his flag in the Helicon. The Invincible arrived at Alexandria on the 15th inst. from Larnaca. The Inflexible and the Helicon were to follow. The Temeraire is going to Port Said, and the Superb to Smyrna. The Sphinx and the Humber were at Suez on the 2nd inst. The Carysfort, the Tyne, the Albacore, and the Cygnet were at Suakim on the 2nd inst. The Condor and the Dolphin were at Massowah on the 2nd inst.

THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The condition into which the Militia had been allowed to fall in the years immediately preceding 1853 has been compared to a "few dry bones." It may be added that at the voice of Parliament these dry bones sprang into life, and presented an array of 80,000 carefully selected men, organised, armed, and equipped. This was effected by the gratuitous exertions of the lieutenants and deputy-lieutenants of counties, and of county and borough magistrates. At their invitation, candidates for enrolment crowded to the court-houses and other appointed places. So many volunteers presented themselves that the ballot was not needed, and no difficulty was experienced in selecting young men of good physique. Lads like those now enlisting into the Army would not have been accepted. At that time the disembodied Militia was a civil force, constitutional in every respect. It was formed for defensive purposes, though able to aid powerfully in active operations by the enlistment of individuals, by replacing troops sent abroad, and by the volunteering of regiments for foreign service. But by the Acts of 1871, 1872, and 1873 the force has been deprived of its constitutional character, the enrolled militiaman has become an enlisted soldier, and the Militia has been perverted into a kind of standing army, maintained in time of peace in disregard of the principles of the Constitution. Much of this might have been amended, but in 1876 an irreparable error was committed. The Militia regiments were deprived of their county head-quarters, and their permanent staffs were moved into the new brigade depôts, at which the accommodation assigned to them was totally inadequate. The old regimental head-quarters, which had been erected on the requisition of the Government, at the expense of the counties, were sold and converted to other purposes, and hopelessly lost to the country. It is remarkable how quickly the Militia has decayed and fallen in popular estimation since its officers have been reduced to nonentities, and the service placed under the management of officers of the Army. Last week a venerable and much-read comic paper aped the friskiness of youth to aim a feeble kick at the dying lion. I know that all our late false steps cannot be retraced, but permit me to attempt to sketch in a few words a plan by which the Militia might regain its ancient importance, and become the basis of a military force adequate for the requirements of the country :—1. Remove the disembodied Militia from the control of the Horse Guards, reserving to the Secretary for War authority to place the regiments while out for training under the command of the generals of districts, but for the purpose of instruction only. 2. Place at the head of the Militia Department at the War Office an inspector-general of long service and great experience in the Militia. 3. Dissolve the present ill-devised amalgamation of Regular and Militia battalions into territorial regiments. 4. Extend the period of Line service with the colours, and encourage men on leaving the Army to join the Militia. Do not sacrifice the active Army in the hope of getting a reserve. The Militia should be the real reserve. I differ from those Militia officers who advocate the abolition of the Militia reserve. Every battalion, embodied or disembodied, should hold at least one-fourth of its established strength in readiness to join the Army at a few days' notice. Few regiments would experience any difficulty in filling the vacancies caused by the departure of these men if bounties were given on enrolment. 5. Concentrate the depôts of battalions of the Line into half the number of the depôt barracks which are at present occupied by the Line and the Militia in common, and devote the rest of these establishments to the accommodation of the Militia. By this arrangement there would be in each county one or more depôt barracks for the Army, and the same number for the Militia. 6. Each Militia regiment should be of three battalions, with one full colonel. The colonel should receive command money during the year, but need not necessarily be on pay or liable to be called out for training or embodied service. His functions would be confined principally to the non-training period, and he would have the general supervision of the regiment, and be the medium of communication between the Secretary of State and the battalions. 7. An officer of each battalion should be appointed to be its adjutant, and allowed to hold the office for three or five years, but not longer. The hope of getting this appointment would induce many retired Army officers to join the Militia. 8. Militia regiments recruiting in the islands and Highlands of Scotland and other littoral districts might be converted into Marine Militia, liable to serve when embodied at sea as well as on land. A British ship is said to be British territory, and seafaring men would as soon pass their period of service at sea as on shore. I invite the attention of Naval and Marine officers to this suggestion. 9. Lastly, enrol all men of suitable age throughout the country into a local Militia, liable to be called on during war to supply by ballot recruits for the regular Militia. Every public park, common, or village green might on summer evenings be the drill-ground of a battalion, company, or section of local Militia. If prevailing prejudices did not interfere, Sunday afternoon might be conveniently utilised for drills, and for rifle practice at moderate ranges at small targets. The most numerous class of exemptions from this enrolment would be the efficient members of established Volunteer corps, as these men have, in theory, been trained and equipped at their own expense. The facts should be recognised that infantry soldiers may be quite efficient without being subjected to continuous service, and that it would be impossible to keep constantly on pay the enormous force that would be required to oppose the huge hosts that may threaten our shores. The conditions of the Militia service are, or used to be, popular in the country, while those of the Army, involving expatriation and the monotony of continuous service, never have been liked by Englishmen. We must, therefore, depend on the Militia, i.e., on a well-trained force of infantry permitted, when the country is at peace, to follow civil occupations during the greater part of the year. By thus making the Militia the basis of our military system, and by restricting the Army, Militia, and Volunteers each to its appropriate functions, I believe that the "harmonious whole" might be attained for which Lord Cardwell vainly sought.—I am, &c.,

Ex-Linesman and Militia Commandant.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—With reference to the last letter I addressed to you on the subject of Militia reorganisation, and to your criticisms on some of my statements, I venture to crave your indulgence to allow me once more to trespass on your valuable space in order to reply as briefly as possible to your objections and remarks. With regard to the last "What are these ?" (the legitimate duties of the Militia) "and what is the organisation to be ?" I am quite prepared to enter fully into the subject, but it would occupy a greater space in your valuable journal than I am inclined to think you would feel justified in giving up to an obscure and chance correspondent. I will, therefore, briefly remark en passant that I would propose giving the country, as far as circumstances would admit, an army for home defence similar to the German Landwehr, or to the Militia of Switzerland, and, like them, always ready and able to enter upon its duties. With regard to your second question, "Why now, more than formerly ?" to my passing statement about the condition of the Army, I think you have misunderstood me; I meant that without the recruits it draws from the Militia, the Army would be in a worse condition than it is in now. Formerly—that is, before the days of Militia—the Army had no difficulty in finding recruits. Coming to your remarks, "We cannot agree with our correspondent;" "the Duke of Cambridge, we venture to say, never expressed the opinion attributed to him," which relate to my statement, that the Militia are sneered at by the Army, and that Militia officers are held to be "mere civilians," even by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief. I wish it to be clearly understood that I had not the smallest intention of using the term "sneered at" offensively, or in the sense of to despise. I meant simply that the Army quite understands the position assigned to the Militia, which they do not recognise as that of soldiers ; and also that in saying Militia officers are held to be "mere civilians," even by H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief, it was not with the least intention of showing disrespect towards the Duke of Cambridge, but only to state a fact in support of my contention ; for it is within my knowledge that an officer commanding a brigade depôt was once censured by the Commander-in-Chief for employing a Militia officer, who was termed in the official letter "a mere civilian," in a military capacity ; and very properly, because under existing regulations Militia officers have no military status, and to employ them on duties connected with the Army is irregular, if not illegal. And here, I maintain, lies the absurdity. A sort of military character is given to the Militia, it is nominally incorporated into the Army, and dubbed second or third battalions of Line regiments ; at the same time, when called up for duty the colonel has no military authority outside his own regiment, not even over a subaltern in charge of detachment of Regulars who might be quartered in the same barracks with him. But the subaltern would have authority over the militiamen. He might be appointed adjutant, paymaster, or instructor of musketry to the Militia battalion, or he might sit on a court-martial to try militiamen, in which case he would be senior to any Militia subaltern sitting as a member of the same court ; whereas in no case could a Militia officer be a member of a court-martial to try soldiers. Therefore I maintain that my contention, that the Militia is a sham military service, kept up only to provide recruits for the Army, and that its officers are held to be "mere civilians," is correct, and that to this cause must be traced the want of officers in the force.—I am, &c.,

A telegram from Panama announces that a party of rebels seized the British tugboat Morro on the 14th inst., and compelled the captain to tow them to Costa Rica. The steamer Alajuela was also captured by rebels, who put to sea in her on the following day. The Government thereupon seized the Morro, and sent her on an expedition in pursuit of the Alajuela. On coming up with her an engagement took place, during which the Morro was rammed and forced to return. Several of those on board her were killed and wounded, but the loss of the rebels, who escaped, is unknown. On Thursday the British ensign on the Morro was hauled down, and the Colombian flag hoisted in its place. The foreign residents at Panama denounced this step as an insult to Great Britain, but were powerless in the matter, as no British war vessel is on the spot.

A large draft of boys was sent from the Impregnable and Lion, training-ships at Devonport, to the Agincourt and Achilles on Saturday, to fill up the vacancies caused by the ordinary seamen sent from those ships to the Royal Adelaide to be drafted to ships about to be recommissioned on foreign stations. A similar draft was sent to the Northumberland on Monday.

The Governors of Wellington College have issued a report for the year ending Dec. 31 last. They state that during the year 1883, the average number of foundationers being educated at the College was 80, the number on Dec. 31, 1883, being 83; that the number of non-foundationers attending the College during the like period was 346, of whom 266 were admitted at the full rate of charge, and 80 were admitted at the reduced rate of £80 per annum. The number of boys on the foundation has been increased from 82 to 83. During the past year extensive works have been carried out for improving the water supply and the sewage arrangements of the College, it having been found on inquiry that some of the sewers were defective, and that the water supply had to some extent become contaminated. The works were carried out under the direction of Mr. Baldwin Latham, C.E., at a cost of over £12,000. Appended to the report are accounts showing the revenue and expenditure of the College for the year ending 1883, the profit and loss, the assets and liabilities, and other details of the general financial working of the school.

The Jumna will arrive in Bombay on April 9 with drafts, and will sail for England on April 19 with invalids and time-expired men.

THE ITALIAN CEMETERY IN THE CRIMEA.

If the admission of Piedmont to the Paris Congress was the first ostensible act of Count Cavour's Policy, by which the Italian Risorgimento was to be obtained, the Piedmontese soldiers killed in the Crimea were the precursors of those who fell at Palestro, Montebello, and San Martin, thus consecrating by their death their native land's independence. Gen. La Marmora, before leaving the Crimea, erected on the heights of Balaclava a small monument to the memory of Gen. Alessandro La Marmora, his brother, Gens. Gabrielli di Montevecchio and Ansaldi, and the other officers killed in that long campaign. Walls were also built round the spots where the soldiers who had fallen during the action, or had been stricken down by cholera, were buried. The Italian Government wish now Italy is great and free, that a more lasting and fitting monument should be consecrated to the remains of her sons. Major Ghiradini, of the Engineers, was entrusted with the work, and the spot chosen for it was a small height near Kamari, at about ten miles from Sebastopol. It consists of a chapel in the Gothic-Lombard style, surrounded with marble stones, on which are engraved the names of the dead.

It is announced this morning, says the Pall Mall Gazette of Oct. 11, that the Russian ironclads, the Vladimir Monomach and the General-Admiral, leave Cronstadt to-day or to-morrow for the Pacific. This is serious news. The Vladimir Monomach is one of the newest ships in the Russian Navy. It has a displacement of 5,750 tons, a plating of 7-in. armour, and carries six 6-in. guns. The General-Admiral has a displacement of 4,600 tons, 6-in. armour, and carries four 8-in. and two 6-in. guns. These ships could overpower our fleet in the Chinese seas, burn Hong Kong, levy a couple of millions indemnity from Singapore, then go across the Pacific and destroy our coaling station at Vancouver Island. Of course, there is no reason to suppose that they will do any of these things, but it is clear that the Agamemnon was not commissioned a day too soon.

A Press Association telegram says :—"The Foreign Office have received from Major Kitchener some news which he had obtained from Debbeh, which, if correct, would place beyond doubt that Col. Stewart is alive. Major Kitchener reports that his runners have come in with details of the massacre. One of the runners spoke with a survivor, who stated that the Greek Consul at Khartoum was in command of the steamer, and it is considered that if Col. Stewart had been on board he would have held that position."

The Flora, Rear-Admiral Salmon, was in Simon's Bay on Sept. 24. The Boadicea was to return to Simon's Bay on the 4th inst. The Opal, at Anno Bom on Aug. 3, cruising to the southward, was to proceed to Ascension and St. Helena. The Stork would probably accompany the Opal, and on being relieved by the Watchful, would proceed to the South-east Coast of America. The Frolic left Table Bay on the 3rd ult. to join the Opal, and accompany her to the West Coast. The Alecto was on the Gold Coast, and would take her Majesty's Consul up the Niger about the middle of September. The Forward was at Ambas Bay on Aug. 11, and would remain in the Bights. The Flirt was at Benin on Aug. 11 ; was to proceed to the southward, and then to St. Helena and Ascension.

Headaches and Disordered Stomach.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, Robert Humphreys, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions in Sixteen Languages, —How to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

THE ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY (Established 1823),
affords Mutual Assurance with Perfect Security without Individual Liability.

The Funds now amount to £3,619,661, and Annual Income to £377,000.

The Directors having carefully revised their rates for non-participating assurances, Policies may now be effected at proportionately low rates of premium, Without Profits.

The attention of those who desire to effect Policies, at the lowest present cost, is invited to the Society's New Prospectus.

BONUS POLICIES.

Rates of Premium.—From 9 to 26 per cent. less than those charged by other Life Offices.

Results of Economical Management.—Large Bonuses have been declared. Instances are on record of Policies having been trebled by Bonuses.

Division of Profits.—By the mode of dividing the profits, Policies are not only valuable as a provision in case of early death, but become increasingly valuable as an investment in old age.

SPECIMENS of POLICIES in FORCE at VALUATION, 1883:—

Policy effect'd in the Year	Age at Entry	Sum originally Assured.	Bonus to 1883, inclusive.	Total Sum Assured.	Per-centage of Bonus on Premiums Paid.			Surrender Value of Policy and Bonus.			Equivalent Free Policy, inc. Bonus to Dec. 31, 1883.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Sores, wounds, ulcerations, and other diseases affecting the skin, are amendable by this cooling and healing Ointment. It has called forth the loudest praise from persons who have suffered for years from bad legs, abscesses, and chronic ulcers, after every hope of cure has long passed away. None but those who have experienced the soothing effect of this Ointment can form an idea of the comfort it bestows, by restraining inflammation and allaying pain. Whenever this Ointment has been once used, it has established its own worth, and has again been eagerly sought for, as the easiest and safest remedy for all ulcerous complaints. In neuralgia, rheumatism, and gout, the same application, properly used, gives wonderful relief.

Courses for all Examinations now proceeding.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS. — LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA PREPARING for the MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath, whose pupils for some years past have continuously maintained a steady average of success, second to none. This year fifteen have been sent up, seven of whom have passed; four in March (one taking first place on the list), and three at the recent Examination. Very few pupils are taken, and there are two resident Military Instructors of high qualifications constantly at work, with a third in reserve in case of pressure. Thus very great individual attention is guaranteed, and the system of lecturing classes entirely avoided. Batcombe is a country village, near no town, but affording opportunity for shooting and other healthy amusements in moderation. References are permitted to the Earl of Harewood, Sir John Adye, G.C.B., General Elmhirst, C.B., General Thompson (late 7th Dragoon Guards), Colonel A. H. King, R.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, the Bishop of Bedford, and many others, all parents or near relatives of successful pupils.

JERSEY HIGH SCHOOL for GIRLS (Limited).

PATRONS.

The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of WINCHESTER.

Head Mistress—Miss M. E. POPE,

Certificate of London University General Examination for Women, with honours, and distinction in French, Scholar of Girton College, Cambridge, and Second-Class Natural Science Tripos in the University of Cambridge.

This School has been established for the purpose of giving a high-class education, on the principles of the Church of England. The school buildings are situated in a healthy suburb of St. Helier's, near the sea. The climate of Jersey is mild and healthy. Special facilities are provided for the acquisition of the French language. Ordinary fees—board (washing included), sixteen guineas per term; tuition, three, four, and five guineas per term.—Application for prospectuses may be made to the Secretary, R. CREWS, Esq., Wyvil House, Georgetown, Jersey

ARMY EXAMINATIONS.—PREPARATION in FRANCE. — M. D. I. COWLES, M.A., Oxford, and Mr. W. H. RUSTON, M.A. (18th Wrangler), late Senior Assistant-Master of the Oxford Military College, RECEIVE PUPILS at the CHATEAU de la SALLE, Montreuil-Bellay, near Saumur. Special arrangements for receiving Students from the Universities and Public Schools during Vacations.

A MEDICAL MAN of considerable experience, whose wife is very fond of children, is willing to receive into his house TWO or THREE YOUNG CHILDREN whose parents may be going abroad. References will be given and required.—Address, "A. B. C.," care of LIBRARIAN, St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

HINDUSTANI TAUGHT, Cito, Tuto, Jucunde. Officers prepared for Examinations. Correct Idiom guaranteed.—PUNDIT, 7 Beechholme Road, Clapton.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

At the six Militia Competitions which have taken place since September 1, 1881, Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured for their Pupils FORTY-NINE COMMISSIONS, although they have only Prepared and sent up a very Limited Number of Candidates. In the March, 1884, Examination, out of SIXTEEN SENT UP, TEN PUPILS succeeded; one other was two places out, and three more within a few places of being successful. Lieutenant C. J. Stanton took the SECOND PLACE at this Examination, with 2,083 marks.

At the Militia Literary Examinations during the same period, a Number of Pupils have also passed; in this Competition the FIRST PLACE was taken in April, 1883, by Lieutenant Lord Skelmersdale, and the SECOND PLACE in the following October Examination by the only candidate sent up, Lieutenant the Honourable Victor A. Pelham.

At the WOOLWICH EXAMINATION held last winter Mr. W. V. Scudamore passed SIXTEENTH on the list. This candidate made very high marks in languages.

At the recent WOOLWICH and SANDHURST Examinations NINE PUPILS competed, and EIGHT CADETSHIPS were obtained (one Woolwich, seven Sandhurst); Mr. H. D. Radcliffe taking SIXTH PLACE on the Infantry list for Sandhurst, with 7,308 marks, and making the highest score of any candidate in German—1,855 marks out of 2,000. At the Sandhurst Further also, the qualifying Militia Examination was passed by Lieutenants Lord Athlumney and A. R. Warren; making a total of TEN successes for ELEVEN candidates sent up.

For the Staff College, Captains G. F. C. Mackenzie and C. E. de la P. Beresford have been successful; no other candidates sent up.

The general score now amounts to ONE HUNDRED AND SIX SUCCESSES, obtained by Pupils since September 1, 1881.

The List for SEPTEMBER MILITIA COMPETITIVE, just published, shows that Colonels WILKINSON and SHAW have again passed TEN out of SIXTEEN Candidates sent up by them.

Address, DARMSTADT, GERMANY.

From A. H. MACARTNEY, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. SHUBRICK, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No. 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

THE KHARTOUM EXPEDITION.

The special correspondent of the Morning Post, writing from Cairo on Oct. 7, says:—"Our position advances so rapidly in this country that it is difficult to send you a letter which will bear the stamp of freshness on arrival. Still, a general survey of the situation, both military and political, here will put you more au courant with what is really being done than it is possible with any amount of telegraphing. The incessant tide of supplies flows into Alexandria from England at such a pace that the rolling stock on the line to Assiout is taxed far beyond its powers. To make matters worse, the whole of last week was devoted to the Feast of Bairam, and, in spite of the very high wages they are receiving, almost all the native labourers refused to work. Consequently there are now hundreds of loaded trucks standing still at Assiout, causing a complete block. Beyond that again, the want of many more towing steamers is most severely felt. There are more commissariat supplies being sent out than were ordered for the whole campaign of 1882, and it is said that Lord Wolseley has decided not to make a general advance from Dongola until these are amassed at the base, Semneh, 50 miles above the Second Cataract, in sufficient quantities to keep the whole force provided for six months. So great is the lesson learnt by the break-down of the transport of 1882. Large consignments of dynamite, nitro-glycerine, and gun-cotton are being sent up to blow up, if necessary, some of the most obnoxious rocks, but great consideration will be required not to make too free use of this powerful aid for fear of altering the Nile's level, and so preventing its permeating to its present extent the adjacent lands. No more camels are to be bought here, as Sir Evelyn Wood finds plenty south of Assouan at scarcely higher prices, and without the expense and trouble of conveying them from here, and Col. Colville is buying large numbers at Dongola. No horses are to be used, and all the mules already sent are to be returned as useless, and merely eating up valuable forage. The Camel Corps is a brilliant idea; besides its use and adaptability, it fulfils a twofold object—the employment of the animals of the country, and the enrichment of their owners; and by taking officers and men from 27 different regiments, the interest in this country is awakened, and enthusiasm spread in our grand projects far and wide all over the Empire. It is pretty apparent now that it will be our mainstay beyond Dongola, leaving the infantry there as a moral support.* For now that Gen. Gordon has captured Berber, the road to Khartoum, from Suakim to Dongola, is quite open and safe. Immense labour and loss of life will be saved, and not a shot fired, because from Dongola to Shendy is the most difficult part of the river, and the Camel Corps and Mounted Infantry can avoid that entirely, by striking direct across the mis-named Bahiuda Desert in six days to Shendy. There are plenty of wells for every day by this route. According to the report of the Intelligence Department it is well cultivated, and abounds in herds of goats, sheep, and camels. So the boats will not be required beyond Dongola or Ambukol. Some critics disagree with Mr. Stanley, and say that the lugger sails supplied to them are far too small for the Nile. Probably he is the best judge. Anyhow, the 1st Sussex Regt. and Mounted Infantry have made a capital voyage to Dongola in the native craft. By leaving the entire 'Wooden' army of 7,000 men here, and 3,000 of our troops with the complete head-quarters' staff, the hold on Lower Egypt is secure. This, of course, causes some soreness and heart-burning, as the whole preliminary work of placing the expedition on the stocks has been done here, in addition to the ordinary work, and now it is very hard for the staff to be entirely supplanted from England, and left behind here to watch the new comers reaping the fruit of the toil. But they must be patriotic, and console themselves by reflecting how valuable they are here, knowing all the duties of the garrison, which, of course, could not have been left without proper heads. A large number of Sir Evelyn Wood's officers are being employed at work along the route, but will not be taken beyond Semneh, whither the 30 miles of railway from Wady Halfa is to be continued for another 17 miles on the foundation of the abandoned line from Khartoum to Cairo. The Government having agreed to Lord Wolseley's stipulation of having carte blanche on assuming command, nothing is being spared to render the expedition the most complete in every way that it assuredly will be. Money is being literally scattered broadcast on the waters; let us hope that we shall find it again, after not so very many days, in the shape of the substantial revenues of this magnificent country, and having secured the fealty and popularity of all classes. There is one thing that even they are at a loss to find fault with, that is the exemplary conduct of our army throughout the occupation. It is most pleasing and satisfactory. To encourage this and to show how highly appreciated it is, Gen. Sir Frederick Stephenson and Gen. Dormer have themselves seen to the comfort of our soldiers by establishing clubs and organising all kinds of amusements and entertainments, in which officers have taken part. No recognition has yet been made to Mr. Cook for his extreme liberality towards the 'Tommies.' He has done everything in his power for them; insisted on subscribing very largely to their clubs, furnished them, and during the fever times took steamboats carrying 200 to 300 at a time up to the First Cataract and back, six weeks' trips, at cost price, by which he is £4,000 out of pocket. Too high praise cannot be bestowed on him and on all ranks for uniting in gaining the respect of the natives, with whom they really get on admirably. The man who is already looked upon, and will make the best governor when Gen. Gordon has succeeded in his mission of bringing away the garrisons, is the Mudir of Dongola, for whom such a position would only be a fitting reward for his great loyalty and bravery."

Writing from above second Nile Cataract on the 25th ult., a correspondent of the Standard says:—"A constant topic of discussion at Anglo-Egyptian dinner-tables is the value for fighting purposes of Sir Evelyn Wood's army. Discussion, I am bound to say, is hardly the proper term, as the vast majority are convinced that the Egyptian soldier will do anything but fight. For my own part—and having been present at the destruction of Gen. Baker Pasha's army, I may, perhaps, be allowed to offer an opinion—I consider the adverse criticisms to which Sir Evelyn Wood's army are subjected as hardly fair. The English officers of that army, for instance,—at least, the majority of them—profess their readiness to take their men into action, and they ought to be the best judges. Two things are certain. To condemn Sir Evelyn Wood's army because that of Gen. Baker met defeat would be wrong. In the first place, the majority of Gen. Baker's troops were not Egyptians at all, but blacks, who only a few days before, for the first time, had rifles placed in their hands. Sir Evelyn Wood's army, it is admitted on all sides, is a well-drilled and well-disciplined force. Beyond doubt they ought either to be tried now or disbanded. If the authorities fear to pit them against the undisciplined savages of the Soudan, then they represent only a sheer waste of Egyptian resources. Another favourite topic of conversation is, 'Will the expedition meet with any resistance?' Here, too, opinions mostly run in the same groove. The British officer hardly ever believes that the enemy he is going to meet will really fight, and the present occasion forms no exception to that rule. I remember, however, that before El Teb few thought Osman Digna's Arabs would attack an English army. But they did, not once, but twice, and, more than that, they put that army on its mettle. It is too generally forgotten with regard to this Soudan rebellion that, whatever may have been its original cause, it has now become a fanatical Moslem movement, and nothing else."

A special correspondent at Dongola writes:—"Nothing could have been more opportune at the present moment, when the minds of the population are much excited by the news of the capture of the steamer and by rumours of the approach of an army of the Mahdi, than the arrival of her Majesty's ship Nassif-el-Kheir to-day.* As she steamed up to Dongola amid the cheers of the troops, a great effect was produced among the people, who crowded down to the bank at the news of her approach, and there has since been a visible change of tone in the Bazaar. Lieut. Poole, R.N., who commands her, and her crew have encountered great difficulties on their way. Indeed, the danger of steaming up hundreds of miles of rapids studded with rocks and obstructions can only be appreciated by those who have made the journey. The Nassif-el-Kheir left Sarras on Sept. 22. She was hauled up the rapids of Semneh, Ambukol, and Tangoor by 300 men, and steamed the rest of the distance. Over and over again she had the narrowest escapes of being wrecked, but thanks to the care and good management of her commander and crew she was got through without any serious mishap. The appearance of the white ensign at this remote point in Africa is a great feat."

The Mudir despatched 100 men of his army mounted on dromedaries to Ambukol on Monday, in order to keep the road open in the vicinity of that place. The Mudir himself will leave shortly in a private steamer. The Mudir has ordered the mounted irregular troops to prepare to march. The infantry will remain to garrison Dongola in case of an attack by the Mahdi's army, reported to be approaching. The spirit evinced by the troops ordered to march is by no means good. There is much grumbling among them at being sent to meet the enemy without the aid of infantry, as they anticipate that, as on the last occasion, they will have serious fighting to do. This, however, is not the only cause of their reluctance to move. They assert that the Sultan of Constantinople has sent secret directions everywhere that the Faithful are to oppose the English to the uttermost, just as he did in the insurrection of Arabi. They say that he has also sent word to the Mahdi to the same effect, and that the latter has his full approval and support.

Emissaries of the Mahdi have arrived at Osman Digna's camp at Tamai with full instructions as to the system which he wishes Osman to pursue. This consists in harassing the English as much as possible, without coming to close quarters; and in treating those natives who come in to him in front of Suakim and around with welcome and consideration. This plan and our inaction have effected the open revolt of the Amarars, who have joined the Hadendowas and other hostile tribes with whom they had previously fought as our allies. All the hopes entertained a month ago of opening the road through the assistance of friendly tribes have vanished. On the other hand, it is reported that the Mahdi is in continual trouble with the tribes round El Obeid. Major Heath, brigade-major at Aden, has received a special appointment, and will shortly proceed to Harrar, as well as Major Hunter, in connection with the arrangements to be made for withdrawing the Egyptian force stationed there.

The Nassif-el-Kheir, with Col. Wilson, Major Slade, and 25 men of the Sussex Regt., under Capt. Harden, left Dongola on Sunday for Merawee and Mirri, the farthest point to which the steamer will be able to ascend the river. The object of her voyage is to institute inquiries as to the missing steamer and those on board her, and to clear up the mystery which surrounds the whole affair. The Mounted Infantry, under Major Gough, now number 200 men, effective and available for instant service or for a movement in advance, if necessary. The men are enthusiastic as to their camels, and declare that they prefer them to horses for the service which they will have to perform in this country. They say that they find them fairly intelligent and tractable.

Official telegrams from Suakim report that it is now too late to utilise the Suakim-Berber route, on account of the Amarars not having received the supplies and reinforcements which they had applied for.

Lord Wolseley telegraphs that a native who saw the steamer which ran aground when within one day's journey of Merawee, states that there were no Europeans of importance on board.

The tribes in the neighbourhood of Dongola report that the Mahdi has left El Obeid, marching in a south-westerly direction. They further allege the Mahdi to be discouraged by the failure of his plans, and more particularly to have lost heart since the death, in the battle of Korti, of his lieutenant and relative, Sheikh Mohammee, whom he appointed Ameer of Dongola. Owing to the prevalence of contrary winds, no troops have arrived there by way of the Nile during the last fortnight.

The railway at Wady Halfa has been placed under the direction of Major Scott, of the Engineers, who will be assisted by two Engineer officers.

Gen. Fremantle has received intelligence from Kassala stating that the Beniamer and Ashraff tribes are friendly. The Kaibala district is open, and crops are abundant.

The Light Cavalry Brigade left Cairo on Sunday last. Gen. Baker was at the station, and was loudly cheered by the men as the train moved off. The Heavy Brigade followed on Monday.

The Guards Division left Cairo on Thursday for the front. The Royal Marines for the Camel Corps arrived in Cairo the same evening from Suakim.

The Kroomen are not expected to arrive till Saturday, when they will at once proceed up the river with the Marines.

A Daily News despatch, dated Wady Halfa, Tuesday, says:—"The owner of the camels in the postal employ arrived here last night. A man in his service, the same who brought the first report of Hicks Pasha's defeat, witnessed the tragedy near the Fourth Cataract. He says positively that no steamer was wrecked, but a dahabeyeh. All on board were killed within a day's camel march of friendly territory, where the Mudir's agent and 20 soldiers were collecting taxes at the time. The locality agrees exactly with the previous reports. The man ridicules the idea that only the villagers were concerned for the sake of robbery. He came from Obeid. He says the Mahdi's forces occupy in strength the heights where the Nile narrows between sheer cliffs. North of Khartoum broken telegraph-wires have been thrown across the river. His account renders it probable that Col. Stewart's steamer returned safely to Khartoum as experienced officers of the Staff believed from the first. In Obeid the messenger saw a big, burly European practising as a doctor.* A sheikh who has arrived at Dongola states that he saw some craft—but he thinks not a steamer—on the rocks near the Fourth Cataract. He had heard that most of those on board had been murdered, but he believes that Col. Stewart, M. Herbin, and the Greek Consul were not among the number. Emissaries of the Mahdi have arrived at Osman Digna's camp at Tamai with full instructions as to the system which he wishes Osman to pursue. This consists in harassing the English as much as possible, without coming to close quarters; and in treating those natives who come into him in front of Suakim and around with welcome and consideration. All the hopes entertained a month ago of opening the road through the assistance of friendly tribes have vanished. On the other hand, it is reported that the Mahdi is in continual trouble with the tribes round El Obeid. The inhabitants of the country between Khartoum and Berber, from the Nile to the sea, are suffering from a want of provisions, almost amounting to famine."

* This is a little premature.—Ed. A. & N. G.

* She is an Egyptian steamer not yet "annexed."—Ed. A. & N. G.

* This description answers to the appearance of Mr. Vizetelly.

The Canadian Minister of Militia has received a report from the medical officer to the Egyptian contingent of Canadian boatmen. "All our men," he says, "appear to be contented, satisfied, full of hope, and without exception determined to do honour to themselves and to their native country. The contingent is even better constituted than would have at first been thought, and I have been able to convince myself of this by conversing with the heads of the expedition and the men themselves. I may remind you of what you probably already know, that the officers' commissions have been placed in good hands. They know just to what extent they may proceed, and at the same time they are soldierly enough to understand and make others understand the importance of order and discipline."

SOUAKIM.

A correspondent of the Egyptian Gazette, writing on Sept. 20, from Souakim, says:—On the 12th inst. great excitement was caused among the population of Suakim and among the natives on the works of the Royal Engineers by the whistling and running on the newly-laid line of one of the small locomotives which, under the superintendence of Lieut. Askwith, made some short trips for the first time up one pier and down another; there was great raising of hands and many cries of 'Allah' at the sight. This morning at a quarter to six o'clock our active General, Major Gen. Lyon-Fremantle, inspected the 1st Battalion of the Egyptian Army, which is stationed here. Major Haggard was in command, and Col. Chermside, Governor of the town, attended on the General's Staff. After the General had been received with the usual salute, the battalion was put through the bayonet and manual exercises. At the conclusion of a few manœuvres, the General made a short address, expressing himself pleased with what he saw. The following is the substance of the address:—'Col. Chermside, Major Haggard, officers and soldiers of the 1st Batn.,—I have to express my satisfaction with the appearance under arms of the battalion this morning and with the manner it has drilled. After watching the Egyptian troops at Suakim for seven weeks I now state my entire approval of their conduct and discipline both in camp and out of it. I cannot praise too highly the manner in which, under Col. Chermside's directions, the fortifications of Suakim have been strengthened and improved by Egyptian military labour, whilst at the same time drill and musketry have made constant progress, and your steadiness and good conduct in defending your works when they have been attacked by the enemy leaves nothing to be desired.' The foregoing was spoken a few words at a time, and interpreted to the battalion by Col. Chermside."

About eight days ago a sad accident happened which shows the folly of meddling with live projectiles. A corporal of Marines was trying to pick the composition out of a rocket, which he had found outside the lines, holding it between his thighs. It exploded, killing him almost instantaneously. Yesterday morning, about five o'clock, one of the sick men on board of H.M.S. Humber jumped overboard in a fit of hypochondriacal delirium, but he was promptly rescued by Qrmr. Hicks, one of the petty officers whose watch it was, who jumped in after the sick man, and got him to the ladder, when he was pulled up. The invalid is now all right, but it is just as well he was not picked up by one of the sharks which are generally on the 'prowl' here. Before the Tyne went away, one, 11 ft. long, was caught by some of the people on board. The Royal Engineers have had very hard work here, and have made a great difference to this place; three fine piers have been run out into the harbour, and it was pleasant to see that, in spite of all the work they have gone through, there was plenty of 'go' and vigour left for sports. They are a fine, hard-working body of men, and are evidently a splendid example of the survival of the fittest.

EGYPTIAN ITEMS.

Major-Gen. Davis, who had been unwell for the past few days, has now completely recovered.

Lieut.-Col. Furse, Capt. Brocklehurst, Mr. John M. Cook, of Messrs. Thos. Cook and Son, and Mr. Gregson, special correspondent of the Morning Post, left Cairo on Oct. 7 for Assiout, on their way up the Nile.

Major Hutton arrived in Cairo on Oct. 7, on his return from leave of absence, and will proceed to Dongola to command the Mounted Infantry.

Col. Larking Bey, aide-de-camp to the Khedive, has found it necessary, on account of his health, to resign his appointment. His successor is Col. Ahmed Hamdi Bey.

Lieut.-Col. Gibbons Bey, Deputy-Inspector-Gen. for the Cairo Division, has been granted leave of absence from Oct. 9 to the 30th of next month. During his absence, Capt. Fenwick, the Commandant of Police in the city of Cairo, will report direct to head-quarters, whilst Lieut.-Col. Hon. C. Fitzroy Hay has been temporarily transferred from the Alexandria to the Cairo Division, and will take charge of the Cairo Division, with the exception of the city of Cairo.

Capt. J. Brocklehurst, Royal Horse Guards, has been taken on the strength of the British forces in Egypt, with the status of Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., for duty with the troops up the Nile, and has been directed to report himself to Major-Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood.

All questions connected with railway transport north of Assiout have to be referred to Lieut.-Col. Ardagh, Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., Commandant at the Base.

Two hundred and seventy-six camel-drivers from Aden arrived at Assouan on Oct. 3.

Surg.-Major Connolly, Surgs. A. Harding and Lucas, have left Cairo for Upper Egypt, accompanied by 33 non-commissioned officers and men of the Army Hospital Corps.

Surg.-Major G. B. Mouat, of the Army Medical Department, has taken over the duties of Sanitary Officer of the Army of Occupation, Cairo District, from Surg. A. M. Davies.

Capt. F. S. Leslie, R.E., assumed the duties of Commanding Royal Engineer at Alexandria from Lieut. Burton, R.E.

Col. Grenfell has been appointed Brigadier-General in the British Army, and has assumed the command of the lines of communications at Assouan.

Dr. Schweinfürth, Col. Primrose, and Mr. Zimmerman, French Member of the Railway Administration, arrived at Alexandria on Oct. 9.

The Morning Post says:—"Many of the British officers of the Egyptian Army have expressed a strong opinion as to the inadvisability of the suggested abolition of that force, and this opinion is—it is generally understood—shared by Sir Evelyn Wood, the Sirdar of the Native Army. The latest proposals is that a revision of the force will be adopted, viz., a reduction in number and a higher standard required for enlistment. The services of the battalion of Egyptian troops at Suakim have, it is urged, effectually proved the value of that force as a defensive arm and as an auxiliary to British troops in the field."

There are very cheerful rumours current in Cairo as to the means which will be adopted to effect economies in the Government expenditure. On the one hand, it is stated that a large reduction in the personnel of several Government offices is in contemplation, whilst, on the other hand, some alarmists go so far as to say that a reduction of one-third of the salaries of all Government officials is the step which will be taken to restore the financial equilibrium.—Egyptian Gazette.

Something cheering for Suakim! The Egyptian Gazette of Oct. 9 says:—"The band of the 1st Brigade of the Egyptian Army paraded this morning at Abbassiyeh and left by rail for Suez, whence they will proceed to Suakim. Bandmaster and Capt. Ibrahim Effendi Hamdi goes in command."

Rise of the Nile, Oct. 8, at Cairo:—1881, 22 pics 8 kirats; 1882, 18 pics 16 kirats; 1883, 25 pics 20 kirats; 1884, 17 pics 19 kirats.

Lieut. Ievers, of the 35th Royal Sussex Regt., was to rejoin his regiment at Mangabet, and the depôt of the regiment, which is now at Kasr-el-Nil Barracks, is to be attached to the Black Watch until further orders.

Surg. Briggs, of the Army Medical Department, has been posted to the Cairo Citadel Hospital for duty.

Reviews.

An Amateur Angler's Days in Dovedale. (Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.)

Late in July of the present year a rather unworthy disciple of the great Mr. Cotton started on a fishing expedition in Dovedale, determined to satisfy himself if angling was an art or a game of chance. According to his own account, he went armed, cap-à-pie, with a bewitching book of flies, among which was the ancient "coachman" that made its virgin white reputation more than forty years ago. One of the greatest difficulties that presented itself to our angler was when he was solemnly adjured by his companion to fish with a "dry fly." He certainly spent time and flies in trying to solve that problem, and, it is said, has not yet succeeded. The author's companion, "the Major," caught 112 fish in ten days, and the author killed two fish in three weeks. But he is not disheartened, and hopes to do better next year. A very pleasant little book.

Ulrica. By Cecil Clarke. (Tinsley Brothers.)

This "romance" is written by a gentleman who has already published more than one readable book. It is to be feared that in the present instance he has not proved so fortunate. Still, there is a class of novel-readers who will possibly pass a favourable opinion as to this venture, and who may consider the rattle and bustle which mark its progress all through highly amusing. The story relates to an "undutiful child," who, despite all the efforts of her parents, persists in her refusal to have a husband selected for her, and finally contracts a foolish marriage with a person she did not care for, in order to escape a union with an elderly merchant whom she abhorred. As regards the plot, there is not much to be said. Still, the book abounds in pleasant small-talk, which may be easily mistaken for something very much better.

A Guide to the Coins of Great Britain and Ireland, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Major W. Stewart Thorburn. (Gill.)

Though a love of such studies may not be common among military men, Major Thorburn is not the only one who has distinguished himself in this line. The late General Ainslie published in 1830 a handsome volume on Anglo-French coins, and the names of General Ainslie, Colonel Durrant, Captain Murchison, and General Yorke Moore are associated with celebrated collections, all, however, now dispersed. This book has been most carefully compiled by one who has a thorough knowledge of the subject. The coins, beginning with the earliest British money (200 B.C.), and ending with the coinage of the present day, their weights, dates, and prices, are most clearly arranged. The work is fully and admirably illustrated with 18 plates, containing figures of over 200 typical coins, many being given in their proper colouring of gold, silver, or bronze. The information about Scottish and Irish coins is particularly clear and full. Those who have not studied the subject will be surprised to note the prices realised by some of the coins when sold by auction. Major Thorburn is to be congratulated upon his careful and accurate work, which will be of the greatest value to those collectors who are unable to provide themselves with the costly works of Ruding, Hawkins, and others, while its moderate price and the full and reliable information it contains will make the volume a welcome addition to every library as a work of reference.

The Prince of Palms. By W. Treloar. (Sampson Low and Co.)

Those who are anxious to learn something about cocoa-nuts and the cocoa-nut tree had better consult this handsome pamphlet, which is rendered particularly attractive by numerous highly-finished illustrations, such as "The Avenue of Palms in the Bolami Gardens, Rio de Janeiro," and "The Cocoa-Nut Plantation in Ceylon." Some of these are from photographs specially taken in Cochin for the compiler, while others are from such works as "Waterton's Wanderings," Tennent's "Ceylon," and Dr. Robert Brown's "Countries of the World." The frontispiece, showing the inflorescence of the cocoa-nut palm (Cocus nucifera) and ripe nuts at the bottom, a work of high art, is copied from an oil-painting by Miss Fenn.

Longman's Magazine may, in its present form, claim to be regarded as an édition de luxe. The fourth volume now published contains several chapters of Mr. Clarke Russell's successful novel, entitled "Jack's Courtship: a Sailor's Yarn of Love and Shipwreck." Then comes an essay on "French and English Towns," followed by "My Paris Masters" and "Old Mortality." Those may pass as an introduction to portions of one of the very best of Mrs. Oliphant's tales, "Madam." It would be difficult to specify all the literary treasure that is to be found in the fourth chapter of Longman's Magazine.

The Sporting Mirror. By Harry Etherington. The October number of this entertaining periodical is especially good. In its contents are portraits and biographies of four men who have made themselves remarkable in their different vocations, Sir Charles Legard, John Beasley, Douglas Mayson, and H. R. English. Among other articles in the number is one which at all periods and seasons meets the public taste. It is simply styled "A Chat About Billiards," but it is a carefully-prepared résumé of much that may be learned regarding that fascinating pastime. Of course, the "spot stroke" and "side" are made prominent features in the subject. The writer maintains that John Roberts, jun., is head of all the players in this country.

Foreign Literature.

Militärische Briefe. II. Ueber Infanterie. By General Kraft, Prinz zu Hohenlohe-Ingelfingen. (Berlin: E. S. Mittler und Sohn.) 1884.—To his letters on Cavalry, previously noticed in these columns, Prince Hohenlohe has now added another series on Infantry, written in the same unrestrained style in which one officer would address his brother-officer. They are sure to be read widely in the country of the author's, and they ought to be studied by the officers also of other armies. Prince Hohenlohe is well known as a military writer of some authority, who has held important positions during a service extending over 35 years. We may remind our readers that the author has had an active share in developing the artillery tactics of the German Army, and the results obtained through a more energetic and daring employment of that arm in the war of 1870-71 prove that the changes advocated by him were right. His first volume of "Military Letters" (on Cavalry) called forth both favourable comments and criticisms; but it is only by reading this, the second portion, in which the author's views on the relations between cavalry and cavalry are set forth, that the value of his letters on cavalry can be thoroughly understood. The "Letters on Infantry" deal with the various stages of the training of this important branch of the service; but we would draw special attention to those treating of the duties of company and regimental commanders, as well as to that devoted to the "esprit of the infantry."

Beiträge zur Kenntniss der Russischen Armee. With 23 Illustrations. (Hanover: Helwing'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung.) 1884.—This is an important summary of the organisation, equipment, &c., of the Russian army at the present time. That army has undergone so many changes recently, that existing works on the subject are now out of date, and do not furnish reliable information regarding the Russian army. The anonymous author has introduced all that is required for an accurate knowledge of the Russian army organisation, not omitting essential particulars respecting arming, equipment with ammunition and field-tools, musketry instruction, &c., generally treated rather niggardly by previous writers. The work before us is deserving of careful study.

The promotion of Capt. R. H. Alexander, R.M.A., to his present rank is to be antedated to May 21, 1884, in the vacancy caused by the special promotion to major of Capt. and Brevet Major W. G. Tucker, R.M.A.

THE LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY.

Having concluded their inspection of the Naval establishments and ships at the Eastern ports, the Lords of the Admiralty proceeded to Portsmouth, and commenced their official inspection of the dockyard on Tuesday. The Commissioners consisted of Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, Admiral Lord Alcester, Rear-Admiral Thomas Brandreth (Controller), Sir Thomas Brassey, and Mr. G. W. Rendel, with Mr. H. Campbell-Bannerman, M.P., First Secretary. An official levée was held on board the yacht Enchantress, attended by Admiral Sir G. P. Hornby, Commander-in-Chief; Rear-Admiral Herbert, Superintendent of the Dockyard; the captains of ships in the harbour, the commandants of the Marine Divisions at Eastney and Forton, the Inspector-General of Haslar Hospital, Col. Percy Smith, Director of Works, Mr. Barnes, Surveyor of Dockyards, &c. Mr. Nathaniel Barnaby, C.B., Director of Naval Construction, did not arrive until subsequently. On the conclusion of this ceremony, their Lordships first proceeded to the office of the Admiral-Superintendent, where they met the Chief Constructor, the Chief Engineer, and other principal officers of the dockyard, and went over the shipbuilding programme and the various departmental proposals for the ensuing year. The amounts submitted by the dockyard officials for new works, repairs, and maintenance in their several departments for 1885-6 make up a total of £198,501. This amount represents the extensive wants and conceptions of the officials. Last year the submissions amounted to £168,988, and as the Admiralty were only prepared to grant £65,768, or about £20,000 less than during the preceding year, many of the proposals were resolutely struck out upon a revision. But the majority of the rejected submissions had to be again faced on the present visit, and have consequently helped to swell the aggregate of the current wants. The proposals and suggestions submitted included extensions of existing buildings, new works, and votes for maintenance. The most conspicuous amongst the new proposals was the construction of a store for gun mountings, for which it is intended to make Portsmouth the principal depôt, consequent upon the transfer of the fittings from the War Department to the Admiralty, this being the first time of asking. The sum required is estimated at £18,500. On leaving the Admiral-Superintendent's office, their Lordships and the principal officials commenced an inspection of the dockyard and shipping. Accompanied by Capt. Nicholson, Capt. Fisher, Capt. Markham (the head of the Steam Reserve and the gunnery and torpedo ships respectively), and the professional officers, the Lords of the Admiralty proceeded to the extension works. The first halt was made at the Emerald, the refit of which is ordered to be completed by the end of February. Although it includes several organic changes in the hull itself, her armament is being strengthened, the wooden topside planking having been replaced by steel plating, which, with other readjustments, will, it is believed, greatly improve her seaworthiness and fighting efficiency. Attention was also directed to the Cormorant, which is to have her refit finished by March 31. The unarmed corvette Calliope was the first ship boarded; she is to be advanced 95-100ths by the end of the present financial year, and is now preparing for her steam trials. The Calliope is especially interesting for the comprehensive manner in which the sponson system of carrying guns has been carried out. On each of the four sponsons a 6-in. breech-loading rifled gun will be carried, the forward guns training from right ahead to 60 deg. abaft the beam, while the two after guns will train from right astern to 60 deg. before the beam. At the Extension, the site of the store for gunnery mountings was inspected, and subsequently their Lordships—with the exception of Lord Alcester—visited the Colossus, where they remained about an hour. This proved the chief event of the day, for, apart from the interest attaching to the turret-ship herself, it was brilliantly illuminated by the electric light, in order that the Commissioners might witness the perfection and beauty of the installation, the most noteworthy of any which has yet been carried out in the Navy, every compartment in the ship having its own lamps and switches. The general arrangement comprises a night and day circuit for the mess, decks, citadel, passages, and working parts of the vessel, while the stores and other smaller compartments have their own lights and switches. The night or police circuit consists of a few 20-candle power lamps in low and prominent positions, placed so as to specially facilitate movement without oil lamps of any kind having to be carried. The lamps for the mess tables, officers' cabins, and general illumination are, on the other hand, of only 10-candle power. In the vicinity of the engines and lathes, and also of the amputation tables and sick bay, there are sockets at which, by the insertion of a plug, temporary connection is immediately made, whereby hand lamps fitted with long flexible cables can be placed in any required position. The whole of the fittings have been designed with a view to counteract the concussion produced by the firing of the heavy guns. Their Lordships instituted a painstaking inspection of the entire system, the whole of the lamps being aglow, with the exception of the reflectors and projectors. They visited the dynamo-room and the various mains, and witnessed the lighting of the magazines and the other fighting parts of the ship. They were highly satisfied with the result, and there can be little doubt that the system will be applied to the other ships under construction. It is intended to light the ship for some days continuously, with the object of determining the amount of fuel consumed, and so arriving at the cost of lighting a ship-of-war by electricity as compared with the ordinary method. Their Lordships afterwards inspected the ship and its fittings. The Colossus is now practically completed so far as the hull and machinery are concerned. She will not, however, be out of hand for several months, mainly owing to defects which appeared in the novel and unique breech mechanism of her 43-ton guns. On leaving the Colossus, her sister-ship, the Edinburgh, was boarded, also the Collingwood and Agamemnon, which has been sent round to Portsmouth from Devonport to be docked. previous to being despatched to reinforce the China Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir W. M. Dowell. Rear-Admiral F. A. Herbert and Lord Alcester lunched with Capt. Rowley on board the Duke of Wellington, and afterwards proceeded to the St. Vincent, training-ship for boys. On landing at the King's Stairs, Lord Alcester went to the gunboat Handy, and subsequently joined the rest of their Lordships on board the Imperieuse. The Lords of the Admiralty were then conducted round the extreme boundaries of the Extension Works, discussing the sites of new buildings by the way, and taking particular notice of the new rigging basin. Their Lordships lunched with the Dockyard-Superintendent, in company with the heads of the departments afloat and ashore and the professional officers of the Admiralty. Resuming their inspection they visited the Marlborough, training-ship for engineer students, who were drawn up along side. After spending an hour on board, their Lordships next inspected the Imperieuse, which is still a mere frame, critically examining her latest improvements. On board the Handy is one of the Imperieuse's 45-ton guns, which, under the direction of Capt. Fisher, was worked by a party of seamen gunners. At the stern of this gunboat was the Blazer, tender to the Excellent, fitted with 5-in. and 7-in. new-pattern breech-loading guns, from which blank cartridges were fired in order to show the actual working of these weapons. While the party were on board the Imperieuse, the crew of the Minotaur were exercised in striking lower yards and topmasts. The next ship that demanded attention was the torpedo depôt vessel Hecla, which was not boarded, their Lordships, when on the jetty, giving an audience to the captain, who suggested some improvements. Passing by the vessels of the Channel Squadron, the party next visited the Camperdown, the keel of which was laid two years ago, and great interest was taken in the preparation of this powerful armour-clad. The new jetty was briefly inspected, and the last visit was to the Dreadnought, turret-ship, commissioned by Capt. the Hon. E. R. Fremantle, C.B. The ship's crew were mustered on deck and inspected by the aid of the electric light, with which the Dreadnought is fitted. In the evening their Lordships had an official dinner on board the Enchantress.

On Wednesday morning the inspection was resumed. Leaving the Enchantress, the Lords Commissioners proceeded to Whale Island, an artificially-enlarged area in one of the creeks of Portsmouth Harbour, for the purpose of witnessing a sham-fight, which was organised and carried out by Capt. J. Fisher, C.B. The general idea of the operations was that an attacking force, consisting of Blue-jackets from the Excellent, attempted to effect a landing on the island under the cover of the gunboats Blazer, Mastiff, Kite, and Comet, moored off to the left rear of the landing force, their approach being resisted by the defending party under Lieut. Warrender, consisting of ship's detachments of Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry, and other details, with two guns. The attacking party, under Lieut. Meryon, with Lieut. Scott in charge of the batteries, consisted of 750 men in boats comprising eight companies, with four 9-pounder field-pieces. The party, having successfully landed, proceeded to drive out the defenders under Lieut. Warrender, who had only two field-pieces and a much smaller number of small arms at his disposal. After the shore had been gained, the new system of attack was developed by half companies, so that when the supports came up the companies should be completely and properly formed. Following the skirmishers, the men manning the field-pieces of the attacking party ran their guns up the incline on the top of which the defenders were posted, and in gallant style caused the defenders to withdraw. This withdrawal was furthermore peremptorily necessitated by the steady onward movement of the invaders, and, though the defenders attempted to recover their lost ground by means of imaginary cavalry, they were driven over the bridge connecting the island with the mainland. They, however, prevented further pursuit by blowing up the island end of the bridge, though a galling fire was kept up by the victors on the retreating foe. After the action, which lasted only 30 minutes, the two forces were brigaded together, and marched past in review order, the Lords of the Admiralty congratulating Capt. Fisher upon the dash and precision with which the men carried out their various movements. Their Lordships inspected the Naval gunnery establishment in the island and the new machine-gun range, with its rocking platform. They also examined an ingenious invention of Mr. Nordenfelt for enabling men to practice firing at a moving object from a gun also in motion. After witnessing some practice with the quick-loading gun, and seeing the result of various experiments against steel-plates, they left in their steam barge to witness some torpedo demonstrations on board the Vernon, the naval torpedo school. The Excellent, which is moored in the same line, was inspected by deputy. After luncheon, Admiral Key, Lord Alcester, and Sir Thomas Brassey, accompanied by the Admiral-Superintendent and Col. Percy Smith, the Director of Works, proceeded to Eastney for the purpose of reviewing the men of the Royal Marine Artillery and making a survey of the barracks. Arriving on the ground they found the corps drawn up in line under Col. Bridges, commandant, the two battalions being under the respective commands of Col. Tuson and Col. Halliday. After receiving their Lordships with a general salute, the men were formed in column, and marched past in column of companies, in mass, and in line of quarter-columns. The troops marched with remarkable steadiness, the result of extremely good drill and discipline. The Lords Commissioners then went to the infirmary, over which they were conducted by Staff Surg. Messer, R.N., and which has now, by the introduction of perfect sanitary arrangements, been converted into quite a model little institution. Proceeding to the naval gun-battery, they witnessed some drill under Major Campbell, Superintendent of Naval Gunnery, and afterwards saw target-practice from the 12-ton and the 18-ton muzzle-loaders and the new 6-in. breech-loaders. At the close they expressed their satisfaction with the quickness, expedition, and accuracy which had marked the drill. On the return journey their Lordships visited the Seamen and Marines' Orphan Schools. Lord Alcester and Sir Thomas Brassey inspected the Royal Sailors' Home. At night the Admiralty were entertained at dinner by Admiral Sir G. P. Hornby, and were subsequently present at the annual ball at the Southsea Assembly Rooms, on behalf of the Royal Seamen and Marines' Orphan Home.

On Thursday morning their Lordships divided to complete their inspection, Sir Thomas Brassey and Mr. Rendel going to the Agamemnon and the Colossus for the purpose of examining the faulty steering gear of the former and the gun arrangements of the latter, and also the device for preventing the entrance of water into the turret ports. The other party crossed over to the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard, where they were received by Mr. Scott, the superintendent, and conducted over the different stores, mills, abattoirs, &c. This establishment supplied 100,000 lb. of biscuits to Deptford for the use of the Nile Expedition, but has now reverted to its normal condition. Thence their Lordships proceeded to the Royal Marine Light Infantry establishment at Forton, the proceedings at which were substantially a repetition of what they had gone through the day before at Eastney. The corps was paraded on the recreation-ground opposite the barracks under Col. Meade, by whom the men were put through a few simple movements. Their Lordships next visited the gun-battery, and subsequently inspected Capt. Blakeney's new valise equipment. From Forton they went to the Royal Naval Hospital at Haslar, and were shown over the various wards and grounds. They also inspected the gunboat slips, and examined the site for the proposed extension. This completed the programme, and at 4 o'clock the Lords of the Admiralty left for Plymouth, under salutes from the Duke of Wellington and the garrison.

The Enchantress, Admiralty yacht, arrived at Devonport yesterday.

Summary of Events.

◆

OCTOBER 12.—Col. Wilson and Major Slade left Dongola for Merawee and Mirri. Departure of Light Cavalry Division of Camel Corps from Cairo for the front.

OCTOBER 13.—Departure of Heavy Cavalry Division of Camel Corps from Cairo for the front. Inspection of the Portsmouth Garrison by the Duke of Cambridge. A section of Afghan Commission under Sir P. Lumsden arrived at Shahrood.

OCTOBER 14.—Lord Wolseley, at Second Cataract, witnessed the hauling of a nuggur.

OCTOBER 16.—Lord Northbrook arrived at Cairo. The Guards Division of the Camel Corps left for the front. Inspection of Chatham Garrison by the Duke of Cambridge.

OCTOBER 17.—Dover Garrison inspected by the Duke of Cambridge.

Accounts received at the Admiralty on Monday from the Pacific state that the Heroine was at Callao on Aug. 28, and remains as senior officer's ship. The Sappho left Callao on Aug. 18 for Coquimbo, and the Pelican was at Coquimbo on Aug. 20,—to leave on the 23rd for Callao.

Admiral Lethbridge has received information at Queenstown during the week that several bodies have been washed ashore at different points of the coast near which the Wasp was wrecked. Twenty-nine bodies have been recovered and buried, some of them quite beyond identification.

The hired transports Australia, Creole, Deccan, and Anglian have arrived at Malta from Alexandria. The Anglian and Engineer sailed on Wednesday for London, and the Creole for Portsmouth. The storeship Dunluce sailed from Malta on Wednesday to Gibraltar.

New crews are being selected from the harbour ships at Devonport for the Nelson and the Diamond on the Australian station, for the Mallard on the North American and West Indies station, and also for the Tamar, troopship, which is to be commissioned on Tuesday next. The crews for the Nelson and the Diamond will embark in the Tamar on the 27th. The crew for the Mallard will take passage in the Wye to Bermuda on Thursday next.

The Admiralty have received letters from Comdre. Erskine, on board the Nelson, on the Australian station, up to Sept. 3. The Nelson was at Sydney, also the Espiègle and Raven, the last two refitting. The Diamond was at Townsville on Aug. 29; she afterwards left for Sydney. The Miranda was at Sandwich Islands on July 26, being expected at Sydney shortly. The Dart was at Suva, Fiji, on June 7, but was shortly expected at Sydney. The Lark was on surveying service in Solomon Group on July 1. The Swinger was at Brisbane on Sept. 3, the Harrier at Cookstown on July 13, and the Undine left Noumea on Aug. 3 for New Hebrides.

"No one," says the Pall Mall Gazette triumphantly, "least of all the Opposition, which is always inveighing against Mr. Gladstone because of his anxiety to lessen rather than to increase the empire, can question the sincerity of the Cabinet. It has honestly tried to shuffle off some of the load Atlantean which presses upon its shoulders. It evacuated Candahar and gave up the Transvaal. No English Administration ever gave greater proofs of an anxiety to check the growth of empire. Yet the empire has grown more rapidly under Mr. Gladstone than it did under Lord Beaconsfield. We have not annexed Egypt, but we garrison it; we have not absorbed the Soudan, but an English army is on its way to Khartoum. We have annexed one-third of Zululand, the whole of Bechuanaland, and all the South African coast from the Orange River to Cunene, excepting Angra Pequeña. We have rounded off our territory in West Africa by the annexation of a strip of the coast near Sierra Leone. We had sanctioned the annexation of Cameroons, but being forestalled by Germany we restored the balance by annexing the delta of the Niger. We have established a new East India Company in Northern Borneo, and to-day we have ordered the proclamation of a British protectorate over the eastern half of New Guinea. There has been nothing like it in our time; there is no parallel to the phenomenon to be found among all the nations of the earth." We quite agree with our contemporary.

COMMISSIONS IN THE LINE.

Indian Notes.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have entered Cashmere. An enthusiastic reception has been accorded them wherever they have passed.

The Afghan Boundary Commission arrived at Galichah, 75 miles from Nushki, on Oct. 5; all well, and are expected to reach the Helmund on Oct. 16. The section under Sir P. Lumsden arrived at Shahrood on Oct. 13, and are, therefore, almost half-way from Teheran to Meshed.

The Ameer of Afghanistan, on recovering his health, devoted the proceeds of the congratulatory offerings which were made to him to the construction of a road from Sherpur to Pamunar. He is much pleased with the British present of a portable engine, with the metals and equipment for two miles of a light railway. Abdul Kudus Khan, late Governor of Herat, has had his confiscated property restored to him. The Turkistanis are making numerous complaints against their Governor, Ishak Khan.

Col. Chapman, C.B., Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, delivered a lecture at Simla, on Oct. 10, on the subject of the employment of Reserve soldiers of the British and Native Armies. The Viceroy, who was present, spoke in support of the lecturer's proposals, dwelling strongly on the necessity for county organisations, each to aid in procuring work for the discharged soldiers of the county regiment, and describing the matter as one of national importance, which could only succeed if taken up by the general public. According to the latest reports the Zhob Valley expedition was progressing quietly and satisfactorily, and several of the neighbouring tribes had made submission.

The death is announced of Lieut.-Col. H. T. Harris, officiating commandant 22nd Madras Infantry, of abscess of the liver, at the Bowring Hotel, Bangalore, on Sept. 13. He had been ailing for some time past, and very recently went from Madras to Bangalore for change of air, but this proved of no benefit to him. Col. Harris joined the Army in June, 1856; he was transferred to the Staff Corps in Sept., 1866; he was appointed wing-commander, 22nd N.I., in June, 1877-78, and second-in-command, Aug., 1881.

Lieut.-Col. J. Finnis, wing-commander 5th Punjab Infantry, temporarily attached to the 2nd Punjab Infantry as second-in-command, died at Mussoorie on Sept. 11. His first commission dates from Dec. 12, 1857, and he took part in the operations in Oude during the Mutiny. He was also present at the Mahsud Waziri Expedition of 1881.

Lieut. Edward John Bellett, R.N., has been placed on the Retired List with permission to assume the rank and title of retired commander.

FRIDAY EVENING.

ARMY.

WHITEHALL, October 13, 1884.

The Queen, taking into consideration that upon the decease of Edward Mostyn, Baron Mostyn, which happened on March 17, the title and dignity of Baron Mostyn devolved upon Llewellyn Nevill Vaughan, now Baron Mostyn, as the elder son and heir of the Hon. T. E. M. Lloyd-Mostyn, whereby according to ordinary rules the brother of the said Baron Mostyn cannot enjoy that rank which would have been due to him had his late father survived his father, and thereby succeeded to the title and dignity of Baron Mostyn:

Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to declare that Capt. H. R. H. Lloyd-Mostyn, 4th Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, shall henceforth have, hold, and enjoy the title, rank, place, pre-eminence, and precedence as the younger son of a Baron, to which honour he would have been entitled had his father succeeded to the dignity of Baron Mostyn:

And her Majesty has been further pleased to command that the said Royal order and declaration be recorded in her Majesty's College of Arms.

London Amusements.

On Thursday night Mr. Wilson Barrett produced at the Princess's his long-promised representation of "Hamlet," with all the illustrative embellishments modern science, art, and scrupulous archæological research could furnish as appropriate to the most popular play in our national dramatic repertory. Quite apart from the novel decorative surroundings—the "Play Scene," for instance, being represented as taking place in the open air—the general excellence of the acting will be found to command the admiration of playgoers, and invite the earnest attention of the Shakespearian student.

Mr. Augustus Harris is arranging to take the successful drama, "The World" (of which he is now sole proprietor), on tour through the provinces, under his personal direction. New and elaborate scenery is being specially prepared, and everything necessary for the representation of the play on a grand scale will be carried by the company.

At the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts a special military programme was provided on Monday evening. Miss Amy Sherwin and Mr. Barrington Foote were the vocalists, and the orchestra was reinforced by the band of the Coldstream Guards and their drummers and fifers, the pipers of the Scots Guards, and the cavalry band of the Middlesex Yeomanry. The "British Army Quadrilles" and the "Drum Polka" figured conspicuously in the programme.

From the Olympic the "Twins" was withdrawn on Tuesday night, and, it is understood, at the end of the month the theatre will be occupied by a pictorial model of the Temple and city of Jerusalem.

On Wednesday evening was produced at the Gaiety Mr. Herman C. Merivale's "Called There and Back." In this grotesque perversion of the play, made with the full consent of the author and his adapter, amusing imitations are given of the actresses and actors at the Prince's Theatre, and secured for an innocent piece of pleasantry a favourable reception.

Reproduced at the Savoy, the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera of "The Sorcerer," brought out at the Opera Comique, Nov. 17, 1877, has obtained a fresh lease of popularity. Of the original representatives only Mr. George Grossmith, Mr. Rutland Barrington, and Mr. Richard Temple remain in the cast. The whimsical story of the effects of the commercial traveller's love-philtre has, however, never been so effectively illustrated both from a musical and dramatic point of view. The revival is followed by the dramatic cantata of "Trial by Jury," with Miss Florence Dysart as the representative of the captivating plaintiff.

The Opera Comique has been opened by Mr. Harrington Baily with "Vice Versa" and the three-act farcical comedy of "Nita's First," supported by a very efficient company, and rendered with an unflagging spirit which is duly recognised by the audience.

A winter season of French plays will be commenced this (Saturday) evening, at the Royalty, when Mons. E. Pailleron's three-act comedy, "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie," will be played for the first time in London.

The Alhambra, having obtained a music and dancing licence, will be opened to-night (Saturday) as a "Theatre of Varieties."

The Emperor Francis's Regiment of Prussian Grenadier Guards celebrated its 70th anniversary on Wednesday. Some 150 old comrades and officers of the regiment assembled in the evening in the great hall of the Hôtel de Rome. The guests were entertained by the colonel and lieutenant-colonel of the regiment, several officers of high rank and the Chief of the Admiralty being also present. The next morning a congratulatory telegram was received by the colonel from the Emperor of Austria.

DIMNESS of SIGHT.—Dimness of Sight and Blindness are often caused by the use of unsuitable Spectacles. Mr. H. Laurance, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1a Old Bond Street, scientifically adapts his improved Spectacles to strengthen and assist the weakest sights. Testimonials from Earl Lindsay, Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, containing valuable suggestions, post free.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors, at the Office, No. 16 Wellington Street, Strand, London.—Saturday, Oct. 18, 1884. Letters on Business and Remittances should be sent to Mr. Richard James Wood.

THIS day thirty years ago there was performed a feat of arms, so brilliant in all its characteristics of daring and recklessness, of "derring-do" and "deathfulness," that it has flashed ever since through the dark cloud that settled down that winter on our arms in immortal lustre. A generation has passed away since the cavalry actions of Balaclava rendered an unknown valley in a remote peninsula famous for all time. Many of the chief actors have passed away, but there are still survivors among us of those heroic episodes which gave rise to such acrimonious contention, and eventually led the martial disputants to parade the incidents of the magnificence of courage, which was not war, in the Courts of Law. But among them, few as they are, there is no agreement respecting "the merits of the case." The account of the two "charges" which electrified England, written on the field the day of the battle, may be accepted as a truthful and accurate narrative with as much confidence as the 300 pages of Mr. Kinglake's history written fourteen years after the battle, while it has the advantage of being penned by an eye-witness of the scene. Mr. Kinglake, on the contrary, has been vehemently contradicted, and letters, pamphlets, and volumes, written and published in controversy, have perplexed people's minds, and led them to think that under the beautiful style and varnish of the history there may be concealed grave error and partiality. Since then there have been "death rides"—perhaps as desperate, certainly more bloody, than the charge of the Light Brigade, and no doubt there were many dear to the memories of such troopers as those who rode after Seidlitz, Ziethen, Kellermann, or Murat; but there never was single fait d'armes which excited such pride and admiration in England as that of October 25, 1854. The feeling of the hour was well illustrated by the cartoon in Punch, which represented Paterfamilias, the typical John Bull, with the Times in one hand and the poker in the other, glowing with excitement as he read the letter of the correspondent to his family circle. The "Balaclava Heroes," Heavy and Light, will, we trust, dine together in harmony and health this evening; and if their numbers are diminished, those who remain ought to be bound the more closely in their association in a common glory. The part played in the fight by each may have been different,—some among the guns, some outside them, some splendid in personal encounter, some adroit in escape, some lucky in the smoke which obscured their prowess, some fortunate in the clouds which hid them from swarming enemies, but on one and all rests the ray of the Star of Victory. Lord Lucan is alive—and we may add, if necessary, "kicking." Lord Raglan, Lord Airey, Sir J. Scarlett, Lord G. Paget, and Shewell have joined the majority, with many others. Conolly, we are glad to add, still lives, so does Walker, so does Clarke, so does Elliot, of those whose names come to the front in histories of the time. And so do minores gentium dii—Wombwell, Trevelyan, &c., from time to time a few lines in a local paper record the death of a "Balaclava veteran;" but the boys who live are now middle-aged men, and the middle-aged men are old and well-stricken in years. Perhaps even to-day it is not too late to challenge the verdict given by interested "historians," and accepted by "indifference," that the cause of the disaster to the Light Brigade—for such it was in a military sense—was a misconstruction of supremely wise and intelligent orders by the officers charged with their execution. When Lord Raglan used the memorable phrase, "You have lost the Light Brigade!" to Lord Lucan, he must in his great anger have forgotten the orders he gave. When he was reminded by Lord Lucan what those orders were, Lord Raglan endeavoured to cover himself by a theory the like of which was never heard,—"You were a Lieutenant-General, and you should have exercised your discretion; and not approving of the charge, you should not have caused it to be made." Lord Lucan was recalled because he obeyed orders. Had he disobeyed, he ought to have been shot. But even admitting that the orders were "optional," can it be supposed that the Light Brigade, supported by the Heavy Brigade, could have carried them out at all? That is a matter which has been quite lost sight of in the cloud of words raised over minor controversies. But, calmly considered, the idea of sending cavalry to recover "heights,"—nay, fortified heights,—each with an entrenched summit, armed with cannon, and occupied by powerful detachments of infantry behind, and below which was a force of 34 squadrons of cavalry, at least 20 battalions of foot, and 78 guns, was one of the most preposterous that ever entered into the mind of any General to conceive, or to order another to execute. Had the Light Brigade, instead of charging into the North Valley, directed its lines upon the redoubts on the heights, it is very probable the disaster would have been, if possible, more complete than that which fell upon them down below, because there was no sufficient force near at hand to have supported the two Brigades had they been united in the occupation of the redoubt over the Woronzoff road. The small force of French Cavalry had suffered nearly as much as our own, and the Fourth Division and the Guards could not have arrived in time to have held the ground of which the Cavalry had obtained momentary possession. It may be said that the Russians were so intimidated that they would have given way at the forward movement, and some such theory is put forward by Mr. Kinglake, but actual facts afford no corroboration of it. Immediately after the Light Cavalry charge, the Russian positions were advanced rather than retired, and showed a front from Kamara down to the Tchernaya, which certainly looked as if they would resist any further aggression. The truth of the matter is, that on October 25 a great fact suddenly burst upon the astonished mind of the English commander—and we select him because he was especially charged with the defence of Balaclava—the fact that he had been trifling with a tremendous danger; that he had neglected securing his base; that he had refused to attend to warnings. That early morning, when the sleeping Staff at the Head-quarters camp was roused up by the cannonade from the valley of Balaclava, there had fallen a blow on us which might have been fatal to our armies. The initial defence of the valley was purely accidental, the work of individual officers,—Lord Lucan and others. Lord Raglan the night before, indeed, did utter the words "Very well," when he was distinctly acquainted with the lowering of the storm that was about to burst. No wonder he thought it "Very bad" when, from the ridge over the causeway, he saw the glittering masses of Liprandi's cavalry chasing the Turks over the plain, and the solid columns of gray-coated infantry debouching from the valley of Baidar. Without any military knowledge or thought, the Turks had been pushed forward with English guns into a position which was quite in the air, and when they were driven out of it one main line of our communications fell into the hands of the enemy. The Heavy Cavalry saved Balaclava. The Light Cavalry were "lost" in carrying out an impossible order. In the perplexity and trouble which prevailed in the guiding mind that surveyed the scene, there was not definitiveness enough of idea of purpose to animate an order with anything like life and intelligence. The Cavalry were ordered to charge "heights," and to follow the enemy to prevent them from carrying away the guns, or to take every opportunity of doing it.—"The guns?" What guns? —"The enemy?" Where? Then come wrangle and confusion, pride and pique, and finally death and glory,—a good deal of both,—and so an end of October 25, 1854.

A ROYAL Commission was appointed five years ago to inquire into Colonial defence, and the following year it was reappointed. This Commission was entirely independent of any party or political influence, its character and authority being unquestionable. More than two years ago a report was presented, a copy of which was forwarded to the Inspector-General of Fortifications, and last March his recommendations were submitted to the War Office, which department decided to adopt "as a basis of action," the recommendations of the Inspector-General on the Report of the Royal Commission, the proposed armaments and their estimated cost being detailed. It is so far satisfactory that these recommendations have been generally approved by the Defence Committee; and that the "Government are of opinion that, coupled with the Report, they afford a proper basis of action in dealing with the defence of the various stations, and that the necessary steps should be at once taken for giving effect to the proposals so far as the stations of Trincomalee, Hong Kong, Singapore, and Aden are concerned." The aggregate Imperial charge on Aden, Singapore, and Hong Kong will be for works, £47,150, and for armament, £103,750, making a total of £150,900; no expenditure for armament being needed until the works have been completed. It has been explained that the proposals made have been "based upon the principle that sudden attacks could only be made by comparatively small squadrons; and the defences have been calculated in each case to provide against such contingencies. In the event of a more serious attack being contemplated by any foreign Power, it could not be kept secret, and the support of the British Fleet might then be counted on. Submarine mines would, in most cases, form an integral part of the defences, and their powerful aid would be brought into action to co-operate with the artillery defences proposed." Although the stations of Aden, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Trincomalee have been specially mentioned, and the proposals concerning those places approved, the other stations will have to be properly protected if the entire scheme be carried out. These stations include Colombo, Sierra Leone, St. Helena, Simon's Bay, Table Bay, Mauritius, Port Royal, and Port Castries. The total cost of the requisite armaments will be £891,870, a sum which cannot be deemed extravagant, considering the extent of the work to be done, and the immense interests that will have to be protected. Our coaling stations and Colonial harbours, including the Indian ports, must be made safe; and considering that the Report of the Royal Commission was presented on July 22, 1882, there has been unnecessary procrastination in commencing a work admitted to be urgent. The great coaling and docking stations at Hong Kong, Singapore, Penang, Ceylon, Perim, and Aden are not much better prepared to withstand a hostile attack than they were 20 years ago. Bombay, and some of the great seaports of our Eastern possessions,—seaports which in the year 1881 exported and imported merchandise to the value of two hundred millions sterling,—are almost at the mercy of a hostile fleet. Simon's Bay and the Cape have been neglected, and elsewhere there are other weak spots. Without coaling-stations ships-of-war are practically helpless; and it having been admitted that our coaling-stations are not in a proper state of defence, the time for taking active measures of defence has arrived. To stand with folded hands waiting for "further information," is altogether unjustifiable. The safety of the several coaling-stations does not alone concern vessels-of-war, it being quite as important to our Mercantile Marine. The only coaling-stations protected are Gibraltar, Malta, Aden, Melbourne, Sydney, Halifax, Bermuda, and Jamaica; the unprotected coaling-stations being Ascension, St. Helena, the Cape, Mauritius, Singapore, Hong Kong, King George's Sound, Fiji, and Vancouver's Island. The Pall Mall Gazette, which has been dealing exhaustively with the subject, in summarising what ought to be done, remarks that:—"While discouraging the excessive manipulation of coaling-stations, as an increase of points of attack, a decision should be arrived at as to whether the secondary stations should be fortified or abandoned in case of war. If they are to be retained, then heavier guns, with torpedo-boats and torpedoes, should be sent to St. Lucia, Jamaica, Mauritius, Trincomalee, and similar stations." The difficulty of repairing our ships abroad, resulting from the absence of docks, is another question. Some of the coaling-stations should, it is suggested, be also refitting-stations, where large ironclads can be docked. These specific stations should be defended so strongly as to be beyond the reach of any but regular attack, and it may be anticipated that Parliament will afford this subject that grave and prompt consideration its importance demands.

THE old saying that the truth lies in the bottom of a well may be taken in more ways than one. Sometimes the wells are so deep that the bottom cannot be reached, or they are so shallow that truth is covered up with rubbish. Occasionally, when the naked verity is hauled up to the surface, it is more discreet to turn away from her than to regard her curiously, or to describe her to the rest of the world. There has been a good deal of truth-telling lately. The Pall Mall Gazette put into a series of terse propositions and argumentative deductions, which as yet have not been controverted, facts bearing upon the Naval strength of this Empire, which have been taken deeply to heart and head in the country, and to the effects of which no official assurances or assurance have proved to be antidotes. There is, however, this much to be said about the Navy, that there is no immediate prospect of any danger or any act of hostility to test its strength. Such is not the case with the other truth, with the spectre with which the St. James's Gazette appalled those who read its description attentively, and looked between the lines of the article which dealt with the actual imminent dangers which menace our Indian Empire. Moreover, there is this wide distinction between the deficiencies in the Navy and the want of preparation in India to meet possible strains and pressure. For years, in season and out of season, every military officer of position, as the result of his official administration in India, has felt himself called upon to warn the Government that our Empire hangs upon a thread, and one by no means equal to the strain which might at any moment be placed upon it by an agitation from within or without. A great deal is made to-day, and very justly, of the compact, argumentative, and closely-reasoned paper, in which an array of facts has been placed before the eyes of all who are in a position to exercise influence in the affairs of India; but it ought to be remembered, in justice to officers who have filled high posts in Hindostan, that they raised their voices in warning and remonstrance long ago, and that if the slumbering documents in pigeon-holes in Calcutta, Simla, Downing Street, and the War Office could be awakened, and made to speak, as Baron Munchausen's famous trumpet delivered its frozen notes when the thaw came, there would be blasts of alarm in every Government office which had long been laid to rest. The estimates of the addition which is absolutely necessary to the force in India have varied in the minds of different authorities, but it would be a fair mean to take 16,000 men as that which comes within the limits of the most moderate calculations. There are, indeed, opinions of men of very considerable sagacity who, looking at the question regardless of expense and other considerations, think that 50,000 or 60,000 men would not be an excessive addition to the strength of the present divisions. To do what? Merely to keep the peace, not to be ready for war. But it may be said, "Who fears war? There is the Afghan Boundary Commission about to lay down a line which will never be crossed except in anger. We have plenty of men for frontier expeditions, and small punitive columns chastising the marauders on mountain sides and of Himalayan valleys, and a strong hand must be ready to bear on the armies of the Native States, so as to reduce the demand upon our strength for watchmen to look after the interior posts." Remarks such as these may be made ad infinitum, but no one who has read the conclusive memorandum laid before the highest authorities in India and in this country, to which attention has been called in our own columns and in those of the St. James's Gazette, can be content with such platitudes. Without saying precisely what course is recommended, we may indicate shortly what will be the result of our not doing what he recommends. And first, let us remember that whatever has been advanced in this State paper has been approved of by the actual military advisers of the Government in India, and in so far as they agree with every statement in it regarding ways and means, and forces and distances. But long before the document was prepared, Sir Frederick Haines had in the strongest manner urged on the attention of the Government—the least offence of which was that it paid no attention to what he said—the necessity of taking active measures to counteract the evils of which it clearly indicated the existence. Sir Donald Stewart and Sir Frederick Roberts and many others had followed suit. The whole subject depends on the answer to the question,—Would the possession of Herat be a casus belli? That is, would England declare war against Russia if she seized upon it? or would Russia declare war upon England vice versâ? Let the answer rest; but if it be supposed that the Russians are allowed to take up a position at Cabul and Chittral, and to hold Herat up to the Khush road, they will secure a firm base within striking distance of Candahar, Cabul, and Peshawur. They may then rest on their oars till some favourable current sets in to waft them to their goal. They may take five, or ten, or twenty years to make a railway to Farah, to open up the Oxus to Kilif, to make a road from that place towards the frontier, to collect supplies and munitions of war, to subdue the Turkoman tribes, to bribe and gain over the Afghans. "Pish!" says Lord Hartington. "Nonsense!" exclaims Mr. Chamberlain. "Perish India!" cries Mr. Bright. "Hurrah for the Franchise!' exclaims Mr. Gladstone. "Annex Egypt for the sake of India!" urges the Stock Exchange. But the divine figure from the North will be standing at our gates, and his legions will be ready within a few marches of Candahar, Cabul, and Peshawur, perhaps ere the year is over. "From the day that we allow Russia to get into Herat, the knell of British rule in India will have struck; and if a few brave hearts refuse to despair even then, the outlook will be black indeed, for such a blow will have been struck at our prestige, such a wedge have been driven into the heart of India, that the whole country will have become one mass of seething disaffection, and every discontented man in India—Hindoo, Mussulman, Mahratta, or Sikh—will be welded into one expectant and mighty crowd, straining their eyes to catch the first gleam of Russian steel." Our British Army will have to be increased then to double, perhaps treble, its present strength. By the time our enemy was ready, India would be boiling over, our finances almost bankrupt, our Native Army a broken reed. We should have to meet an advance of 100,000 men from Cabul, as many from Ghuznee, and columns from Chittral, on Peshawur and on Sealkote, joined by incalculable numbers of tagrag Afghans. To meet these with any prospect of success, we should require, says the authority we refer to, at least 350,000 men, of which, owing to the uncertain temper of the native tribes, two-thirds at least should be British soldiers! But that is not all. Under certain conditions at least 250,000 men more would be needed to hold India quiet. Gentlemen rulers, be not deceived! Big battalions must be met by big battalions. Neither the pacific tendencies of M. de Giers nor the ability of Lord Dufferin can stay the gravitating forces of Russia upon India, which, like "the glacier's slow, resistless mass, rolls onward day by day," but which can never overtop the Hindoo Khush and the peaks of the Himalayas if we take time by the forelock, and with resolute hearts and energetic hands build up the only buttresses that can save our Empire. Whether it be worth the price, it is for our rulers to say; but surely those who refuse to take precautions in time will have a terrible account to settle with the people of England, as well as with the people of India, for the ruin and destruction of which they had been forewarned in vain.

WITH reference to the new Regulations as to voluntary retirement, recently issued in Clause 109, Army Circulars, 1884, and Lord Hartington's explanations on the subject in the House of Commons, when his main argument was that regimental promotion was going on too rapidly, a Return has lately been issued which we fancy the Secretary of State will find some little difficulty in reconciling with his statements about rapid promotion. The return was moved for in the House of Lords by the Earl of Powis, and shows the "number of first appointments to Cavalry and Infantry of the Line respectively (excluding Household Cavalry, Foot Guards, and Colonial corps), in 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883; the number of Lieutenants promoted Captains in Cavalry and Infantry of the Line respectively in each of those years; and the number of Cavalry regiments and Line battalions on establishment." It is with the promotion part of this return that we wish to deal just now, and were we only desirous of captiously carping at Lord Hartington's new regulation, we need but recite the figures given in the Return, which apparently proves conclusively that the rate of promotion in the years 1882 and 1883 was below that of 1880. And as a matter of fact, the actual number of officers promoted is less, the Return giving 292 promotions for 1880, 341 for 1881, 181 for 1882, and 230 for 1883. But were we to stop here, we should lay ourselves open to the retort that the actual numbers prove nothing, owing to the fact that on July 1, 1881, the establishment of Captains in all Infantry regiments was reduced by two per battalion, and that since that time a large number of vacancies which have occurred have been absorbed instead of giving promotion to subalterns. But, even taking this into consideration, we shall be able to prove from this Return that, taking the two years 1882 and 1883 together, which is the only just way of making the calculation, owing to the large number of supernumerary Captains awaiting absorption at the commencement of 1882, the number of promotions now taking place is less than in 1880—the year before that in which the whole system was reorganised in order to accelerate the promotion of officers. The large number of promotions (341) in 1881 is, of course, altogether abnormal, and due to the changes which came into effect on July 1 of that year. But we think we may fairly take the number of promotions for 1880 as about the average number of promotions for subalterns up to and including the first half of the year 1881. On this assumption, if we deduct from the total of Infantry promotions for 1881 (288) half the total for 1880 (257), viz., 128, we have left a total of 160 promotions for the latter half of 1881. But, as on July 1, 1881, every Infantry battalion had two supernumeraries to be absorbed, it was decided that only alternate vacancies could be filled; and we consider we are, therefore, perfectly justified in presuming that while 160 vacancies were filled during the first six months after the reorganisation, another 160 vacancies must have been absorbed during the same period. The Return further informs us that the establishment of Infantry Line battalions is 141; therefore, there were on July 1, 1881, 282 supernumeraries to be absorbed,—that is, deducting the 160 absorbed in 1881, 122 still remaining to be absorbed on January 1, 1882. We may, for our present purpose, take it that, practically, all these supernumeraries had been absorbed by the end of 1883, and therefore we will take the two years 1882 and 1883 together, as there is no means of deciding what proportion of absorptions took place in each year, though of course it would be greater in 1882 than in 1883. In the two years there were 330 infantry promotions to the rank of captain, making with the 122 absorptions a total of 452 vacancies, or an average of 226 for each year, and this, therefore, is the rate of promotion for 1882 and 1883 as against 257 for 1880. Certainly, if the Secretary of State for War was referring to the Cavalry when he spoke of the increased rapidity of promotion, it does appear to be a fact that in 1883 there were seven more troops filled than in 1880, the numbers being 35 in 1880 and 42 in 1883; but as the restrictive regulations as regards voluntary retirement apply equally to infantry and cavalry, the two arms must be taken together, and it then appears that, after all due allowance for absorptions, as we have shown above, and including the number of Cavalry promotions given in the Return, the total for Cavalry and Infantry together in 1883 is 268 only, as against 292 promotions in 1880. What, then, becomes of the reason assigned for the new rules? And, moreover, we have pointed out before, and we now repeat that, at any rate as far as the Infantry are concerned, voluntary retirement will not, but regimental promotion will, be very considerably interfered with by the change.

There are now only three officers living who were present at the Battle of Trafalgar, Admiral Sir George Rose Sartorius, aged 94, midshipman of the Tonnant; Commander William Vicary, aged 93, 1st-class Volunteer on board the Achilles; and Lieutenant-Colonel James Fynmore, Royal Marines, aged 95, midshipman on board the Africa, subsequently first lieutenant of Marines in Lord Exmouth's victory at Algiers, August 27, 1816.

A resolution has been adopted by the Washington Prime Meridian Conference declaring the universal day to be the mean solar day, "beginning for all the world at the moment of mean midnight of the initial meridian coinciding with the beginning of the civil day, and that meridian be counted from zero up to 24 hours." The Conference also expresses a hope that, as soon as practicable, astronomical and nautical days may be arranged to begin at mean midnight. It will be seen that the Conference have come to an agreement that some very necessary reforms be effected to simplify matters that have only too long remained in an unsettled and chaotic state. Although time will be reckoned from 1 o'clock to 24 o'clock, it is not probable that the general arrangements as to time will be suddenly assailed by reformers. The present ordinary time-reckoning will still obtain, although gradually the changes will be introduced. Professor Janssen, the French delegate, proposed that the Conference should express the hope that technical studies to regulate and extend the application of the decimal system to the divisions of the circle and of time would be resumed, in order to permit of the extending of that application to all cases where it might present real advantages. The motion was adopted. The Congress has been much more successful than was anticipated.

The Secretary of State has decided that from the commencement of the season 1884-85, when officers are necessarily employed doing duty with troops, Canal dues for families permitted to embark shall be chargeable to the public, the officers being liable only for the messing at ordinary rates.

Rear-Admiral Tryon will leave England on December 4, to take over the command of the Australian station, vice Commodore J. Erskine, whose term of service has expired. The Squadron, which has been recently strengthened, will henceforth be a Rear-Admiral's command. The Lords of the Admiralty have appointed Captain Atwell Peregrine W. Lake to the command of her Majesty's ship Nelson, which is to be recommissioned as flagship of Rear-Admiral G. Tryon. Amongst the staff will be Commander W. des Voeux Hamilton, who served with the Naval Brigade in the Egyptian War of 1882. The command of the Espiègle, one of the vessels of the Australian squadron, became vacant on Wednesday, on the expiration of Captain C. A. G. Bridge's appointment.

Although France has proclaimed the blockade of the Island of Formosa, it is difficult to understand how the order can be practically carried into effect. The western coast of Formosa alone contains ten ports which are in constant communication with the continent and with the Panghoa Islands. Admiral Courbet has only twenty-three vessels at his disposal. At least one-half will be required to guard Kelung and Tamsui. Taking into consideration the other services, it is barely possible that the French commander will be able to dispose of seven or eight vessels for carrying out the blockade.

Naval affairs were brought to the notice of Parliament at the commencement of the autumn Session with a promptitude which indicates that practical good will probably result from the demand so energetically made, that the British Navy shall be speedily rendered thoroughly efficient and equal to the duties it may have to perform. The ex-First Lord of the Admiralty, at the earliest possible opportunity, inquired whether the Government contemplated taking measures to relieve the anxiety which prevails in the public mind as to the state of the Navy, and particularly as to its efficiency for the protection of the interests of the trade and commerce of the country in the event of war. Mr. W. H. Smith went straight to the point, and elicited a reply from the Premier which will be regarded with a certain amount of satisfaction. Mr. Gladstone intimated that, for a considerable time, the subject of the Naval establishment of the country had been under the consideration of the Admiralty, and announced that in the course of next month the department would bring before Parliament a statement of their views on the general state of the Navy. The "national demand for adequate defence" has been so far responded to in as straightforward a manner as the question was put by the ex-First Lord of the Admiralty. In the House of Lords the proposed Parliamentary Committee was referred to, and the course of events must now be awaited with patient interest.

Some interest is being manifested regarding the succession to the position of Naval Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, and the names of at least two Vice-Admirals have been mentioned in connection with the appointment.

The Naval Brigade on the Nile has "scored another triumph" by the successful passage of the second large steamer, the Gizeh, over the great gate of the Cataract at Abka. It is regarded as improbable, however, that another large steamer could be got through, owing to the rapid subsidence of the Nile, which was at its highest level this year at the Second Cataract on August 30 and 31.

On the first day of the Parliamentary Session Sir H. Drummond-Wolff asked the Prime Minister whether any successor had been appointed to Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, "for whose courtesy he was very grateful." At present, remarked the junior Member for Portsmouth, the Admiralty was represented in neither House of Parliament, and he therefore wished to know to what Minister inquiries respecting that Department were to be addressed. The Premier pointed out that Sir H. Drummond-Wolff had "inadvertently fallen into an error," there being one of the Lords of the Admiralty—Sir Thomas Brassey—in the House, and questions touching affairs relating to that Department could be addressed to him. Not content with this answer, the hon. Member inquired what "Privy Councillor" at present represented the Admiralty in the House. Sir Drummond-Wolff gained nothing by putting this question, for Mr. Gladstone promptly explained that there has not been for some time a Privy Councillor representing the Admiralty in the House of Commons, the late Secretary of the Admiralty not having been a Privy Councillor. In the House of Lords, Viscount Sidmouth gave notice that on the return of the First Lord of the Admiralty he would ask her Majesty's Government whether they were prepared to appoint a Parliamentary inquiry into the strength and condition of the Naval forces of the country.

Lieutenant Pullen, of the Indus, lately employed on the Anglo-French Boundary Commission, Gold Coast, West Africa, as senior British Commissioner, who has just been appointed to the command of the Lark in Australia, will be in charge of the surveying operations on that station.

The London and China Telegraph is responsible for the following statement:—"We hear that large orders have come forward from the Chinese Government for various arms and munitions of war, which are being executed as rapidly as possible. Amongst the consignments are heavy guns, small arms, and a large quantity of cartridges. We have heard of one purchase of 5,000,000 cartridges, manufactured at the time of the Franco-German War, and which are now being shipped to the East. Of what use the powder will be after 14 years remains to be demonstrated. It is probable that it will not be sufficiently powerful to eject the bullet from the muzzle of the rifle. Naturally, foreigners will be accused of unfair dealing. It certainly does seem strange, however, that the Chinese officials should buy such trash, as they well know what it is they are purchasing."

Vice-Admiral Dowell has distributed the ships of his squadron to protect the residents at the places named during hostilities between France and China:—The Audacious (flagship) and the Midge at Hong Kong; the Swift at Canton; the Champion at the Pagoda Anchorage, Foochow; the Merlin at Sharp Peak, River Min; the Fly at Takao, for the protection of the residents at Taiwan Fu and Amphing; the Foxhound in the Gulf of Tonquin, alternately visiting Hoihow and Pakhoi; the Cockchafer at Tamsui; the Cleopatra at Shanghai; and the Daring at Ningpo.

Mr. Bannerman having been appointed to succeed Mr. Trevelyan as Chief Secretary for Ireland, it is reported that the vacancy at the Admiralty will be offered to Sir Thomas Brassey, who now fills the position of Civil Lord.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of the Duke of Edinburgh, consisting of the Minotaur, Agincourt, Northumberland, Achilles, Sultan, and Neptune, left Plymouth Sound on Monday morning for Gibraltar and Madeira. Before the Squadron left, Rear-Admiral Curme paid an official visit to the Duke of Edinburgh on board the Minotaur. The Channel Squadron is expected to return home early in December.

It is proposed to make sundry changes in the nomenclature of the Bengal Army. No change, however, will be made without consulting the wishes of the men, and there need be no fear of any corps having to part with its title unwillingly. As every one knows, the cavalry of that Presidency is called the Bengal Cavalry, but the infantry goes by the name of the Bengal Native Infantry; the reason for the longer designation being that in former days the Bengal Infantry was represented by the Company's European regiments, while the Sepoy battalions became Native Infantry by way of distinction. But now that the title "Bengal Infantry" is left vacant, the reasons for adopting it are obvious, while no one probably will care to maintain that any loss of tradition is involved in the dropping of the superfluous adjective "Native." Again, a large number of the Bengal Native Infantry regiments, in addition to the common appellation, have titles of their own, which, in a number of cases, have long ceased to have any appropriateness whatever. It is difficult, for instance, to see what the 13th N.I. gains by being called, in brackets, the Shekawattee Regiment, a description which merely marks its having originally been a local battalion; or why the 14th should continue its nominal connection with Ferozepore, or the 15th (universally known as the 15th Sikhs) with Loodhiana. In other cases, as, for example, that of the 12th Kelat-i-Ghilzai, the local name marks a fact in the regimental history, and conveys associations which there may be a strong reluctance to lose.

We see that the captain of the large French transport, the Aveyron, which went ashore in the Red Sea and became a total wreck, has been tried by court-martial and honourably acquitted. In such cases, a French court has three verdicts open to it,—death, when a captain runs his ship ashore on purpose; imprisonment, when he is found guilty of negligence; dismissal, when he shows incapacity. The proceedings of the court and the ground for acquittal have not been revealed. French courts are often extremely lenient in dealing with officers who have done the State some service.

Colonel Llewellyn has been appointed a Colonel on the Staff, to command the Royal Artillery in Egypt, vice Colonel Barnes, deceased.

A telegram dated Calcutta, October 22, on the subject of the Zhob Valley expedition, says:—"All the chiefs of the Bori Valley have surrendered unconditionally. Shah Jehan having sent a message applying for a safe conduct and an assurance that he would not be transported, Sir R. Sandeman replied, giving the required assurance and inviting him to come in. Shah Jehan, however, insulted the messenger, who returned after a narrow escape with his life. The message was evidently a stratagem to gain time. The Muskheyls and Kiligais, who sent conciliatory messages, have also changed their minds, and have refused to come in. The Hemzadais continue friendly. The force is still advancing."

Colonel Chesney will, we understand, come home on furlough in December, when Colonel Newmarch will officiate for him.

The Artillery for the Zhob Valley Field Force is as follows:—Officer Commanding, Lieutenant-Colonel Sir J. W. Campbell, Bart., R.A.; Adjutant, Lieutenant L. D. Jackson, R.A. Batteries:—No. 9 Mountain Battery, Northern Division, Royal Artillery; two guns, No. 1 Bombay Native Mountain Battery. The former battery is commanded by Major and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel T. Graham, and has the following officers:—Captain Dacres Cunningham, Lieutenants H. A. Inglis, H. de T. Phillips, and M. M. Noble (attached). The gunners are Europeans, and the drivers Sikhs and Natives of the Punjab. It is armed with six of the new 7-pounder M.L.R. jointed guns of 400 lb. weight, and is the celebrated "screw-gun" battery which accompanied the force under Sir F. Roberts during the march from Cabul to Candahar, under Lieutenant-Colonel (then Major) Graham, its present commanding officer. The battery arrived in Quetta in January last, after a march of over 800 miles from its old quarters in the Murree Hills. The No. 1 Bombay Native Mountain Battery joins the force at Dukki. It is commanded by Captain A. Keene, with Lieutenant Elliott. Both gunners and drivers are natives, and the battery is armed with four 7-pounder M.L.R. guns of 200 lb. weight, a gun which will doubtless eventually give place to the "jointed gun" throughout the Mountain Artillery. Major H. F. Smyth, R.A., accompanies the force as Provost Marshal.

A French writer, who signs himself "Perry,"—a name which bore an ill-odour in the British Army some years ago—is responsible for the following narrative of events in Tonquin:—"We must also take into account the quality of the enemy's troops. There can be no doubt as to China opposing us with her best soldiers. We learn by telegraph that the Chinese returned to the charge on the night of the 10th inst., in order to recover the positions which they had lost, and were not repulsed until after five hours' fighting. This obstinacy on their part is all the more significative since the war [but there is no war] is being waged sans merci. People have been astonished, and not without reason, at the number of killed, 3,000, when no figures indicated the number of wounded and the prisoners. Alas! no prisoners are made on either side, and every wounded man is a dead man [we presume on the losing side, on the væ victis principle]. The Chinese spare no one, and the Tonquinese have the same habit. On the other hand, it is impossible to make prisoners, for half the army would be required to guard them. It would be necessary to double the garrison in the Delta if there were Chinese prisoners. There are neither forts nor prisoners, nor any place where from 10,000 to 15,000 prisoners could be kept [are we to gather from this that from 10,000 to 15,000 prisoners have been slain?], and it would be dangerous to confine them in Lower Tonquin, in a country which we can hardly be said to occupy." "The number of Chinese who have descended from the hills of Langson cannot be set down at less than 30,000, since 10,000 men penetrated into the valley of Loch Nan, and since the column of General Negrier met with a stout resistance on the same day that Colonel Donnier fought his two brilliant actions at Lang Kep." The writer is very much afraid lest the victories of his countrymen should turn out sterile; and one of his confrères points out that, even at the rate of 3,000 a day, it would take the French troops twelve years to kill off all the male population in China capable of bearing arms. La France doubts the reports of 3,000 Chinamen having been slaughtered at Lang Kep and 3,000 more at Tamsui, adding that these suspicious figures, derived from the telegrams of the Times, remind it of days of old when Christian warriors used to spit their unbelieving enemies by threes, in the name of the Father, and Son, and the Holy Ghost. As regards the slaughter of prisoners, it might be well if our gallant neighbours were to show a better example to the "heathen Chinee." A few pigtails on the Boulevards would have a very cheering and picturesque effect.

It is understood that in addition to a return showing the cost of the annual migration to the hills of Government head-quarters during the last five years, now nearly ready, the Government of India has been called on by the Secretary of State to furnish a full account of the expenditure on this head since Lord Lawrence's time, to be sent in later.

The Avenir Militaire, discussing the condition of the French Fleet, draws attention to the rapidity with which types get out of date. "There is the Sfax, for example, it says, which might have been given to us by its designer ten years ago, if the Admirals had not rejected the plans as too complicated. The Sfax would have been the other day a real 1st-class cruiser, far superior to the Tourville, the Duguesne, or the Shah, and all the other types built in France or elsewhere. But next year, should she be completed, it is not at all certain that she will not arrive too late. The Milan, which is to steam two knots faster than she does, will be a smaller and better craft. Neither one nor the other will be able within a restricted radius to resist the pursuit of a swarm of torpedo-boats, costing in all only half her price. On the great highways of the ocean, the torpedo-boats of 240 tons which we have on the stocks at Havre could overtake and sink them. According to Captain Gougeard, the ex-Minister of Marine, the Sfax, &c., are only instruments of warfare intended for the piping times of peace. The Avenir is very much afraid that the fine ironclads which France is building, and which fill the British mind with apprehension, will be out of date before they are ready to go to sea. The Avenir then blames the French Admiralty for having built cruisers on the model of the Shah and the Inconstant—the Tourville and the Duguesne—when the English had given up that type. "Our rivals," adds the writer, "adopted a model which we rejected; they built ten of the Constance type first of all, then the Iris and the Mercury, faster vessels, which do them great honour. They will soon have six vessels ready, and one of a still more perfect type, like the Leander, which is expected to steam 18 knots, and to be almost insubmersible. These vessels are smaller than the Sfax; but they will be faster and, consequently, superior to her. The Arethusa, one of these, is being prepared for the Chinese station; and also a new ironclad, in order to show the Celestials ships superior to ours." Taking it altogether, the Avenir Militaire is dissatisfied with the state of the French Fleet, which, it says, on several foreign stations, cuts a very poor figure.

Captain Samuel Long, who has been appointed to the command of the Agamemnon, served during the Crimean War, including the bombardment of Sebastopol, in the old Agamemnon, and Royal Albert.

The French are not over-pleased with the conduct of the Tonquin business. Despatches have been withheld by the Government; it is clear from General Millot's farewell addressed to his troops that he did not, as was represented, ask to be recalled, and it is evident that large reinforcements are required. The people have been deceived, they are disappointed, and they murmur. The great question which our neighbours are now trying to solve is how to get men to send to Tonquin. It has been suggested that the 15th Army Corps might be mobilised. Why one army corps in preference to another? The answer is that the 15th Army Corps is furnished by a district devoted to Republican principles. But if the Republicans are called upon to make sacrifices because they are Republicans, how long will they remain Republicans? A mobilisation would be a very serious and expensive affair. It means not only raising a corps to its fighting establishment as regards men, but requisitioning horses, carts, &c. Why not adopt a partial mobilisation? Even this would offer serious objections. Why not take the necessary number of men from the ranks of the active Army? The companies are only 40 strong at present. It would require 300 companies,—that is to say, 75 battalions or 19 regiments to furnish the reinforcements required. Why not call for volunteers? But time presses, and it would take long to organise such a corps. And, with all this, here are the elections at hand, and, on the eve of a General Election, how can any Government in its senses ask for men or money, and both are sadly wanted? The probability is that in the end the reinforcements will be drawn from Algeria. It is now regretted in France that the plan for forming a Colonial army, proposed a year ago by General Thibaudin, was not at once acted upon. That plan has yet to be sanctioned by Parliament.

ARMY PAY DEPARTMENT.

Pending publication of the new Royal Warrant, the length of service required to render an officer eligible for appointment has been reduced from ten to seven years. An officer will not be required to resign his combatant commission on appointment, but will be seconded in his regiment for a period of five years, at the end of which time he may either elect to revert to regimental duty or to be permanently appointed to the Pay Department. In the latter case he would then be required to resign his combatant commission. An officer while serving on his combatant commission in the Army Pay Department will receive pay as an officer of that department.

COLONIAL DEFENCES.

A Parliamentary paper has been published containing the correspondence which has passed between the War, Colonial, and India Offices on the subject of the defence of British possessions and commerce abroad, beginning with a letter from the War Office to the Colonial Office, March 19, 1884, and ending with a communication from the Treasury, dated Aug. 12, 1884. The correspondence includes a summary of Recommendations of the Inspector-General of Fortifications, which have been approved generally by the Defence Committee under the presidency of the Duke of Cambridge. The proposals have been based on the principle that sudden attacks could only be made by comparatively small squadrons; and the defences have been calculated in each case to provide against such contingencies. In the event of a more serious attack being contemplated by any foreign Power, it could not be kept secret, and the support of the British Fleet might then be counted on. Submarine mines would in most cases form an integral part of the defences, and their powerful aid would be brought into action to co-operate with the artillery defences proposed. On March 19 Lord Hartington informs Lord Kimberley that "it is proposed that measures for proceeding at once with the defences of Aden shall be undertaken," the expense being equally divided between India and Great Britain. Lord Kimberley on June 9 entirely concurs, and is prepared to contribute. The Colonial Office on July 15 informs the Treasury that, in the case of Singapore and Hong Kong, where the Colonies are to defray the cost of the necessary works, her Majesty's Government contributes the armaments. "Lord Derby is of opinion that action should be taken with the least possible delay." As to Ceylon, the Imperial Government is to defend Trincomalee, while Ceylon defends Colombo at its own cost if it pleases. In like manner the Imperial Government will defend Simon's Bay, leaving the Cape to defend Table Bay. Mauritius, like Hong Kong and Singapore, should contribute the expense of the fortifications, while the whole cost of works and armaments at St. Helena, Sierra Leone, St. Lucia, and Jamaica should be borne by the Imperial Exchequer. On Aug. 2, the War Office informs the Treasury that her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the recommendations of the Inspector-General of Fortifications "afford a proper basis of action in dealing with the defence of the various stations, and that it is very desirable that the necessary steps should be at once taken for giving effect to the proposals so far as the stations of Trincomalee, Hong Kong, Singapore, and Aden are concerned." Lord Hartington hopes that he may be favoured with the Treasury decision in respect to the works at Aden, and also with instructions as to whether such Supplementary Estimate shall be presented at once in the next Session of Parliament. Mr. Leonard Courtney replies on Aug. 12 that "My Lords consent to provide one-half, not exceeding £64,400, of the cost of the proposed works and armament at Aden. But as they understand that the Government of India is willing to advance the whole expense in the first instance, very little, if any, of the charge will fall on Army votes this year; and it will certainly be unnecessary to present a supplementary estimate for it this Session." The aggregate Imperial charge on Aden, Singapore, and Hong Kong will be for works £47,150, and for armament £103,750, making a total of £150,900; and no expenditure will be needed for armament until the works have been completed. "To complete the information required for Parliament and for this department, an estimate should be framed of the charge that will have to be defrayed from year to year, out of Imperial and non-Imperial funds, respectively, supposing the whole scheme be carried out, giving precedence to the different works in the order of urgency."

OFFICERS EXPENSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—So much has been said latterly about the expenses of officers in the Army, and many means have been tried by the authorities to cut them down—but with no, or at least very partial, success. To force the officers of a regiment to give up something they have been accustomed to because a small proportion cannot afford to pay, seems hardly fair, and such a system tends to divide the officers of a regiment into "cliques," a very undesirable state of affairs indeed. The only satisfactory way to solve the difficulty seems to be by increasing the income of the impecunious officer; the question is,—How can this be done? It is this question which I will endeavour to answer, and at the same time show that the means I propose to adopt at once be beneficial to the service and to the officers immediately concerned. It was suddenly found that British officers were wanting—they were not up to the mark in technical subjects; the result is that now every officer has to pass a very strict examination before promotion, so strict, in fact, that it might do for a staff officer. If this course is persisted in, it will drive many excellent officers from the service, which would be a great loss, for they are mostly keen sportsmen, and up to any amount of hard work—just the men who are wanted on active service to do the rough regimental work, which requires little more than great hardihood and a small amount of common-sense. Now, I take it for granted that most impecunious officers would willingly make an effort, if by so doing they could increase their income, the more so that they have more time on their hands than their richer comrades, not being able to join in many sports and amusements which cost money. At present they have little or no inducement to make themselves proficient in their profession. A young officer, full of zeal on joining, may spend a few hours daily in reading, but after a short time the example of the majority of his brother officers and the dull routine of regimental duties make him abandon his books. The plan I propose is the following:—To establish a series of prizes for the best essays on certain professional subjects, to be competed for half-yearly. I would divide the prizes into classes,—one class for officers of under six years' service, one for officers of under 12 years' service, and one for officers of over 12 years' service,—the number of prizes in each class to vary according to the number of essays. Were this division not made, young officers would stand but little chance, and they are the men who require most help, and they are also the men that it is the country's interest to encourage. This system, if adopted and carried out thoroughly, would answer the purpose far better than vain efforts to cut down regimental expenses, and also be better than endeavouring to make architects of men who are only required to do masons' work.—I am, &c.,

H. D'ESTAMPES VALLANCEY.

FATIGUES.

"Service" writes:—"'Old Soldier,' in your paper of the 18th inst., does well to recommend the employment of prisoners on fatigues, instead of at constant shot-drill and oakum-picking. But I doubt whether it would be advisable to do away altogether with shot-drill, as it is a punishment required for some bad characters. I would, however, go further than your correspondent, and suggest that all soldiers who are awarded confinement to barracks as a minor punishment should be employed on fatigues in cleaning washhouses, latrines, drains, &c., instead of uselessly being marched about in kit-drill order or marching-order. Marching, either with or without marching-order equipment, is part of the duty of a soldier, and should not be made a punishment. An amendment of Paras. 42 and 43, Section vi., Queen's Regulations, to this effect, would, I believe, be a great advantage in every way."

A telegram dated Durban, Oct. 22, says:—"The text is published of an impassioned letter written by Mr. Joubert to the Volksraad in sending in his resignation. He says that he is unable any longer, in justice to himself, to hold office under a Government which has deliberately broken faith with England and violated the Convention by annexing Montsioa's territory. He appeals to the people, notwithstanding his resignation, to support the Government, and closely to watch the course of events. This letter is naturally calculated to make a great impression throughout the whole Dutch community, to the advantage of Mr. Joubert and the prejudice of the Government. He disclaims all personal animosity towards Mr. Krüger, but it is evident that there is more behind than appears on the surface."

"MOSE IN EGITTO."

[An adaptation of an old "Mystery," by "W. E. G.' Novel scenery, machinery, dresses, and decorations (the latter chiefly Medjidies, Osmanies, K.C.B.'s).] [Act I., Scene 1. A sumptuous apartment, fitted with water-bottles, inkstands, fly-flappers, &c., Maison Baird, Ismaileyah, Cairo. A table at which is seated El Baringee, the magician; deep in thought, his spectacles, bedewed with the vapours of reflection, glisten through cigarette smoke, papers, reports, despatch boxes, and all the usual business.]

El Baringee (reads)—More complaints, of course! Here's a confounded nigg—no, I don't mean that!—an intelligent aboriginal Egyptian claiming a thousand lire,—or is it livres?—for his mule killed by the railway-train at Bulak-Dacroor! It's absurd! Never saw a mule yet that couldn't get away from the trains on that line if it liked. But something must be done. There's that ridiculous tribunal——(Knock at the door.) Come in.

[Enter a Board of Railway Directors, all in one man deep-browed, large-footed and bodied, heavy-bearded.]

El Baringee.—The very man I wanted to see! My dear Ell Measurer, read that!

Ell Measurer (reads, growls, reads again, and finally thumps the table).—Not a single piastre! I don't believe the mule was ever alive. Why, none of my trains go more than three miles an hour. It's all a plant!

El B.—Yes! Your plant is bad, old fellow. But we must fork-out something,—say, twelve hundred piastres? Eh?

El M. (furious).—Oh, of course! Make it anything you please. I shall have nothing to say to it. Good morning, good morning! I'm quite ill. This sort of thing! And the flies! And that confounded Timmerman—whom the Times will call Zimmerman—I wish he was in solitude,—are all too much for me.

[Exit.

El B.—Conscientious fellow, very. Doesn't grasp the situation though. Like his carriages,—run off the rails! I must sign an order on the caisse for, say, a thousand piastres (writes). Well, that's the mule cleared off. What's this? (Reads.) A complaint from Fibrino Shekel Brandysodino and Company, that they cannot get their cotton delivered in Alexandria because of the block on the rail,—a crisis imminent in the cotton market. How very unpleasant! Must send for Ell Measurer again. (Electric bell rings, E. M. appears in a blaze of blue fire through trap l.c.)

El M.—You called? Here we are again! (Strikes comic attitude).

El B.—My dear Ell M., this is really no joke! Here is a crisis threatened because these people cannot get their cotton delivered. I really must ask——

El M.—Don't ask me anything, but give me some rolling-stock. How is cotton to be brought if there's nothing to carry it? All my trucks, vans, carriages, locomotives, are larking about in Upper Egypt—Minieh, Girgeh, Assiout—Lord Wolseley knows where!

El B.—"Who's he who wishes for more trucks from England? My own Ell Measurer?" I say, old man, just write a pleasant, chatty sort of memo. on the general advantages of rolling-stock on railways, and the relations of cotton to commerce, and I'll send it to Brandysodino, with a promise of lots of carriages—and compensation to be paid some time as the indemnity. Ha! Ha! Ha! (They both laugh consumedly—A knock at the door.) Who's there? Come in!

[Enter bland, elderly gentleman, in Stamboulee fez and smoking cigarette.]

El B.—My dear Nubar! What, again? It must be half-an-hour since I saw you, quite: never can see you too often, you know, eh?

Nubar.—Ah! I perceive you have not seen the "Phare" this morning; you would not be so cheery if you had!

El B.—My dear Pasha, "Phares" are only to be seen at night. Who cares about that farthing candle? Ha! Ha! Ha! This air is so exhilarating, you know. That was a pun—my second this year.

Nubar (gloomily).—I do. They call me names. They say you are a duffer, that the Commissioner is a buffer, that the Khedive is a ——. But just read for yourself (hands paper).

El B. (reads).—Yes! This is too monstrous. Suspend the "Phare" at once!—douse his glim for a month! But mind! You must say you did it,—not I.

Nubar.—Thank you. It shall be done. I'm so glad you let me snuff the fellow out.

[Salaam; exit. As Nubar goes out, the head of Public Works Department pops in his head.]

P. W. D.—Just one moment, Great Baringee. Is Bubbley Bey to be sent to Garbieh or Charkieh? I must get your orders to give to my nominal chef, that benighted black brother, or he will stand on form, and say he is my superior.

El B.—Send Bubbley Bey to Jericho—or Garbieh, whichever you please, my boy, and say "I sent him thither; I, who have neither pity, love, nor fear,"—of anything, except appearing to interfere with the native administration.

[Scene closes.]

[Scene II. Maison Baird. Room on right opposite to El B.'s. Same style. High Commissioner standing with back to fireplace at one side of table. At the other, several European gentlemen of various degrees of refinement are listening attentively.]

H. C. (loq.)—As I was saying, when the Khedive interrupted me by sending over to know if I would authorise the repairs of his carriage and a new dress for the Hanoum—whoever he is—I wish you all gentlemen clearly to understand that under no circumstances will her Majesty's Government interfere with the administration of this country. This is most important. You are all correspondents of great journals, and it is very necessary you should be up to snuff, to use a colloquial phrase. We advise and report—or we report and advise—and all that sort of thing, do you see? The public at home will not hear of annexation or protection. "Convey the wise call it,"—Shakespeare! Hem! For heaven's sake, don't mention the horrid words! Why, I assure you it makes them all ill in Downing Street—positively ill—when they hear or see them! And you are so intelligent! Do you twig? (Winks pleasantly.) Ha! ha! ha! What a time we are having, to be sure! Have you seen Karnak? No! What! not yet? We really must arrange about that. Important that gentlemen in your position should be able to study institutions of country. I was immensely instructed by my visit to Philæ. But remember! Not a word of annexation! (Sings),—

> "Oh, no! we never mention it,
> It's name is never heard," &c.

Good morning. So glad to have met you.

[Scene closes.]

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

Route-marching has been ordered to commence on the 1st prox. at Aldershot, varied with outpost duty, minor tactics, and drill, according to the weather.

The "Divisional Captain of the day" has been discontinued, and his duties are now performed by the field-officer of the day and the captain of the week.

Reconnaissances will be made in the country north of Farnham, and on the line of advance on London by the main Farnham-Hog'sback-Guildford road. One officer and two non-commissioned officers from each regiment in the division will commence a fortnight's practice on the 1st prox., and similar parties will be detailed on the 15th and 1st of each month until the end of February, 1885. The sketches and reports will be forwarded to Major Miles, Garrison-Instructor.

The Committee have reported that moss litter, although an excellent substitute for straw under certain conditions, is unsuitable for use in military stables.

It is intended to erect shooting galleries in the North and South Camps and Cavalry Barracks. The "Morris Aiming and Sighting Apparatus" will be used.

THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Pray permit me to take very grave exception to some of the statements—thoughtless in the extreme, I would call them—which have been made by your correspondent, "Monitor," in your issue of the 18th inst., regarding the Militia. In the first place, he says, "I mean simply that the Army quite understands the position assigned to the Militia, which they do not recognise as that of soldiers." In this letter I shall only speak of what has come directly within my personal knowledge. The assertion which I have quoted does an injustice to Line officers. My experience of them (and it has not been limited) is that whenever associated with Militia officers in camp or in barrack, they always avail of every opportunity of conceding in the fullest sense of the term the most complete recognition of the military status to which the Militia is entitled. Furthermore, this feeling has become more marked since the introduction of the territorial system. I can carry my memory back to a time when a vast gulf separated a Linesman from a Militiaman; now, comparatively speaking, but a narrow stream divides them. Your correspondent goes on to say:—"It is within my own knowledge that an officer commanding a brigade depôt was once censured by the Commander-in-Chief for employing a Militia officer, who was termed in the official letter as 'a mere civilian,' in a military capacity, and very properly, because under existing circumstances Militia officers have no military status, and to employ them on military duties connected with the Army is irregular, if not illegal." Misinformation, as far as the first part of this wild statement goes, is the only explanation or excuse that can be offered for it. It is utterly impossible to conceive that the Duke of Cambridge, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army (of which the Adjt.-Gen., Lord Wolseley, has recently described the Militia as being "part and parcel"), could be so unacquainted with its administration. At every brigade depôt at the present moment, there are several Militia officers (some of whom have been actively so employed for over a year), whose duty it is not only to command Line soldiers, but also junior officers of the Line. The same system existed during the late Egyptian Campaign, when provisional battalions, consisting of depôts of the regiments at the seat of war, were formed and officered by Militia officers of the affiliated battalions. The second part of your correspondent's paragraph I shall deal with after quoting further from his letter, where he says,—"And here, I maintain, lies the absurdity. A sort of military character is given to the Militia . . . . . . at the same time, when called upon for duty, the colonel has no military authority outside his own regiment." Really this is so flagrant that it is almost not worth a reply. Even before the territorial system was entered upon, I was present on the occasion of a field-day, when my own colonel, acting as brigadier, commanded the troops, consisting of the 4th Batn. 60th Rifles, a troop of the 5th Dragoon Guards, a battery of Royal Artillery, and another Militia regiment, &c. One more refutation, and I shall finish. "A Linesman can sit upon a court-martial to try a Militiaman," says "Monitor," "but in no case could a Militia officer be a member of a court-martial to try a Line soldier." Indeed, now what does "Monitor" think of this? Under the presidency of a major of the Royal Artillery, and at which were present other Militia officers, besides officers of the Line and Royal Artillery, I myself, in the year 1880, sat upon a court-martial to try a soldier of the Gloucestershire Regiment, when it was the 28th Foot. In the following manner ends this astounding letter, from which I feel I have quoted too freely:—"Therefore I maintain," says the writer, "that my contention that the Militia is sham military service," &c., "and that its officers are held to be mere civilians is correct, and to this cause must be traced the want of officers." Surely, Sir, this gentleman does not belong to the Militia, or he would know that the officers of the force are now subject to the conditions of the Army Act and Articles of War at all periods of the year, and, precisely to the same extent with officers of the Regular Army, owe allegiance to Military Law. "Ne sutor ultra crepidam" is a sound motto. Doubtless your correspondent may shine in other matters, but with those of the Militia he displays, to use a mild term, deplorable ignorance. I sincerely trust that I shall not be considered rude if I remark that to be a "Monitor" one should be qualified to instruct, and above all he should carefully refrain from making statements of a reckless character, which are worthless and only mislead.—I am, &c.,

A FUSILIER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—As an old Linesman serving in the Militia, and taking a great interest in its welfare, allow me to say it is a pity that your correspondent, "Monitor," did not endeavour to get up his subject properly before rushing into print, and to suggest that the nom-de-plume he modestly adopts is a very decided misnomer for the rôle he assumes. To wade through his numerous and erroneous statements, or rather notions, would be far too tedious, and as they are so evident to the initiated, require little refutation. But lest, perchance, some of your unprofessional readers should be misled by "Monitor's" fallacies, the following may be accepted as law and fact:—Officers of the Militia are now always amenable to the Army Discipline Act, and are under precisely the same obligations as officers of the Regular Army, the only difference being that they rank junior to the same rank in the Regulars. They are not allowed to leave the United Kingdom without obtaining leave of absence from his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding in the usual course, and, with their own consent, are available for any duty or duties, permanent or otherwise, that the public service may require. Their position as "officers" under the Army Discipline Act is very clearly defined with officers of the Regulars; officers of the Yeomanry and Volunteers being only "officers" under this Act when employed on military service, and Militia officers of the present day are frequently employed on strictly military duties. For instance, Major and Hon. Lieut.-Col. Vernon, 5th Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, has been permanently attached to the 102nd Regtl. District for the last 12 months, his principal duty having been to sit as president of courts-martial for the trial of such prisoners—Regulars or otherwise—as might be brought before them, an employment which I may fairly assume has been neither "irregular" or "illegal." I do not for a moment contend that the Militia of the present day is perfect, far from it, and there is plenty of improvement for it; but, notwithstanding "Monitor's" adverse opinion, I do say that the way Militia regiments turn-out, as a rule, is perfectly wonderful. Certainly, as far as my experience goes—which is not inconsiderable—if all officers of the Militia were such as "Monitor" would make them out to be, this state of affairs would be simply impossible; and I am supported by high military authorities in saying that, whenever they may be really required, the Militia will be found as a body, besides for recruiting purposes, a valuable ingredient of the British Army, and a real, and not a "sham, military service."—I am, &c.,

NOW FUSILIER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Having read your paper regularly since the date of its first issue, I have observed the remarkable letters of "Monitor" on the Militia. So long as they were amusing only, I had no desire to be critical; but when the author of them sacrifices truth to sarcasm, he requires correction. In your current number he says:—"In no case could a Militia officer be a member of a court-martial to try soldiers." I am a Militia officer, and several times during the last few years have been a member of courts-martial by which men of the Regulars have been tried. I enclose my card, not for publication; but it is very much at the service of "Monitor," to whom I am ready to give dates and places.—I am, &c.,

Reviews.

The Accursed Land; or, the First Steps on the Water-Way of Edom. By Lieutenant-Colonel Colvile (Grenadier Guards). (Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.)

This is a delightful volume of travel, not alone entertaining and amusing, but exceptionally instructive. While the rage for distributing medals has nearly gained its height, it may not be very surprising if one, in some shape or other, were conferred on the author of this work for the distinguished victory he gained in his contest against "time" during the early months of the present year. On January 19, Colonel Colvile left Port Said for England, on the 30th of the same month, he landed at Plymouth, and on the 15th of the next month (February) started for the Soudan Campaign, leaving his manuscript in the hands of a friend who undertook to transact all business matters with his publishers and to pass the work for press. The circumstances which caused the necessity for these rapid movements, and for the part which was to be taken by the author, are easily described. Some time in the year 1855, the late Captain William Allen, R.N., published a book called "The Dead Sea: a New Route to India," and at the same time laid before the Government a project for a ship canal through the Jordan Valley, which, after consideration for 25 years, was refused. The idea of a ship canal through the East was subsequently proved to be practicable by M. de Lesseps in the Isthmus of Suez. In 1883, Captain Allen's long-neglected scheme was once more called to mind, and "The Palestine Channel Syndicate" was formed for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was practicable, and Colonel Colvile was selected to carry out the investigation. The main point on which this scheme was based was the known depression below the sea-level of the Jordan Valley, while its weak point consisted in the uncertainty as to the level of the Wady el Arabah, a question which has exercised many scientific minds without producing any satisfactory results. All the preparations for the expedition were completed, when the Porte suddenly refused to consent to it. In this unpleasant state of affairs, the author proved himself to be a man of resources. He at once determined to undertake the work, starting with Captain Peacock, of the Royal Engineers, and his servant, "Mr. Cash," who was killed the other day by a crocodile. With the assistance of Messrs. Cook, the question of transport was quickly arranged, and also the crucial ones of "The Instruments and the Presents;" it was still further ascertained that the nearest telegraph station was at Hebron, and that it would take about 14 days for any news of the expedition to reach the Sultan, so that in those 14 days the survey might be made. On November 8, 1883, the author, accompanied by "Cash," left London, and on the 11th embarked on board the Mongolia at Brindisi, having been joined at Venice by Captain Peacock. There will be found some amusing chapters throughout the volume having reference to the proceedings of another band of explorers which had left England about the same time as the author, and which was supposed to be intent on a similar purpose. There was also an amusing sketch of the occasional rencontres between "geologists" and the "civil engineers," as they were named, and the anxiety displayed by each to make better progress than the other. At Suez the travellers found their luggage, and dispatched it and the instruments, &c., direct to their camp on the Asiatic shore, thus avoiding all observation and comment at Suez, where the author passed for a simple young gentleman on a visit to the sacred localities of Mount Sinai. Great, however, was the astonishment of the passengers on board the Mongolia when they saw their long-haired fellow-passenger "now sporting the neatest of Newgate clips, and handing over the ship's side sextants, levelling staves, and such like to a formidable-looking old Syrian, in long boots and a big whip. As this individual was the author's dragoman, he is entitled to a few words:—

> "Najm Abu Kathir [anglicè, 'The Star and the Father of Much'], was, in spite of the bigness of his boots, and his nose, and his whip, an amiable old thing, with a fixed idea that the European stomach requires replenishing every two hours, and is incapable of assimilating any nourishment which has not been served on a white table-cloth and eaten with a silver fork. He was a very intelligent, well-educated man, and if the reader be told that he had not only written a book, but actually got somebody to purchase it, he will no doubt at once concede that "Najm Abu Kathir" was a very superior person indeed."

As soon as the boat was seen from the camp, the camels were sent down to meet it, and the passengers were fairly landed on the Asiatic shore, and thus cut off from all communication with the outer world. The author thought this the fitting time to make a confidant of Najm and announce to him that "The Wady-el-Arabah" was their true destination. "Where you order, sir, there I go," was the scant reply; but it was quite sufficient to satisfy the travellers that the dragoman would prove true to his word. On November 18 the expedition commenced its journey, and after four hours' marching halted for lunch. The author thus describes the scene of this the "first camp:"—

> "In the centre of the panorama are four white tents, faintly tinged by the after-glow of sunset. Round the tents lie groups of ill-clad Bedouins, shivering under their camel-hair blankets, for there is no wood to make a fire, and wistfully eyeing in turn the cook's charcoal brazier and the carefully-padlocked barécas, from out of which their small daily ration of water has just been served. Near them lie the camels, just finishing their ration of beans, and looking in vain for the prickly mimosa which generally manages to struggle through existence in even the most desolate parts of this desolated land. As far as the eye can reach to the north and south is a perfectly flat plain of clay covered with stones; not a blade of grass, a mimosa or tamarisk bush, not one single scrap of colour for miles and miles, nothing but one perpetual dirty drab. To the east, in the middle distance, a long, low range of sand hills, and beyond the sand a straight line of limestone cliffs; to the west, some four miles off, a narrow strip of leaden sea, and beyond that the dark mountains of the African coast."

The author is one of many travellers who have learned from experience the capabilities of the camel to wend its way slowly, but surely, over the most difficult passes; and, moreover, that the camel in Arabia Petræa utterly despises both rocks and stones.

The October number of the Edinburgh does not contain any article which may be termed of a "service" character, but in a notice of the history of China by Mr. Bongeur (?) there is a side-light thrown on the warlike operations by which China was rendered accessible by sea to the commerce of Europe. The Reviewer, however, takes rather a narrow outlook on the situation; and when he talks of France finding in China the Mexico of the Revolution, he indicates a calamity which, as far as China is concerned, England, in common with all the trading nations of Europe, would find a severe blow administered by barbarous hands to their own reputation and prosperity. As recent writers and correspondents in the daily Press have energetically insisted, there is no difference in the Chinese mind between the Frenchman, the Englishman, and the American. They are all fanqui—foreign devils—alike; and as France has engaged in hostilities with China, it should be the ardent wish and hope of all European nations that she may be successful, and that speedily. It is quite probable that the war of 1842 made the first breach in the defence of the great Chinese Wall; but Russia has been pegging away assiduously at the northern and north-eastern frontiers; and the Edinburgh Review shows little knowledge, when it speaks of the Chinese nation being "singularly united by race, uniformity of custom, and obedience to authority." With the articles on the "Works of Alexandri Pope" (?)—interesting as it is, and well written—"John de Witt," "Aristotle," "The Memorials of the Merivale Family," we have nothing to do; the question of the condition of the Navy raised so forcibly by the Pall Mall Gazette was not sufficiently to the front, perhaps, at the time when the contents of the number were cast to admit of treatment; but one might have expected something about the extraordinary expedition to Khartoum, which is now what people call engaging the attention of Europe. Incidentally, in a notice of Lord Malmesbury's most interesting "Memoirs," there are bits here and there which, read by the light of current events, should certainly precipitate the action of any truly national Government which desires to render this country safe. The very year after the Crimean War the Emperor, our ally, was pondering over possible hostilities with England; and Lord Malmesbury says that he has in his possession a complete plan for the invasion by Admiral de la Graviere (?), made in 1857. We also know that in the bureau of the General Staff at Berlin there are several agreeable programmes of the same kind.

There is considerable variety in the current number of the Quarterly Review. Opening with an exhaustive paper on "Democracy and France," in the course of which the writer pays a high tribute to Monsieur Edmund Scherer, who has long since been tacitly regarded by Englishmen of mark and culture as one of the most intelligent and judicious, as well as one of the best instructed, of French critical writers. He is remarkable not only for his knowledge of English literature, but for his singular sympathy with its spirit. As a politician, he must be classed as a Republican, if the colour of his political opinions has to be given. No fewer than seven articles of considerable research on the subject of Aristophanes form one of the attractions of this number, and testify at once to the great interest taken in him by Englishmen. Among articles of a different order will be found some very pleasing matters connected with country life and country sports. "Cricket" seems, however, to have been the favourite pastime of the season just concluded, and not a few wonderful tales and wondrous exploits have already been reported in family circles. The Quarterly devotes several articles to a consideration of the subject. We are also introduced to "The Country Housewife's Garden," "My Garden," by Alfred Smee, and several others. Altogether this number of the Quarterly is highly attractive, and well worthy of its reputation.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards. A telegram, dated Wady Halfa, Oct. 18, says:—"Capt. Brocklehurst has arrived here on special service in charge of 33 whale-boats."

3rd Dragoon Guards. The head-quarters and service troops will reach Bombay about the 7th prox. in H.M.S. Jumna.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Major James, Cavalry Brig.-Major at the Curragh, has been appointed D.A.A. and Q.M.G. at Head-quarters, Ireland.

6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons. In the exhibition of the Dudley Gallery Art Society, "The 6th Dragoons in the German Campaign of 1759" is the only picture on a military subject. In the foreground, a grave-looking officer of mature years and rather heavily mounted, the colonel presumably, is carefully scanning the prospect before him. He is attended by a trumpeter, and part of the regiment appears in the background. This picture, which is one of the most effective in the exhibition, should have a special interest for the officers of the Inniskillings.

10th Hussars. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Combe has completed his five years on the Staff of the Indian Army. He served in the Quartermaster-General's office from Aug. 13, 1879, to Feb. 2, 1883, when he was transferred to the Adjutant-General's Department. He is at present officiating as 1st Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., vice Major Ford, who is officiating as Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. Lieut.-Col. E. B. Frith, pymr. on the Retired List, died at Barclay Road, Fulham, on the 21st inst., aged 67 years. The deceased obtained his commission as cornet, Oct. 31, 1834; became lieut., Nov. 3, 1837; was appointed pymr., Sept. 7, 1841; and retired with the hon. rank of lieut.-col., May 8, 1867.

11th Hussars. The Times' correspondent writes from Egypt:—"Without wishing to raise delusive hopes, I may state a strong feeling exists in the Navy that Col. Stewart is safe. Admiral Lord John Hay kindly allows me to publish the following expression of his personal opinion, which is shared by many less competent authorities. The Admiral says:—'For a steamer to have reached the alleged scene of the wreck must imply that an attempt was being made to reach Dongola. From all the information we possess of the nature of that portion of the river it is impossible to suppose that Gen. Gordon, Col. Stewart, or any sane man could authorise such an impossible attempt. With immense labour we are trying to ascend the river, and to increase Gen. Gordon's strength in gunboats. Under such circumstances, it is impossible to suppose that Gen. Gordon would risk a steamer, and diminish his already small fleet by the exactly opposite proceeding.' The Admiral's belief is that Col. Stewart never passed Berber." The Press Association says that:—"The Foreign Office has received a telegram from Sir Charles Wilson, in which he reports that he has visited the foot of the rapids below Daguyet. The steam launch which was reported to have had Col. Stewart on board struck on a rock below the rapids, in the vicinity of which the natives are still in rebellion. Evidence as to Col. Stewart's death is conflicting, but Col. Wilson fears the worst. Further messengers have been sent out for information." A telegram, dated Wady Halfa, Oct. 22, says:—"Sir Charles Wilson has been within 70 miles of the cataract of Wady Garna, but has not been able to obtain any reliable information with regard to the wreck of the steamers and the reported death of Col. Stewart. The various accounts received by him of the affair are conflicting as to the fact whether natives or Europeans were on board the steamer."

13th Hussars. The head-quarters and service troops will leave Bombay on the 11th prox. in H.M.S. Serapis for England.

18th Hussars. Capt. Butler has been selected for the adjutancy of the Gloucestershire Yeomanry, vice Major Dansey, 1st Life Guards.

19th Hussars. The regiment is ordered to leave Cairo and join the Nile Expedition.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major A. E. Turner, Military Private Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, has been selected for special service with the Nile Expedition.

No. 6 Baty., 1st Brig., Western Division, and No. 5 Baty., 1st Brig., South Irish Division, will be moved from India to Aden in the Crocodile.

No. 8 Baty., 1st Brig., Eastern Division, and No. 7 Baty., 1st Brig., London Division, stationed at Aden, will be brought home in the Crocodile.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Standard says:—"Major-Gen. Scratchley has been appointed High Commissioner of New Guinea. As an officer of the Royal Engineers, the new High Commissioner served through the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, being engaged in the siege and storming of Lucknow. In 1860, he was selected to proceed to Melbourne in command of a detachment of Engineers, to devise and construct works of defence. After his return he was employed on the defences of Portsmouth, and was appointed Inspector of Works in the manufacturing departments of the War Office, having charge also of engineering works at Woolwich, Shoeburyness, and elsewhere. In 1877, he again proceeded to Australia to assist Sir W. Jervois in advising the Governments upon the Colonial defences. After his return he acted as Military Adviser to the Agent-General, and has for some years been Commissioner of Defences for the Australian Colonies. It was only last year that he retired from the Army with the hon. rank of major-general."

Grenadier Guards. Lieut. Lord H. A. Russell has been appointed an A.D.C. to Lord Dufferin, the new Viceroy of India. The editor of the Windsor and Eton Gazette, having laid before the Queen the facts relating to the courageous conduct of Pte. Loraine, 3rd Batn., in rescuing a man from drowning in the ornamental water, Kensington Gardens, has received a letter from Sir Henry Ponsonby, stating that the Queen is much gratified by hearing of Loraine's conduct, and that her Majesty has "directed the Commander-in-Chief to make known to the Grenadier Guardsman her appreciation of his courage and presence of mind." Loraine was one of the Grenadiers who left Windsor for service in Egypt with the Camel Corps.

Scots Guards. Lieut. the Hon. C. Harbord has been appointed an A.D.C. to Lord Dufferin, the new Viceroy of India.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Capt. Kekewich and Lieut. Allen have been selected for special service with the Nile Expedition. Capt. Smith, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Pay Department.

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. Capt. Robinson, 1st Batn., has sent in his papers to retire.

7th Fusiliers. Capt. Mostyn succeeds Capt. Thackwell, 2nd Batn., at the depôt. Lieut. Porter takes the place of Lieut. De Trafford.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). Major Handy, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for nine months, on urgent private affairs. Capt. Grattan, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Pay Department.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Capt. Mayne, 2nd Batn., has leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

11th Devonshire Regiment. Lieut. Wood, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C.

13th Somersetshire Light Infantry. Lieut. Cox takes the place of Lieut. Corbet at the depôt.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Major Butler and Capt. Thurston, 2nd Batn., proceed to India in the Crocodile on Dec. 10. Lieut. Schneider, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed for duty to the 3rd Bombay N.I.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut. Grantham, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 2nd Sind Horse for duty. In consequence of the dangerous state of the barracks at Baroda, one company of the 2nd Batn. moved from that station by rail to Ahmedabad on the 1st inst. The other company moved on the same date by rail to Palanpore, and marches thence to Deesa.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. The command of the 2nd Batn. is about to fall vacant by the retirement of Col. Grant.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. The 2nd Batn. will arrive at Bombay about Jan. 25 in H.M.S. Jumna, from Malta.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. Corpl. Ashton and Pte. Jordan, 1st Batn., stationed at Camden Fort, Queenstown, were returning to their quarters on Sunday night, when they were attacked by a gang of roughs at Ringabella Bay. Jordan received a wound on the head which rendered him insensible. When he recovered consciousness he gave an alarm, and, on search being instituted, Ashton's dead body was discovered on the shore with several terrible wounds upon it.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. Capt. Leighton, 1st Batn., has leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs.

24th South Wales Borderers. Capt. Heaton and Lieut. Armitage, 2nd Batn., relieve Capt. Trower and Lieut. Worlledge at the depôt.

25th King's Own Borderers. The following resolutions, with reference to the employment of soldiers discharged from the service or transferred to the Army Reserve, were proposed and carried at a recent meeting of the officers of the 1st Batn. held at Dugshai:—"1. Proposed by Lieut.-Col. Carwithen, and seconded by Lieut. Reid, that, at the head-quarters of the Regimental District, an agency be established to get employment for men of good character who are transferred to the Army Reserve, or discharged from the service; and that the officer commanding the Regimental District be asked to be president. 2. Proposed by Major Stoney, and seconded by Major Ross, that the officers commanding the Militia and Volunteer Regiments of the district (when formed) be asked to become members of the County Committee, and that the officers commanding the Line battalions and the officer commanding the depôt be, ex-officio, members. 3. Proposed by Lieut. Marshall, and seconded by Major Ross, that the Right Hon. the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and the officer commanding the Queen's Edinburgh Rifle Volunteer Brigade, be invited to be members of the above committee. 4. Proposed by Major Ross, and seconded by Lieut. Hamilton, that gentlemen of influence in the county and large employers of labour in the district be asked to become patrons. 5. Proposed by Lieut. Woollcombe, and seconded by Col. Carwithen, that a 'Home' be established at the head-quarters of the Regimental District, at which men of good character may be lodged, at as little expense to themselves as possible, while waiting for employment. 6. Proposed by Major Stoney, and seconded by Lieut. Marshall, that all details, such as subscriptions, fees, &c., be settled by the committee. 7. Proposed by Col. Carwithen, and seconded by Major Ross, that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the officer commanding the 2nd Battalion, with a view to his co-operating in the movement, embodying with them the proposals of this battalion, and arranging for carrying them out."

29th Worcestershire Regiment. A correspondent writes from Dukki on Sept. 26:—"The wing of the Worcestershire Regt,, consisting of 10 officers and 330 rank and file, lost four men from sunstroke on the march-up from Sibi, and on the first march from Sibi to Kelat-i-Kela about 60 men fell out from the effects of the heat. After halting a day at Kelat-i-Kela the heat was less, and fewer men fell out on the other marches. They marched in here with only about 10 sick, one of whom is suffering from typhoid fever, from which he is not expected to recover."

31st East Surrey Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies will embark at Gibraltar on Dec. 23 in H.M.S. Serapis for conveyance to Bombay, en route to Subathu.

32nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. Lieut. Hetherell is a candidate for the Indian S.C.

33rd West Riding Regiment. Lieut. Crommelin is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 3rd Bengal N.I., on probation.

34th Border Regiment. Lieut. Dick is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, on probation.

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. A letter from Wady Halfa states that the health of the regiment is good. Lieut. Miller had left for Cairo invalided.

40th South Lancashire Regiment. All officers on leave in India had orders to rejoin at Peshawur by the 4th inst. The battalion was to have left for Deolalee on the 17th, en route for Aden, on relief by a wing of the 99th Regt. Of the time-expired men, close on 150 remain at Peshawur. Besides these there are over 90 men who have taken the bounty of 120 rupees to remain ten years in India. Capt. Turnbull has proceeded home on six months' leave.

43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Lieut. Cottin, now in England, joins the depôt in place of Capt. Eccles. Lieut. Mathewes is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 12th Madras N.I., on probation.

48th Northamptonshire Regiment. Major Ellis has been noted for appointment as an inspector of gymnasia on a vacancy being open.

51st King's Own Light Infantry. The Bugle, the regimental paper, says:—"On Aug. 15 another batch of officers going on leave deserted the station. Major Seppings for Simla, Capt. and Mrs. Adamson for the hills at Naini Tal, Capt. Walker and Lieut. Crawford professedly for Sirinagar, where they have not yet been heard of, and Lieut. Hunt to Naini Tal, leaving the station staff office a desert and a waste no more illuminated by his cheering presence. From last accounts, Mr. Hunt does not appear to have seen much of Naini Tal as yet on account of the rain; but Mrs. Corbett, we are glad to hear, is very well again. No news has reached us of Capt. Adamson, who was in bad health when he went on leave. Capt. Walker has got as far as Murree with Mr. Crawford, and here again the rain bars their way to Kashmir, so they say. But knowing Mr. Crawford's dauntless and determined character, we can be sure that no mere trifle prevents his going on to his journey's end."

56th Essex Regiment. Lieut.-Col. S. S. Cox, formerly of the regiment, died at Manor House, Beaminster, Dorset, on the 22nd inst., aged 67 years.

57th Middlesex Regiment. Major Hayne is exchanging to the 88th with Major Gardner.

66th Berkshire Regiment. The Reading Mercury says:—"The subscribers to the memorial to the 328 officers and men of the county regiment (66th) who fell at Maiwand, during the Afghan Campaign of 1879-80, will be interested in learning that the monument is progressing in the hands of the sculptor, Mr. George Simonds."

69th Welsh Regiment. Capt. (Local Major) Tapp, who has been serving with the Egyptian Army at Suakim during the recent attacks on that place by the rebels, has, owing to ill-health, been granted special leave of absence till January next.

70th East Surrey Regiment. The following officers have arrived with the regiment in Egypt from India:—Lieut.-Col. Collins; Majors Hornby, Maturin, and Freeman; Capts. Burnaby, Frodsham (adjt.), and Couper; Lieuts. Dunsterville, Thomas, White, Bayliss, Birch, Sloman, Whiffin, Ellis, Master, Bell, and Beeton; Pymr. Sir R. S. Riddell, Bart.; Surgs.-Major Turton, Barnett, McCracken, Watling, and Ashton.

71st Highland Light Infantry. Lieut. Balfour has been appointed an A.D.C. to Lord Dufferin, the new Viceroy of India. Capt. Reid has been selected for the adjutancy of the Sutherland Highland Rifle Volunteers.

72nd Seaforth Highlanders. Lieut. Lang has been selected for special service with the Nile Expedition.

73rd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The Bristol Mercury says:—"The concert given last evening (13th inst.) at the large Colston Hall by the band of the Black Watch should have attracted a larger audience than was present, but unfortunately another military band concert at the Grand Hotel and attractions elsewhere militated against the pecuniary success of what was a most attractive concert. The band of the Black Watch have recently been giving concerts in South Wales and some parts of the West of England, and the favour with which they have been received has fully sustained the reputation they have gained as being amongst the best of the regimental bands of the service, exception, of course, being taken to the bands of the Guards, the Royal Marines, and Royal Artillery; but these consist largely of selected professional artistes, and are constantly engaged in playing at concerts, and have little of the routine of ordinary military duty to perform. The band of the Black Watch number about 30, and in their picturesque Highland costume present a striking picture upon the orchestra. That they are well trained was shown by their admirable execution and finished interpretation of some of the best known and most difficult overtures. Mr. Walter Buck was the conductor, and he is to be congratulated upon the accuracy and precision with which the band responded to the wave of his bâton."

74th Highland Light Infantry. The head-quarters and service companies are timed to reach Bombay on the 29th inst. in H.M.S. Serapis.

77th Middlesex Regiment. Capt. Schuyler relieves Capt. Westmacott at the depôt.

88th Connaught Rangers. Major Gardner is about to exchange to the 57th Regt. with Major Hayne.

93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The head-quarters have moved from Anglesea to Cambridge Barracks, Portsmouth.

95th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Major Sparkes is to proceed to India in the Crocodile on Dec. 10. We are requested to publish the following resolutions, proposed and carried by the officers at a meeting held lately at Lucknow:—"1. Proposed by Col. Crealock, C.B., seconded by Lieut.-Col. Golding, that the officer commanding the Regimental District be asked to undertake the formation at Derby of a county committee to act as a territorial agency for the employment of Reserve and discharged soldiers. 2. Proposed by Lieut.-Col. Golding, seconded by Capt. Hudson, that the officers commanding the Militia and Volunteer corps be invited to form the county committee under the presidency of the officer commanding the Regimental District. The officers commanding the Line battalions to be ex-officio members of this committee. 3. Proposed by Capt. Thompson, seconded by Lieut. Evans, that gentlemen of influence in the district be asked to become patrons. 4. Proposed by Capt. Hudson, seconded by Capt. Taylor, that in the event of its being found necessary to form a fund for current expenses, such as printing lists of men available for employment, &c., the officers, 2nd Batn., Derbyshire Regt., should make a donation not exceeding one day's pay. 5. Proposed by Col. Crealock, C.B., seconded by Major Seagram, that all men making use of this agency should pay a small fee. Men not belonging to territorial regiment to pay a double fee. N.B.—It is understood by the meeting that no man can be placed on the list who is not certified to be of good character when discharged, and ta the time of asking for employment."

96th Manchester Regiment. Major Barlow has been appointed a D.A.A. and Q.M.G. for Musketry in India.

99th Wiltshire Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Moir is about to retire. Capt. Rowden, who has been acting D.A.A. and Q.M.G. in India, has resumed regimental duty.

100th Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians). Lieut. Cowper is a candidate for the Indian S.C.

101st Royal Munster Fusiliers. Major Hare, who has been temporarily employed with the Egyptian Army, and has rendered valuable service with the native troops at Suakim, has been presented to the Khedive by Col. Watson, on his retirement from the Egyptian Army. The following official notification has been issued in Cairo:—"His Highness the Khedive has commanded his Excellency the Sirdar, Sir Evelyn Wood, to express to Major Hare his sense of gratitude for the excellent work he performed as staff officer at Suakim at a time when the Egyptian forces he was serving with were engaged in active operations against the enemy."

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. Lieut. Blackden is ordered to join the regimental depôt for two years.

Rifle Brigade. Lieut. Hodge, 4th Batn., has leave from India for 15 months, on private affairs.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The following officers were borne on the Staff of the Egyptian Army when the mail left, viz.:—Comy.-Gen. J. Long, Deputy-Comy.-Gen. Wilkinson, Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. Skinner, Nugent, C.B., Baker, Rainsford, Hamilton, and Langdon; Deputy - Assist. - Commissaries - Gen. Wilson, Graham, Edwards, Whitley, Hope, Boyd, Jessop, Rogers, and Day; and Major Prevost; Capts. Hallewell, Lea, Littledale, Dumaresq, and Bowhill; Major Remmington; Capt. Lumb; and Qrmrs. Wood, Hayles, Crumplin, White, M'Loughlin, Robinson, and Dean. The National Society for Aid to the Sick and Wounded in War having decided to despatch an agent to Egypt to carry out the objects of the Society, Assist.-Comy.-Gen. J. S. Young has, with the approval of the Secretary for War and the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, been appointed the Society's Commissioner, and has left England to join the Expeditionary Force under the command of Lord Wolseley in Egypt.

Medical Department. A correspondent writes from India:—"The Army Circular, dated Aug. 1, 1884, publishing the regulations regarding the examination of surgeons-major for promotion to the rank of brigade-surgeons, has created the greatest indignation and disgust among the senior surgeons-major in this country, and their best thanks are due to you for the able articles in your issues of Aug. 16 and 30, advocating the rescinding of this most obnoxious circular. There was never a more humiliating order published, and the wonder of every one is that the present Director-General gave his sanction to its publication, for in no other branch of the service are officers of such seniority subject to examination for promotion. It is degrading to old officers of 25 and 26 years' service, in all parts of the world where duty called them, to be subjected to such an indignity; and its effect will be, as you say, 'to deplete the upper executive ranks of the Department, by driving old officers to retire in disgust.'" The following officers, having completed a tour of Indian service, will proceed home during the winter:—Brigade-Surgs. W. O'Halloran and J. Davis; Surgs.-Major I. Hoysted, F. Turton, E. Wilkes, E. Lloyd, J. Scott, W. Creyk, J. Maxham, W. Burnett, J. Riddick, J. M'Cracken, W. Charlton, and P. Connolly; and Surg. L. Ward.

Veterinary Department. First-class Vet.-Surg. Clayton has recently returned to Cairo from Russia, where he had been engaged in purchasing horses, and will remain at Cairo as Principal Veterinary Officer. First-class Vet.-Surgs. Burt and Griffith proceed up the Nile with the Camel Corps. First-class Vet.-Surg. A. E. Queripel is in readiness to embark for Egypt.

Pay Department. Major F. E. Webb has joined the District Office, Devonport, from financial charge of the 64th Regt., relieving Capt. H. H. Gilbert, who has proceeded to the 21st Hussars. Capt. F. C. Cooper is under orders for Malta District office, and will be replaced at Devonport by Capt. P. J. M. Yaldwyn from the 1st Batn. 7th Royal Fusiliers. Capt. R. L. Long, on three months' sick-leave from Egypt, has been instructed to join the Home District Pay-office on Dec. 1. There are 22 officers of the department in Egypt and the Soudan, as follows:—Col. Olivey, C.B.; Majors Drage, and Thornhill, with 42nd Regt.; Fox, with 49th Regt.; Woodall, with 38th Regt.; Lawrie, Dawson, and J. Brown, with 79th Regt.; J. F. Mosse, with 1st Batn. 18th Regt.; Orange, with 3rd Batn. 60th Rifles; Mansergh, with 56th Regt.; A. P. G. Dowdall, with 35th Regt.; Webster, with 19th Hussars; and Lloyd, with 1st Batn. 19th Regt.; Capts. Ternan, with 50th Regt.; Sir R. Riddell, Bart., with 70th Regt.; De la P. Robinson, Dewar, J. Reid, Mackie, with Camel Corps; Small, with 75th Regt., and Sawyer, with 46th Regt.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1884.

THE letters and speeches of experts, the articles and contributions of anonymous authorities whose identity may be guessed at, the scattering volleys—as incessant as the rolling of Gatlings—of Admiral Symonds and of the other commodores of the literary squadrons which have been broadsiding the Admiralty, have, on the whole, not contributed either to give a clear view of our exigencies, to create confidence, or to rouse the country. People are quite dazed by statements and counter-statements; by arrays of figures about displacements and measurements, armour-thicknesses, weight of guns, and by calculations which are as complicated, but not as satisfactory, as algebraic equations, because there is no known quantity,—that is, there is no positive authoritative assertion which, taken as a base of demonstration, can be used to measure the relations between the strength of our Fleet in all that constitutes strength and the fleet or fleets of foreign countries. But that being so, it is quite clear that our superiority is not incontestable, and that being so, the corollary is pretty plain that the Naval power of England is not what it ought to be, as without any desire to exercise a tyrannical supremacy to injure the rights of others or to assert unjust pretensions, the nature of the British Empire is such that, in order adequately to guard its interests, there should be at all points an assured strength at sea which would enable any Government to keep the flag unmolested, and the national honour safe from insult and injury. But how is it that all this doubt has arisen? How can it be that First Lords of the Admiralty, with able experts at their elbows, should have allowed the Navy to lapse into such a sea of uncertainty that no one can be confident of its efficiency, not absolutely, but relatively? There must "be something rotten" in the state of Whitehall. No one who has any knowledge of the professional character of the various Naval officers who have had seats at the Board of recent years will lay the blame upon them, and it may be asserted, certainly, that if Lord Alcester or Admiral Tryon, possibly Captain Brandreth, were asked, the answer to the question, "Are you content with the present state of the Navy?" would be positively, "No." As to Sir Cooper Key, there are reasons for fearing he has taken an optimist view of the present state of the Navy, but even he would not say he was content. Now, unless a First Lord be absolutely driven by the constant and energetic remonstrances of his subordinates into a state of positive aggression on the Treasury, there is no hope of decided action, and, of course, a First Lord can do nothing in the way of getting money without the consent of his colleagues in the Cabinet, which is to be obtained only by the most urgent pressure of the Minister himself, founded on the representations of the officers who are responsible to him. How is it, then, that the Naval Lords have not pressed their views and their knowledge on their chief, the head of the Board? And here we hit a blot. Recent changes in the Admiralty have transferred from different members of the Board their shares of responsibility to the shoulders of the great Minister who is answerable to Parliament for the condition of the Navy in ships, sailors, guns, &c. But the responsibility to a chief is very different from responsibility to Parliament or to the country. All initiative is removed under the new system. A Sea Lord who makes things pleasant, and tides over his time of office waiting for some snug command, is likely to be in favour; and an officer of the Board, unless he be a man who subordinates all feelings of a personal kind to the good of the service and the country, has little inducement to vex the soul of the Cabinet Minister by urging representations involving outlay. There is, of course, some protection afforded to the subordinate officers in the position they occupy, if they have freely discharged their consciences by representation and remonstrance. But it seems worth while to consider whether some measures cannot be introduced to impart a greater sense of personal responsibility to the Executive at the branches of the Admiralty, so that ignorance, or apathy, or perverse views of their chief may not be held to cover them for their share in allowing the Naval forces to lapse into such a condition of comparative inefficiency as is now admitted—we may almost say officially—by the defenders of the present Board.

To-day being the 30th anniversary of the actions at Balaclava, on October 25, 1854, a list of the surviving officers may prove interesting. The senior survivor of the Light Cavalry Brigade is General A. Low, C.B., colonel, 4th Hussars, who rode in the charge as a captain of that regiment; Lieutenant-Colonel R. Portal, late of the 5th Lancers; Majors T. Hutton and W. A. King (afterwards of the 17th Regiment, now retired); Captain Lord Hylton, who was then Lieutenant Hylton Joliffe; and Captain G. W. Hunt, who retired after the war, also rode with the regiment in the charge. Captain J. W. Kelly, late quartermaster, rode in the ranks of the Queen's Own as a serjeant. The 8th Royal Irish Hussars can muster six representatives, Colonel W. Mussenden, a cornet at Balaclava, and now Inspecting Officer of Auxiliary Cavalry; Major E. Phillips, long since retired; Major C. W. Heneage, V.C.; Major G. G. Clowes, late of the Warwickshire Yeomanry; Captain D. H. Clutterbuck, who sold out at the close of the campaign; and Captain J. A. Pickworth, Military Knight of Windsor, who rode in the ranks. Lord Cardigan's old regiment, the 11th Hussars, is represented by two officers, Sir Roger Palmer, Bart., afterwards of the 2nd Life Guards, and Colonel H. A. Trevelyan, late of the 7th Hussars. Lieutenant-Colonel R. Davies, late of the 28th Regiment, rode in the charge as a corporal of the Prince Albert's Own, and Captain R. Teeran, a retired quartermaster of the regiment, as troop-serjeant-major. Of the eight officers who rode with the 13th Light Dragoons, three survive in Lieutenant-Colonel A. Tremayne, Major E. L. Jervis, and Captain P. S. Smith. Major P. Morrisey, late adjutant, and now a captain of Invalids at Chelsea, rode in the ranks of the 13th, with Major T. G. Johnson, late adjutant of the 2nd West York Yeomanry. The 17th Lancers have representatives in Major-General R. White, C.B., in command of the Eastern District; Lord Tredegar, at that time Captain G. C. Morgan; Sir William Gordon, Bart., of Earlston; Sir G. Wombwell, Bart., of Newburgh Park, who was taken prisoner and made his escape; and Sir J. Cradock-Hartopp, of Four Oaks Hall. Major W. W. Graham, late of the Carabineers, rode in the ranks of the Lancers, as did Major J. Brown, now paymaster of the 79th Cameron Highlanders, and Major J. Berryman, V.C., late quartermaster of the regiment.

The Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General at Aldershot is one of the hardest-worked officials at the Camp, especially so since the introduction of the new course of musketry instruction, and the complicated course of field-firing and fire tactics. Yet it is the intention of the authorities to abolish this appointment on the completion of Major Burton's regulation period of Staff employment.

Engineering, in a caustic criticism of the Esmeralda, and of Sir W. Armstrong's eulogium upon her as a ship which none of our Fleet could overtake or escape, remarks that she has no protection at all against artillery, and that she could only steam for three days at full speed, and then "coming down" on Sir E. J. Reed very much in the steam-hammer style in which Sir E. J. Reed fell on Sir W. Armstrong, observes:—

"The statement that 'displacement always represents power of some kind' is an example of those superficial and dogmatic, but unscientific and misleading, utterances in which Mr. Barnaby delights. We will proceed to show some of the results which directly follow from the adoption of this principle. If displacement be a fair approximate measure of the power of a war-ship, then the most powerful war-ships in the British Navy are the following, the order in which they are placed representing their various degrees of power:—Inflexible, Dreadnought, Northumberland, Minotaur, Agincourt, Achilles, Alexandra, Thunderer, Devastation, Sultan, Black Prince, Warrior, &c. Could a more diversified lot than this be got together, or a selection showing greater and more irregular differences of fighting power? Among the vessels named are the latest and most powerful, and also the oldest and weakest of our ironclad fighting ships; yet the order in which they appear being determined by their displacements—which range from 11,400 tons to 9,100 tons—should, according to Mr. Barnaby, represent the relative fighting powers of these ships. Upon the same principle the Northumberland is a more powerful fighting ship than the French ironclad Amiral Duperré, her displacement being 100 tons greater. In other words, the oldest and weakest ironclad in the British Navy is more powerful than the latest and strongest ironclad in the French Navy. These are examples of the conclusions that are arrived at by assuming, as Sir Edward Reed, Sir Thomas Brassey, and the Times do, that Mr. Barnaby's 'proposition may well be accepted.' It is not to be wondered at that Admiralty official statements are absolutely unreliable when they are based upon such erroneous and absurd assumptions as are involved in Mr. Barnaby's latest 'proposition.'"

In the event of the Duke of Cumberland being wiped out of the Brunswick succession, the Duke of Cambridge would have immediate interests to be considered.

The use of plain clothes by Warrant officers for purposes of recreation is sanctioned by paragraph 6, Section 12, of the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, 1883, but the permission is left to the discretion of General Officers commanding. This permission is granted very generally, but we understand that in one of the largest districts in the United Kingdom the use of plain clothes is restricted to absence on leave. We quite agree that all regimental and depôt serjeant-majors should appear in uniform as a general rule; but for purposes of recreation we would advocate that the permission to wear plain clothes should be granted to them as well as to schoolmasters and bandmasters. Everything that tends to promote harmony in the higher ranks and an interest in the service should b by all means encouraged.

The splendid ceremonial at Sebastopol at Todleben's interment is a significant sequel to the laying of the keels of the new Black Sea cruisers. The day was appropriate, the anniversary of the failure of the first bombardment by the Allies.

A meeting of Artillery officers was held recently at Simla, to consider a plan for helping time-expired soldiers of the Royal Artillery to obtain civil employ. Colonel Chapman, the officer to whom the Regiment is indebted for originating this scheme, and Major Carre, will be the members of the committee (with Captain Dunsterville as Treasurer). The proceedings of the meeting will be circulated to all Divisions and Districts of Royal Artillery in India; in each of which it is hoped the Adjutant, or some other officer of influence, will consent to become a corresponding member of the committee, for the purpose, in the first place, of eliciting opinions and collecting subscriptions. The object at present is to show the authorities at the Horse Guards, and Artillery officers at home that officers in India are ready and anxious to co-operate in any scheme that may ultimately find acceptance, for promoting the end in view—viz., to benefit non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Artillery after their discharge from the Army.

It is remarked with much surprise that in the recommendations of the authorities on the defence of our coaling stations abroad, not the smallest notice has been taken of the totally unprotected Naval depôts at Esquimault, Vancouver's Island, or of the Falkland Islands.

Our readers will remember how all along we have been contending as eagerly for the river route in preference to the Suakim desert as we have been protesting against the row-boats on the Nile, where there are abundant supplies of native boats, dahabeahs, and nuggars, and now we learn that these row-boats have to be towed by steamers or by the native sailing-boats when there is a favourable wind. In an interesting letter from the Morning Post correspondent, dated September 29, Dongola, giving an account of Sir H. Stewart's journey, it is said:—

"The point on the Nile to which Sir Herbert Stewart marched was some way below the cataracts of Dal, a distance from Sarras, where he started, of about 130 miles. Sir Herbert Stewart, pressing through so rapidly, and averaging over 40 miles a day, was able to go without water-skins and to rely alone on small water-bottles, but an ordinary march, accomplishing from 20 to 25 miles a day would entail a large number of camels with water-skins. This, therefore, may be considered a method of traversing deserts practicable only for small bodies of men, endued with exceptional energy and tolerant of extreme fatigue. The Mounted Infantry, 220 strong, and the Sussex Regt., who preceded them, came to Dongola by boats, and Sir Herbert Stewart, finding that by great exertion, with forced marches night and day, he was doing little more than keep pace with the boats, and was coming very nearly to the limit of the endurance of his horses, struck off at a point where the Mounted Infantry were halting on the river bank, and sending on his horses slowly by road continued his journey to Dongola in the Mounted Infantry boats. The Mounted Infantry started from Sarras in seven boats, each boat carrying from 40 to 20 men, with stores for the force for 60 days. The boats sailed up the river by help of one large sail set on a very long yard, but in two events this sail was futile."

Major F. H. Maitland, Bengal Staff Corps, the heir to the title and estates of the late Earl of Lauderdale, is expected home immediately from India, another claimant having come forward.

It is well understood in military circles that the large number of 64-pounders—62—which it is proposed to send for the defence of our coaling stations abroad, is but another method of economising in what may prove a vast expenditure. These obsolete guns have only a range of about a mile and a half, and though being mounted in the Portsdown Forts, are well recognised as unfit for modern warfare.

Non-commissioned officers transferred either voluntarily or compulsorily from battalions proceeding home from India in course of relief shall in all cases take rank and precedence in their new battalions in the respective ranks according to the date of their promotion or appointment.

Mr. Alison has given his opinion that limiting the tenure of regimental commands is a violation of the Parliamentary guarantee under the Henley Clause. Mr. Alison thinks that officers who have lost or are about to lose their commands have grounds of action against the Government. Most, if not all, of the officers were at one time in the service of the East India Company, and the Henley Clause guarantees them, under the Government of the Crown, "all the rights and privileges they enjoyed under that of the Company." And among these rights was one to hold the command of a regiment as long as the incumbent pleased, or until one of two things happened, viz.: that the officer became unfit for service, or was purchased out of it by his juniors.

The Assistant-Director of Clothing, from the Royal Army Clothing Depôt, and Colonel R. Blundell, A.A.G., Horse Guards, attended at Aldershot yesterday (Friday) to inspect the khaki clothing recently supplied experimentally to the 1st Battalions 4th and 17th Regiments, and which is said to be in every respect a most unsuitable and unserviceable active-service dress for the British soldier.

Blue serge frocks and khaki drill frocks and trousers are to be issued to men of cavalry regiments proceeding to India. The white forage cap cover will be discontinued. The prices of the khaki drill suit will not exceed the ordinary rates, viz., frocks, 4s. 2d., and trousers, 2s. 10d., plus departmental percentage.

Messrs. Clowes and Sons have published a most useful little work, by Mr. J. R. MacDonnel, "The Tactical War-Game." It is a translation of Verdy du Vernois' book, and must be considered one of the best guides which has yet seen the light to the practical study of Kriegspiel. Mr. MacDonnel has evidently spared no pains in making his little volume, what it professes to be, a reliable treatise, which officers can turn to whenever points arise upon which there can exist any diversity of opinion. The book was much wanted, and the translator has done good service in producing it.

Colonel G. Luck, C.B., half-pay, late 15th Hussars, was to have assumed command of the Sind District, Bombay, this week, on appointment.

The 1st Batn. 7th Fusiliers will be conveyed from Portsmouth to Gibraltar in the Serapis, to relieve the 31st East Surrey Regiment, proceeding on to India about the middle of December, the 105th King's Own Light Infantry leaving ten days later for Malta, to relieve the 2nd Batn. 18th Royal Irish, ordered on to India from Malta.

The Navy.

Carpenters—Benjamin Stoneman, to the Lord Warden; William J. Jeffery, to the Pembroke, for the Ruby.

COASTGUARD.

Chief Officer—Geo. W. Watts, to the Repulse, for Coastguard at Sutton Bridge.

Commissioned Boatmen—John Denton, Pendeen Cove, to be chief boatman, Stonehouse Point, vice Payne, promoted; Francis Farmer, Milford, to be chief boatman, Grand Redoubt, vice Wallace, pensioned.

ALGERINE, Com. Arthur G. Fullerton, arrived at Pernambuco on Monday last.

ASSISTANCE, Capt. W. H. C. St. Clair, arrived at Portsmouth on Sunday from Greenock. She brought a draft of 70 men from Stirling to join the 1st Batn. Seaforth Highlanders at Parkhurst, and 18 from Perth to join the 2nd Batn. Royal Highlanders at Aldershot.

BEACON is to be immediately refitted for foreign service, orders having been received at Sheerness Dockyard on Wednesday directing her preparation. She was taken into the steam basin at Sheerness Dockyard on Wednesday to be thoroughly overhauled and repaired. The Beacon was formerly employed on the East Indies station, and was paid off at Sheerness about 18 months ago, on her return from Egypt. As no provision for the refit of this ship was made in the estimates for the current year, the Admiralty will make a supplementary grant for her refit.

CANADA, Capt. Arthur C. Curtis, arrived at Halifax on the 17th inst. from England.

CROCODILE, Capt. H. J. Carr, arrived at Bombay on Monday.

DREADNOUGHT, Capt. the Hon. Edmund R. Fremantle, C.B., will leave for the Mediterranean with all despatch.

DRYAD, Com. Hulton, is to be paid off "all standing," and to be immediately surveyed for further service.

ENCHANTRESS, Com. W. W. Vine, arrived at Portsmouth on Thursday, having conveyed the Lords of the Admiralty to Plymouth and Pembroke.

FLAMINGO, Com. Custance, arrived at Plymouth Sound on Sunday morning from the West Indies and North American station, after an absence of many years from Plymouth. She was recommissioned at Bermuda in November, 1880, and since that time she has run a distance of 50,000 miles. The early part of the commission was spent in the West Indies, within the tropics, and later on she was employed in Canada and in the protection of the fisheries on the coast of Newfoundland. In the early part of 1882, when in Canada, she was visited by the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, who were then on their fishing tour, and who remained on board for some few days. The latter part of the commission was spent in the West Indies, and she left Bermuda for England on the 16th ult. She experienced exceptionally fine weather until the 23rd, when she encountered a gale of wind which lasted two days, and afterwards she had fine weather all the way to Fayal, in the Azores, where the Flamingo called for coals. Here she was placed in quarantine, although there were no cases of sickness on board. The crew had enjoyed remarkably good health during the whole commission, and as soon as the health officers had satisfied themselves as to the health of the crew, and the necessary preliminaries had been gone through, pratique was granted directly the ship had completed coaling. There has been only one desertion—that of a boy—since she left England. The commission has been a very happy one, and when the ship is paid off both officers and men will carry with them many pleasant reminiscences of their four years' cruise on the West Indies and North American station. The second lieutenant, Mr. Anson, has made sketches in water-colours of all the ports and harbours which have been visited during the commission, and has also kept an interesting record of the cruise generally. The Flamingo was inspected on Tuesday by Capt. R. Carter, of the Royal Adelaide, and was afterwards taken alongside Devonport Dockyard to dismantle preparatory to paying off.

HIMALAYA, Capt. H. St. L. B. Palliser, is undergoing a refit in Devonport Dockyard. There are some alterations required to the machinery, and it is expected that the Himalaya will not proceed to sea for more than a month. She was absent from Devonport for 108 days. During that time she has been 11 days in harbour, so that she was under steam for 97 days. The distance travelled during the voyage was 19,305 miles.

IMPERIEUSE is being completed for sea at Portsmouth, and the progress in torpedo fitments is so rapid that the torpedo ports of the Camperdown, which is in course of construction, will embody important improvements not possessed by the former ship, although it was intended in the first instance to make them of the same form.

INDUS, flagship of Rear-Admiral C. T. Curme, was inspected a few days since by Admiral Sir W. Houston Stewart. The state of the cells will, it is asserted, form a subject for inquiry.

JUMNA, Capt. U. C. Singleton, arrived at Malta on Sunday from Portsmouth, with the 3rd Dragoon Guards and drafts from various regiments on board. She afterwards left for Bombay.

LARK, Lieut.-Com. T. F. Pullen, attached to the Australian station, is to be recommissioned for a further term of service with a new crew from the Naval Barracks at Sheerness. The men will proceed to Sydney in the Tamar.

LILY, Com. H. Gibson, at Devonport, went outside Plymouth Breakwater for a six hours' full-speed run in charge of the Commander and Engineers of the ship last Wednesday. Mr. Anderson, Steam Reserve, was present, and Mr. Fowler attended for the Dockyard. The result was:—Draught of water, forward, 10 ft. 6 in., aft, 13 ft. 7 in.; steam in boilers, 62 lb.; vacuum in condensers, 24·5; revolutions per minute, 116; indicated horse-power, 795; speed, 11·3 knots. The trial was considered very satisfactory. She has been inspected at Devonport by Capt. G. S. Bosanquet.

LION, Com. A. G. M'Kechnie, training-ship at Devonport. On Wednesday, Thomas Jago, a second-class boy, fell from the topmast rigging and was removed to the Naval Hospital at Stonehouse.

MALABAR, Capt. R. H. Harris, left Bombay on Wednesday for England.

NELSON, Capt. James E. Erskine (Comdre. on the Australian station), and Diamond, Capt. Alfred T. Dale. A heavy draft of Blue-jackets was selected at Sheerness Royal Naval Barracks on Saturday to form part of the new crews of the above ships which are ordered to be recommissioned for a further term of service on the Australian station. The men will leave for Sydney in the troopship Tamar. A telegram from Sydney, dated Oct. 14, announces that the Nelson has arrived at Orangerie Bay, and proclaimed a British protectorate over the south-eastern coast of New Guinea.

ORONTES, Capt. H. G. Andoe, arrived at Jamaica on the 17th inst. from Trinidad, and sailed on Tuesday for Gibraltar.

PERT has been placed in the basin at Keyham to be fitted for Coastguard service.

POLYPHEMUS, Com. Edmund F. Jeffreys, arrived at Spithead on Tuesday.

RACER, at Devonport, had her boilers tried by water pressure on Monday, the result being very satisfactory.

RAMBLER, at Sheerness, is to be commissioned on Nov. 11 by Com. the Hon. Foley C. Vereker, for service with the British Fleet on the China station. This gun-vessel is undergoing a thorough overhaul and repair, but her refit is being pressed forward with all possible despatch.

RAPID, Capt. Henry J. F. Campbell, C.B., arrived at Madeira on Wednesday. She will leave on Monday for the West Coast of Africa.

REINDEER is completing for the pennant at Devonport. The guns and fittings for this vessel having arrived, they will be at once placed on board, and when ready for sea she will be taken out for their trial.

RIFLEMAN, Com. Mayow, was officially inspected in Sheerness Harbour on Saturday by Vice-Admiral Rice, commander-in-chief at the Nore, on her return from the South-East Coast of America station, where she has been employed since January, 1881. She will be ready to pay off on Nov. 4.

SEAFLOWER, Lieut.-Com. R. P. Humpage, and the Martin, Lieut.-Com. G. H. A. MacArthur, training brigs, were inspected by Capt. J. E. M. Wilson, of the Impregnable, on Tuesday, and subsequently left for Portland and Portsmouth to prepare for laying-up for the winter.

SUPERB, Capt. Henry F. Cleveland, arrived at Smyrna on Thursday from Cyprus.

TAMAR was commissioned on Tuesday morning at Devonport Dockyard by Capt. John B. Warren. Her crew was drafted to her from the harbour ships, and Royal Marine detachment from head-quarters. She was inspected on Monday by Admiral-Superintendent C. T. Curme, the dockyard and Steam Reserve officials being in attendance. The inspection, which lasted some time, was of a very close and minute character, and at its conclusion the Admiral-Superintendent expressed his entire satisfaction with the fittings and general accommodation. The Tamar is expected to leave during the first week in November, for Australia, with the new crews for the Nelson, Diamond, and Lark. Orders have been given that she is to proceed to Portsmouth, and her six hours' full-boiler-power trial is to take place on her passage to that port. She is to leave Devonport on Monday.

TOURMALINE, Capt. R. H. Boyle, arrived at Gibraltar from Malta on Monday, and sailed next day for Portsmouth.

VALOROUS, Capt. Hon. R. Hare, arrived at Chatham on Monday from Plymouth.

WRANGLER, Lieut. and Com. Farr, is expected home from the South-East Coast of America. She is to be paid off at Devonport and placed in the Steam Reserve.

WYE, Staff Capt. Miller, left Sheerness on Monday afternoon for Bermuda, with stores and supernumeraries for the West Indies station; she called at Portsmouth on Tuesday morning. On Thursday she arrived at Devonport and embarked drafts of seamen for ships on the West India station in addition to the new crew for the Mallard. She left yesterday morning for Bermuda, returning with the paid-off crew of the Mallard, time-expired men, and invalids.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the true Palliative in

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:
Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—During the late autumn, when the atmospheric changes are alike sudden and extreme, it is a subject for grave and serious consideration how the health can be best preserved. An occasional alterative, like these Pills, will be the surest preventive of disease, because it overcomes all derangements of the system, purifies and regulates the circulation, and gives that needful energy to the nervous structures which carries the frame triumphantly through trials to which the weak and sickly would succumb. Neuralgic pains and rheumatic agonies derive present and permanent relief from diligent friction with Holloway's Ointment, which, acting as a derivative, releases the gorged and irritated blood-vessels from their congestion, and the nerves from pressure.

Courses for all Examinations now proceeding.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS. — LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA PREPARING for the MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath, whose pupils for some years past have continuously maintained a steady average of success, second to none. This year fifteen have been sent up, seven of whom have passed; four in March (one taking first place on the list), and three at the recent Examination. Very few pupils are taken, and there are two resident Military Instructors of high qualifications constantly at work, with a third in reserve in case of pressure. Thus very great individual attention is guaranteed, and the system of lecturing classes entirely avoided. Batcombe is a country village, near no town, but affording opportunity for shooting and other healthy amusements in moderation. References are permitted to the Earl of Harewood, Sir John Adye, G.C.B., General Elmhirst, C.B., General Thompson (late 7th Dragoon Guards), Colonel A. H. King, R.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, the Bishop of Bedford, and many others, all parents or near relatives of successful pupils.

In the last four Examinations, Captain Evans has passed seven officers, and only three (two still reading) have failed. In addition, three officers passed the Literary, one being first on list.—Address, Trenant Park, Duloe, R.S.O., Cornwall.

HINDUSTANI TAUGHT, Cito, Tuto, Jucunde. Officers prepared for Examinations. Correct Idiom guaranteed.—PUNDIT, 7 Beechholme Road, Clapton.

NEWTON COLLEGE, S. DEVON.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL.—Earl of DEVON.
HEAD MASTER.—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll. Camb. (appointed, 1875.)
TWELVE RESIDENT MASTERS.—First-Class Honour Men are at the Head of each Department.

The New Buildings lately built accommodate 200 boys, to which number from its present limit of 150 it is proposed to increase the School. The advantages offered are—

1. A large staff of Masters, of undoubted calibre and experience, so that the teaching is careful and thorough.
2. Small Classes so that all can be taught properly.
3. Supervision in study to prevent idleness as far as possible.
4. Complete subdivision into Classical and Modern Sides, Non-Latin Divisions, Junior and Preparatory Schools; so that boys can take up any branch of education, scientific or otherwise, and be thoroughly taught in it.
5. Large airy class-rooms where teaching is carried on at the least pressure to master and boy.
6. Excellent situation and playing fields, large swimming-bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, &c., with all kinds of appliances for keeping boys employed and so out of mischief.
7. A system of Scholarships, entrance and others, open to all.
8. A regular succession of annual public Examinations, so that parents can judge for themselves how their sons stand in comparison with those from other schools.
9. Comfortable and well-arranged accommodation, &c., in the houses, &c.
10. Opportunity for that friendly intercourse between Masters and Boys in out-of-door games, which is so conducive to the good tone of a school.
11. The Head Master has had great experience in dealing with delicate boys, and makes special arrangement for those who desire school life and yet require careful watching.
12. Army Candidates trained without the aid of a Crammer, if entered in fair time.
13. The Preparatory School is specially provided for in a separate House, with Fives' Courts of its own, &c.

The School offers SPECIAL TERMS to the Sons of Clergy, Officers, Professional Men, &c., and the fact that Six Entrance Scholarships have been won since 1882 at Winchester and Marlborough bears testimony to its excellence in the Preparatory School, while the List of other Honours is no less satisfactory.

GIVING THE HIGHEST VELOCITY, THE FLATTEST TRAJECTORY, AND THE GREATEST ACCURACY YET OBTAINED.

·360, ·400, ·450, ·500, & ·577, Double Express, £25.

From A. H. MACARTNEY, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. SHUBRICK, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No. 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

AIMS AND OBJECTS.

~~This College was established:~~—(I.) To combine the advantages of a Public School training with those of private tuition. (II.) To provide for the sons of Officers of the Army, Navy, and Auxiliary Forces—to whom preference for admission is accorded—a good general education, including preparation for the Home and Indian Civil Services, Matriculation at the Universities, and (III.) to prepare Candidates, whether Sons of Officers or Civilians, for Commissions in the Military Service.

The course of study embraces:—Scripture, Latin and Greek, Mathematics, English History and Literature, Modern Languages, Chemistry, Electricity, Geology, Geometrical and Freehand Drawing. Prominence is given to the study of Mathematics, Modern Languages, and Sciences. For the more effectual pursuit of the last, a large laboratory has recently been erected. The study of Literature and Modern Language is stimulated by a large and well-selected library of the works of the best English, German, and French authors.

The system adopted aims at the development, in individuals of those branches of learning for which they may happen to have an aptitude, and which will be useful in their intended career.

A Preparatory Department for pupils under 13 has been provided for in a separate house, where they will be under careful supervision. The course of instruction for these younger boys includes—Latin, Greek, if necessary, Mathematics, and Modern Languages (including English), and is sufficiently general to qualify for admission to either the Military or Civil Department of the College. They will receive such physical training as the Head Master considers desirable. Uniform will not be worn by boys belonging to this Department.

Systematic instruction is given for about one hour daily in military riding, sword and lance exercise, infantry drill, swimming, and gymnastics. A manège, swimming bath, and gymnasium form part of the institution. Uniform is worn by all students above 13.

Officers serving abroad are specially considered in reference to vacation arrangements, &c.

Several valuable Scholarships are annually awarded. In order to induce students to seek a high standard of proficiency, it has been decided to return one year's fees to the candidate from the College who takes the highest place, provided that that place be not lower than the fifth on the list at the examination for Woolwich or Sandhurst; and to return the last term's fees, provided the place taken be not lower than tenth on the list. Three swords and a number of valuable prizes are given annually.

SCALE OF FEES.

Students 17 years of age and over, whether they take the full military course or not...	£105	0	0
Students between the ages of 13 and 17, taking the full military course	105	0	0

Holders of 20 Shares are entitled to nominate a student, and if such a nomination is used in favour of a relative the reduction on the fee is £21 per annum on the first three amounts, and £10 10s on the last. If the nomination is used in favour of others than relatives, the reduction is £10 10s per annum.

Holders of 20 Debentures are entitled to nominate a student at a reduction of £10 10s on the fees all round.

The outfit of uniform, gymnastic shoes and belts; tailor's and shoemaker's repairs; books, instruments, stationery; pocket-money, breakages, parcels and postage; medical attendance, medicine, washing, &c., come on an average to not more than £21 per annum. It should be borne in mind that a considerable saving is effected in the cost of plain clothes by the wearing of uniform.

EXTRACT FROM THE CERTIFICATE OF THE VISITING MEDICAL OFFICER.

The situation of the College is very high and undeniably healthy, as borne out by the fact that the Students improve much in physique while at the College; a fact which also testifies to the good diet and regimen. There has been moreover a complete freedom from any outbreak among the Students of those disorders which are traceable to local sanitary defects.

R. C. LEVER, M.B. (London), Visiting Medical Officer, Oxford Military College.

GENERAL RESULTS.

The total number of Students entered on the books of the College since it was opened in September, 1876, up to September, 1883, is 424.

These joined to prepare for various professions, &c., as follows:—

308 to prepare for commissions in the Cavalry or Line.
72 ,, ,, ,, ,, Royal Engineers or Artillery.
30 to receive a good general education.
7 to prepare for the Civil Service.
3 to receive a preliminary education for the profession of Civil Engineer.
2 to prepare for matriculation at the Universities.
2 to prepare for the preliminary examination for the Army Medical Department.

424

118 Of these are still undergoing a course of instruction at the College.
35 Were advised to discontinue their course of study.
17 Were withdrawn for family reasons and on account of ill-health.
43 Changed their intended profession.

Of the remaining 167, 108, or 62½%, passed their final literary examination; they are nearly all serving. The total number of O.M.C. students now serving in the various branches of the Services, as far as can be ascertained, is 140.

Amongst the places taken by the successful Candidates were:—2nd, 4th, 5th, 5th, 10th, 12th, 13th, 13th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 19th, 19th, 20th, 24th, 24th, 28th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 33rd, 35th, 35th, 36th, 37th, 39th, 49th, 50th, 50th, 50th, 51st, 52nd, 53rd, 56th, 57th, 58th, and so forth.

According to the latest edition of the Report of H.M.'s Civil Service Commissioners, the total number of Candidates who presented themselves for the final examination (from the various colleges, schools, and private tutors) was, in 1880, 1,059; of these, 243, or 23%, were successful. In 1881, 1,265; of these, 244, or 19%, were successful.

Of the 7 who joined to prepare for the "Civil Service," 2 passed. A third could easily have passed for the higher branch, but was medically disqualified; 4 are still at the College.

Of the 30 who joined to receive a "Good General Education," 17 have left, having attained their object; 13 are still at the College.

Upwards of 200 of the present Head Master's pupils have passed the Military Competitive Examinations for Woolwich and Sandhurst.

THE KHARTOUM EXPEDITION.

A correspondent sends us a diary of events at Assouan:—Sunday, Oct. 5, 1884.—By the post-boat this morning arrived Surg.-Gen. O'Nial, A.M.D., and his staff, all of whom proceeded at once by train to Shellal, en route for Wady Halfa. Lieut. Peel, 2nd Life Guards, also came in the same boat. A derrick has been erected on Elephantine Island, for lifting the Nile boats from the barges and steamers. The postal steamer left with Lieut.-Col. Creagh, 80th (2nd South Stafford) Regt., on board, on his way home, viâ Cairo, to command that battalion. The 42nd Royal Highlanders arrived during the morning, but as a case of small-pox was reported, they were placed in quarantine for seven days. The horses of the Egyptian Cavalry left by march route for Wady Halfa during the evening, to mount the men of the 19th Hussars when they arrive. A large convoy of pack camels also left for the same destination. Oct. 6.—A detachment, 100 rank and file, of the 46th (Duke of Cornwall's L.I.), Capt. Eden, Lieuts. Cunningham and Lloyd, left en route for Wady Halfa. Large quantities of provisions, in the neatest of packing-cases with screwed-down lids, are being off-loaded from barges at the Commissariat landing-stage at Assouan (proper) railway terminus. The cases labelled "Jam" and "Marmalade" caused much amusement. Oct. 7.—About half-past 5 this morning Col. Butler and Major Martin arrived on board the steam-launch Maude, and preceded the first detachment of the boats by about two hours. The loaded boats were put in the water as quickly as possible, and they look very serviceable. Col. Butler went to Shellal to make arrangements about the boats. Oct. 20.—The 19th Hussars, the gunners of the camel battery, and 100 marines, are to join the composite Camel Corps, ordered to leave Cairo and proceed to Wady Halfa at once. The Nile is slightly rising to-day. There are 110 boats above Wady Halfa and 150 between it and Assouan. Only two Whalers have gone up the second cataract yet.

The special correspondent of the Standard thus describes how the nuggar in which he was being conveyed to Dongola was navigated up the rapid at Kincorah:—"It was interesting in a high degree, and distinctly exciting, to watch the skill with which our steersman* would guide his craft from whirlpool to whirlpool, taking advantage of the backwater of each to carry him in the required direction. And thus by cautious dodging we reached the main eddy near the head of the rapids, on either side of which the water swirled past in billows that rocked violently even our big flat-bottomed boat; suddenly with the aid of a stronger puff of wind than usual, we shot across the stream, the nuggar, bobbing in the boil like a cork, got into a quieter current, which gradually we overcame, and so reached the placid river above. After a time it is possible to comprehend the system by which the boatmen navigate, although at first it seems highly bewildering, and to the novice alarming. Every rapid has its slack water sometimes on one side of the river and sometimes on the other. When we get to the end of one stretch, we shoot across the stream to the other, and so gradually ascend, as if by so many locks. The dangerous period, of course, is when striking across, as the boat is then carried rapidly downwards, and if it should fail to reach in time the friendly eddy on the other side, might be dashed against the rocks that lurk under water, and so be wrecked. Small boats, such as those coming from England, will not be able to sail up the rapids after the manner described above. In the first place, they will not have enough sail-power; and in the second, they will not be large enough or strong enough to swim in mid-stream, or to cross from eddy to eddy. They must be hauled up close in shore, which in many places is no easy task, owing to precipitous banks and overhanging trees."

The same correspondent says:—"Dreary and forbidding is the scenery along these desolate reaches of the great Nile. Jet-black rocks show up through the desert, and shine in the sun like gigantic masses of coal, and the yellow sand drifts down between them to the very brink, shrinking back only on coming in contact with the waters, now retreating, but smothering the fertile deposit which they leave behind. Only at rare intervals does a hardy date palm or mimosa bush save the landscape from utter desolation. Through this dreary country the Nile hurries on more rapidly than usual, as if anxious to escape from this thirsty land and preserve itself for the more congenial valleys further north. But if during the day the country is uninteresting in appearance, it is not so at night. Just now a new moon lights up the landscape until the small hours, and the black and grotesque-shaped rocks throw strange shadows upon the sand and river. The feathery mimosa trees on the opposite bank loom up like ghosts; and if it were not for the chorus forward as the men join in that favourite soldiers' song, 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' one might go to sleep dreaming of fairyland."

The correspondent of the Daily News at Korosko, talking with some of the Nubian villagers,* reports:—"When asked what they thought of this expedition, they replied that it was nothing new to them, because so many English people came up the river. According to their statement they had never heard of the Mahdi, and were not in the least concerned about the cause of which he assumes the leadership. Their innocence may have been put on as a cloak to hide intrigue with a subtlety one would hardly give them credit for; but far more probably they were perfectly ingenuous, for the labour of cultivating the narrow strip of Nile bank on which alone vegetation is to be seen leaves them little leisure for intercourse with stray travellers by land or water. At all events, the further we go the more difficult it becomes for us to realise that we are advancing into an enemy's country, or to believe that there will be any necessity for striking hard blows in order to relieve the beleaguered garrison of Khartoum."

With reference to climate, he says:—"Travelling across arid wastes, one would soon begin to long for the mists and rains of England; but here there is always a belt of verdure to charm the eye; and though the desert comes at places quite down to the river bank, in others is only separated from it by cliffs of bare, rugged sandstone, granite, or basaltic rocks; signs of fertility never wholly disappear, while a total absence of humidity in the air makes it invigorating even in the hottest hours of the afternoon. We slept last night within the tropic of Cancer. A brisk north breeze kept the atmosphere deliciously cool till sunrise, and though the temperature rose at midday to nearly 90 deg. in the shade, there has been no feeling of lassitude as there would have been in moister climates. The result of this is that troops show so far no indication of suffering from heat, whether afloat in barges or encamped ashore."

The last messenger who arrived at Dongola with letters from Gen. Gordon affirms most positively that Lupton Bey had arrived at Khartoum before he left the town, having come down the Nile from Bahr el Ghazel with two steamers.

Lord Wolseley has applied specially for the services of the following officers for duty in connection with the Expedition, viz.:—Major A. E. Turner, R.A.; Capt. Kekewich and Lieut. N. Allen, 3rd Buffs; and Lieut. Lang, 72nd Highlanders.

An interesting account of the hauling of the steamer Gizeh over the great gate of the Cataract at Abka has been detailed in the columns of a daily contemporary. It appears that the vessel had been moored in the basin just below the Small Gate of the Big Cataract; her paddles had been removed, a wire hawser attached in slings and passed round iron bollards and under a heavy spar in the after-part of the ship, thus dividing the strain equally all round the boat. A treble 8-in. hemp hawser was seized on to a shackle attached to the wire rope, and the three parts were then led right ahead to the shore on the south end of the basin above the Cataract. It took some time to arrange this and to get the slack out of the hawsers, which were manned by about 800 men all told; after this was accomplished, and smaller parties were posted on the four ropes which served as guys on the port and starboard bow and quarter respectively, all was ready, the signal to haul on the port guy was given, and the real business of the day began. In the course of the operations, and at a critical period, the men who manned the hawsers holding bravely on, the ship was brought suddenly up, and, after a short delay, was successfully hauled over the rush of the Cataract into the wide basin beyond. Here the work of the big hawsers ceased, and the port guy being converted into a leading hawser, brought her safely alongside the eastern bank.

THE LORDS OF THE ADMIRALTY.

On Saturday Sir T. Brandreth and Mr. Rendel proceeded from the Enchantress to the Lily, Com. Gibson, recently commissioned for service on the South-American station, and thence to the Admiral Superintendent's office, where the estimates for Devonport and Keyham Yards for 1885-86 were considered. The repairs to the Black Prince, which is being brought forward as the flagship of the Duke of Edinburgh, were considered, as also those of the Inconstant and the Bellerophon, at Devonport dockyard; and the Penguin, at Keyham. Their Lordships inspected the Curlew and the Landrail. The machinery in the composite and building shops of the dockyard was also examined. The Commissioners expressed great satisfaction at the appearance of the Reindeer. Sir A. Cooper Key, Lord Alcester, and Sir T. Brassey inspected the Cambridge and the Marine Barracks, where the division was drawn up in line under the command of Lieut.-Col. J. F. Sanders. The battery at Longroom Hill was visited, and gun-drill inspected. Sir H. Stewart and Lord Alcester proceeded to the Hospital at Stonehouse, where they visited the various wards, expressing themselves pleased with their appearance. After lunch Lord Alcester and Sir T. Brandreth inspected the Tamar, whence they visited the Royal William Victualling Yard. In the evening Lord Alcester and Sir Thomas Brandreth gave an official dinner to the captains and commanders. The inspection at Devonport having concluded, their Lordships proceeded in the Enchantress to Falmouth and Pembroke.

The annual visit of inspection by the Lords of the Admiralty to the Naval dockyards and establishments was continued at Plymouth, at which port they arrived, as briefly reported, last Friday. During the day their Lordships were engaged in examining the proposed estimates for next year's work. The Mariner, composite gunboat, was inspected; she was launched some six months ago, and three weeks since underwent her preliminary trial trip. The Racer, steam gun-vessel, and the Himalaya having been noticed, an inspection was made of the granite dry dock, built by Messrs. J. Pethick and Son. This dock is one of the largest in the world, and the first foundation-stone of it was laid when Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes was Admiral-Superintendent of the dockyard. The dock is 370 ft. long, 94 ft. wide, and of 35 ft. draught. The Engineers' Training College at Keyham was visited, and on leaving their Lordships expressed to the commander their entire approval of the whole of the internal arrangements. On board the Raleigh things are being rapidly pushed forward, and it is deemed probable that she will be the next flagship on the China station. The Vavasseur mountings of the 6-in. guns with which the Raleigh has been supplied were the subjects of some attention. Having visited the Impregnable, the party proceeded to the new Naval Barracks. On arriving at Falmouth their Lordships inspected the Ganges, training-ship for boys, and also the yard at Mylor. Having concluded the inspection at Falmouth, the Lords Commissioners re-embarked on board their yacht, and arrived at Pembroke on Tuesday, after inspecting the ships in course of construction, proposals for new works were submitted to them by the chief officials of the dockyard, and the visit was brought to a conclusion, their Lordships having been entertained at luncheon by Capt. Chatfield, Superintendent. On Thursday the Enchantress returned to Portsmouth, having Lord Alcester and Admiral Brandreth on board. Their Lordships concluded their annual inspection by visiting the Agamemnon, and consulting with reference to her defective steering. In consequence of her comparatively short length and great displacement, her bottom is very bluff, which prevents a free run of water to her rudder, and renders her somewhat slow in answering her helm. It has been decided, it is stated, not to make any alterations at present, but to subject her to a series of trials after leaving England. Should the existing defects prove serious, she will have her rudder area increased on arrival at Malta.

The Defiance, which is being fitted up as a torpedo school, and the Hecate, turret-ship, were next inspected. Prior to her cruise with the Reserve Squadron, the Hecate was widened, and their Lordships expressed their entire satisfaction with the alteration. The factory, workshops, and the new Naval Barracks were inspected, and the Commissioners returned to their yacht. In the evening Admiral Sir W. Houston Stewart and Lady Stewart gave a reception at Mount Wise.

A despatch from Valparaiso reports the arrival there from England, of the Chilian war-ship Esmeralda.

Preparations are being made in the new Admiralty dock at St. Petersburgh for laying the keel of a new armour-plated frigate of larger size than any existing Russian frigate, the Peter the Great not excepted.

Two lieutenants of the Turkish Navy have been allowed to join the British service. One has gone on board the Agincourt and the other the Northumberland. They are to wear the uniform of British naval lieutenants.

It has been urged, in a statement drawn up "by a very talented naval officer," that not the least important point as regards the want of efficiency of our Navy, is that of what is known as small craft, that is to say, the classes of sloops, gun-vessels, and gun-boats. Small ships should, the writer remarks, serve three main ends: (1.) They should be able to catch the enemy's merchant vessels; (2.) they should be as fast and as well armed and designed as the enemy's men-of-war of about equal size; (3.) they should be able to carry despatches and act as scouts.

Qrmr. Francis Butler, R.M.L.I., has been awarded the Greenwich Hospital Pension of £50 per annum, vacant by the death of Capt. Thomas Cooper, R.M.L.I., on July 2 last.

The corvette Saida is to leave on the 5th of next month for Bahia, viâ Southampton. The corvette Heligoland will start on the 4th prox. for Sierra Leone, viâ Liverpool, arriving towards the 23rd. The corvette Frundsberg will set out on Nov. 21 for Zanzibar, viâ Brindisi, arriving about Dec. 14. The corvette Aurora, leaving on Nov. 5 for Santos, viâ Southampton, will be due there about Dec. 3. The gunboat Nautilus will proceed to Aden, viâ Trieste, on Nov. 5, and will complete the journey by the 17th.

SQUADRON NEWS.

North American.—The Northampton was at Halifax on the 10th inst., and is to leave for Bernuda on Nov. 4. The Garnet was at Halifax, and was to leave on the 10th inst. for Newfoundland, where she will remain until relieved by the Tenedos. The Fantôme was at Bermuda on Sept. 24, in dock and refitting. The Bullfrog was at Jamaica on Sept. 4. The Express was on passage from the Mediterranean station. The Mallard was at Newfoundland on Sept. 10 on fishery duty. She was ordered to rejoin the flag at Halifax.

East Indies.—The Euryalus was at Aden on the 8th inst., and will proceed to Bombay early next month. The Turquoise, senior officer's ship on South-east Coast of Africa and at Madagascar, remains. The Briton at Bombay also remains for repairs. The Dragon, senior officer's ship in Persian Gulf, and remains. The Osprey remains on South-east Coast of Africa at Madagascar. The Arab remains at Zeila. The Philomel is ordered from the Persian Gulf to Aden. The Ranger was at Aden, and will shortly proceed to Bombay for repairs. The Decoy remains at Berberah.

China.—The Vigilant was at Hong Kong on Sept. 12. The Audacious was at Amoy on Aug. 11, and after being relieved by the Sapphire would proceed to Hong Kong. The Sapphire was at Hong Kong on Sept. 12, and was ordered to be ready for sea on Sept. 17, and to proceed to Amoy. The Midge was at Hong Kong on Sept. 12, her orders being to proceed to Swatow in a few days. The Swift remained at Canton on Sept. 12, the Champion was at Pagoda Anchorage, and the Zephyr at Foochow. The Merlin remained at Peak River. The Fly was at Takao, Formosa, on Aug. 27, where she remains for the protection of foreign residents at Takao, Faiwan-fu, and Amphing. The Foxhound was in the Gulf of Tonquin, alternately visiting Hoihow and Pakhoi; she was at Hoihow on Aug. 28. The Cockchafer was at Tamsui, Formosa, on Sept. 11, where she was "ordered to remain for the present." The Tweed was at Swatow on Aug. 30, having been commissioned temporarily to relieve the Victor Emanuel; she was to be relieved by the Midge. The Cleopatra was at Shanghai on Sept. 6, where she will remain. The Daring was at Ningpo on Aug. 29, and remains for protection of settlement. The Albatross was in Yangtse River, and was at Wuhu on Aug. 29, en route to Hankow. The Curacoa was at Chefoo on Aug. 23, and is ordered to remain as senior officer's ship in the Gulf of Pechili. The Espoir was at Tientsin on Aug. 20, and remains. The Pegasus was at Penang on Sept. 21, and would proceed to Malacca and Singapore the first week of October. The Linnet was at Bûbûn Bay; she was ordered to proceed on Aug. 24 to Olehleh, to keep up communication. The Flying Fish was surveying Coast of Corea and off-lying islands. The Firebrand was on passage from England, and would remain in Straits of Malacca division; she arrived at Singapore on the 22nd inst. Further advices were received at the Admiralty yesterday from the Commander-in-Chief on the China station. The letters are up to Sept. 17. The Vigilant was at Hong Kong on that date, and the Audacious would be relieved by Sapphire on Sept. 22; the latter ship was at Hong Kong on Sept. 17, and was to leave for Amoy on the 20th. The Midge left Hong Kong for Sharp Peak, River Min, to follow orders of the Senior Officer. The Swift was at Canton on the 17th, the Foxhound being in the Gulf of Tonquin, Hoihow, on Aug. 28, alternately visiting Hoihow and Pakhoi. The Tweed was at Swatow on Aug. 30; she was commissioned temporarily as tender to Victor Emanuel, ordered to Hong Kong, if all was quiet at Swatow. The Champion was at Pagoda Anchorage, River Min, on Sept. 17, and remained. The Zephyr was to be sent to Hong Kong when relieved at Foochow. The Merlin was at Sharp Peak, River Min, where she was to remain for the present. The Fly was at Takao, Formosa, on Aug. 27; she remains for the protection of foreign residents at Takao, Taiwanpo, and Amping. The Cleopatra was at Shanghai on Sept. 12, and remains; and the Daring was at Ningpo on the 6th, and remains. The Curacoa was at Chefoo at last-named date, where she remains as senior officer's ship in Gulf of Pechili. The Espoir was at Tientsin on Sept. 6, being under orders to proceed to Newchwang, returning to Chefoo or Tientsin. The Linnet was at Penang on Sept. 15, and subsequently left for Hong Kong.

Paymaster-in-Chief William E. Chown, whose retirement on account of continued ill-health has been recently notified, entered the Royal Navy as an assistant-clerk on board the Caledonia, 120, on Jan. 20, 1848, and served in the Rattler on the West Coast of Africa from 1849 till 1851. As clerk and assistant-paymaster he served in the Trafalgar, 120, and Royal Albert (flagship of Lord Lyons), throughout the Russian War. Was present at the bombardment of Odessa, and in one of the rocket boats at the Royal Albert at a night attack on the shipping in Sebastopol, June 17, 1855, and at the capture of Kinburn, Kertch, and Yenikale, for which he possesses the Crimean and Turkish medals with Sebastopol clasp. He has since served in the Vigilant, Implacable, as paymaster-in-charge of the Naval yard and coal depôt at Shanghai, Cadmus, Barrosa, Black Prince, Aurora, Amethyst, Rupert, and, lastly, for three years as paymaster of H.M.S. St. Vincent at Portsmouth.

The uniform of "students of Naval Construction," while they are attending school, shall be similar to that of the students in marine engineering, with the exception that the distinguishing mark around the sleeve-coat shall be of silver grey instead of the purple stripe worn by the engineer students.

Sub-Lieut. Daintree, of H.M.S. Excellent, when riding through Salisbury on Saturday evening, was thrown from his bicycle and picked up quite insensible. Dr. Hoare, of Tichfield, found him suffering from concussion of the brain. He was conveyed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar, where he is progressing satisfactorily.

Mr. L. G. Davis, Assistant-Constructor, asserts that "the steering qualities of the Collingwood are exceptionally good." As she is the only one of the six barbette ships on the same lines which has had a trial, it would be a misfortune, adds Mr. Davis, that the "erroneous statement should go forth without correction."

NAVAL UNIFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Anent the "fancy dress" referred to by "A Naval Officer of 25 Years' Service," in his letter on Naval uniform which appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette of Aug. 23, your correspondent would probably view from a different standpoint the licence in dress which he now condemns, were he serving in a temperature of 115° in the shade. I imagine that he even would arrive at the conclusion, long since reached by us in this warm corner, that it is well worth while to have a variety of clothing, in order to ensure the only approach, and that not a near one, to comfort in really hot weather. He would prefer that his neck should be graced by a white necktie rather than by a black one, resulting in a stream of blackened perspiration flowing from his collar and down his shirt-front, staining his jacket, tunic, or gauze coat, as the case might be. It certainly is regrettable that, just when their Lordships are sanctioning an alleviation of the sufferings of naval officers on hot stations by adopting for them a more rational dress, an officer should cry out, from his pedestal of 25 years' service, against a reform which has for so long and so strongly been advocated by you and your service contemporaries. Malgré lui, let us hope that white tunics with yellow braid stripes will shortly be authorised to form part of our wardrobes, and that white neckties will, when the thermometer stands near three figures, grace the neck of Drenched Through.

Zeila, Sept. 23.

Eighteen years ago, the frigate Diamond, of Crimean fame, was lent to the Missions to Seamen Society as a mission-ship for the Tyne shipping. In honour of the gentleman who fitted up her church, reading-room, library, and museum on board, Sir William Peel's former command was renamed the "Joseph Straker." The staff consists of a chaplain and two readers, with a shipkeeper and boatman, who reside on board. They have done their work so effectually amongst the teeming merchant fleets of the Tyne, that the mission church is crowded out. The character and habits of the crews have so improved, that the seamen require better accommodation than a ship can provide. Three thousand one hundred and seventy-five of the men frequenting the Tyne have enrolled themselves as total abstaining members of the Mission to Seamen branch of the Church of England Temperance Society on board, and last year 562 of them bought Bibles and New Testaments on board, to take with them to sea. Forty-five captains and officers of vessels have engaged to act as Missions to Seamen helpers on board their own ships when at sea, in connection with the Joseph Straker. As the ship is alongside a quay, the chaplain and readers regularly officiate in the sailors' boarding-houses, which are now respectably conducted houses, the masters of which are the chaplain's best helpers. So effectually has the Joseph Straker carried out her peaceful mission, that it has become necessary to substitute for her a spacious institute on shore, with a handsome mission church overhead. The Bishop of Durham is to lay the foundation-stone on the 27th inst., and the edifice is to be completed in July next, when the Missions to Seamen propose to return the Joseph Straker to the Admiralty, with many thanks for what has proved a most useful, though a somewhat expensive loan. The days of stationary church ships are passing away, owing to the improved habits and altered conditions of life in the Mercantile Marine.—[Communicated.]

The pension of £50 a year vacant by the death of Com. Stanbridge on the 1st inst., has been awarded to Com. H. E. C. Robinson.

The Poonah arrived at Malta on Saturday from Queenstown, and left for Cyprus.

The Cameo arrived at Alexandria on Tuesday.

Intelligence from Ningpo, dated Sept. 3, states that the native authorities have deemed it necessary partially to block up the entrance to the river, leaving only a passage of 600 feet. They are prepared to close this passage should the French Fleet appear outside.

"An Admiral" writes:—"Will you allow me to correct a statement in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 18th inst.? In the article referring to the visit of the Lords of the Admiralty to Portsmouth, the following ships are reported to be 'ready for sea,'—Dreadnought, Devastation, Rupert, Active, Volage, Cordelia, Mercury, Triumph, and Bacchante. Having seen all those ships within the last fortnight, I can vouch for the fact that not one of them is ready for sea. Being 'ready for sea' means being ready to start immediately the order is given, whereas not one of the above-mentioned ships could be got ready for sea for at least two months, except the Dreadnought, which has been fitting-out for several weeks, and was working round about a fortnight ago, but it will be some time before she is ready for sea."

Some experiments are ordered to be made at Garrison Point Fort, Sheerness, with a new torpedo invented by Mr. Brennan. It is stated that the torpedo can be steered through the water to the object to which it is directed. It will carry a heavier charge of ammunition than any torpedo at present invented.

"One Who Knows" writes:—"The subject of letter by 'Old Soldier' in your last issue is certainly one which deserves attention. It is no unusual thing for lazy, badly-conducted men to prefer prison life to laborious duties at Aldershot. If the duties of the well-conducted men were increased by having to do escort duty over their prison comrades, it ought to be sufficient. Too much cannot be said or done towards lessening the enormous expense which at present burdens young soldiers for wear and tear of clothing, leaving them almost without a penny of their own, and so quite disheartening them, especially in the first year of their service. It is no unusual thing for men to have to go on some hard-working fatigue soon after coming off guard, and surely it would be a better division of labour to allow his badly-conducted but well-fed and well-rested comrade to do those duties."

Summary of Events.

October 5.—Lord Wolseley went on Saturday from Wady Halfa by train to Sarras. He rode thence to Semneh to inspect the railway extension to the cataract, and returned the same night.

October 17.—The screw camel battery arrived this evening at Wady Halfa. It marched the whole way from Assiout, doing the distance in less than four weeks. The river transport of boat stores is slow at present. There is no prospect of a forward movement for a fortnight.

October 18.—Lord Wolseley returned to Wady Halfa. Portuguese Government objects to the claims of the British Government over certain territory in South Africa.

October 19.—Col. Butler, C.B., arrived at Wady Halfa.

October 20.—The Duke of Cambridge left Dover for Calais.

October 21.—Canadian pilots who had arrived at Liverpool on previous day left England, viâ Ostend and Brindisi, in charge of Capt. Kekewich, of the Buffs, for Alexandria, to navigate Nile boats over cataracts. Arrival of 378 Canadian boatmen at Assouan, for service with Nile Expedition.—Admiral Courbet declared all Formosan ports to be blockaded. General Campenon demands mobilisation of an Army Corps for China. "Hell Gate" lighthouse, New York, illuminated by electricity, 42,000 candle power.

October 22.—British protectorate over South-East coast, New Guinea, proclaimed by H.M.S. Nelson. Unfavourable opinions expressed of fitness of Wolseley row-boats for the Nile.

October 23.—Parliament meets. Khedive gives luncheon to Lord Northbrook. Heliograph established at Wady Halfa.

October 24.—Lord Northbrook leaves Alexandria in the Iris.

October 25.—Balaclava dinner. The 19th Hussars and a R.A. Battery to leave Cairo. Depôt to be established at Hamiek.

Obituary.

Vice-Admiral Robert Jocelyn Otway, of Castle Otway, County Tipperary, who died on the 16th inst., entered the Navy in May, 1821, and obtained his commission as lieut. in Nov., 1828; was promoted to com. in Jan., 1846; capt. in Feb., 1858; and in July, 1864, was placed on the Retired List; was made rear-admiral in Dec., 1875; and vice-admiral in Jan., 1880. When senior lieut. of the Castor he was second-in-command of the Naval Brigade during the operations in New Zealand and the capture of Kaioitti's Pah in 1846, for which service he was promoted. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant for the County of Tipperary.

Admiral T. Chaloner died on Monday morning at his residence, Loughull, Guisboro, Yorkshire. He was about 70 years of age, and retired from the Navy nearly 20 years ago. Admiral Chaloner was the son of Mr. Robert Chaloner and the Hon. Frances Laura Dundas, daughter of the first Lord Dundas. His father for some time represented York in Parliament. The late admiral entered the Navy very early in life and saw active service in various parts of the world. In 1855, upon the death of his elder brother, he came into possession of the family estate. At the commencement of the Volunteer movement, Admiral Chaloner took the command as lieut.-col. of the 1st North Yorks R.A.V., an appointment which he held until recently, and in connection with which her Majesty bestowed upon him the Companionship of the Bath.

At the quarterly meeting of the directors of the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund, held on the 14th inst., Sir W. R. E. Stuart, K.C.B., M.D., inspector-general, in the chair, the sum of £58 was distributed among the several applicants.

A Royal Hellenic cruiser, the Alpheos, one of four small cruisers designed by Mr. G. C. Mackrow, which will rank in the second line of vessels intended to serve the double purposes of training sailors for the larger armaments of the navy that are already projected, and of providing for the defence of the seaboard, was launched at Blackwall on Tuesday from the dockyard of the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company. The Alpheos will be rigged to spread a large extent of canvas, while the use of steam, except on special occasions, will be prohibited as detrimental to the development of the qualities in officers and men which constitute seamanship. The engines are of 400 horse-power indicated. Her armament will consist of two 9·6 centimètre Krupp guns mounted on Vavasseur carriages, and she will also carry three 5-barrel Nordenfelt guns. From the same yard three smaller boats have been sent out to form the third line in the coast defensive service.

Rear-Admiral A. McL. Lyons has forwarded letters from the Pacific station announcing that the Swiftsure was at Esquimault on Sept. 30, and would remain. The Constance left Honolulu on Sept. 22 for the Luie Islands, the Hervey Group, Tahiti, and Coquimbo. The Heroine was on coasts of Peru and Chili on Sept. 30, conducting duties of senior officer. The Satellite left Guaymas on Sept. 24 for Esquimault, and was expected to arrive about the middle or end of October. The Mutine was at Esquimault; she will proceed to the southern division of station when relieved by the Satellite. The Sappho and Pelican were on coasts of Peru and Chili, under orders of senior officer.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

In a long letter to the Times, Sir E. J. Reed expresses his views on the state of the Navy. He commences by referring to the sudden losses of the Captain, Vanguard, and two foreign ironclads, and referring to the "distrust of ironclads," remarks that better management now exists on board our ships, and the subdivision of the holds has been carried still further; it would, therefore, be an error to infer from the Vanguard's sinking that such ironclads as are now built could be sunk by a single blow of a ram. Coming to the question of the continued increase of the gun, Sir E. J. Reed observes:—"I do not for a single moment admit that the gun has mastered such armour as can be applied to ships; but if this were otherwise, and if it were found impossible to keep out the very largest shell that can be fired from Naval guns, while I should regard that as a good reason for dividing and distributing the engines and the boilers, and for other like arrangements, I should consider it no reason whatever for depriving our ships of the protection which armour undoubtedly affords against 19-20ths of the guns carried at sea by our possible enemies. In short, I see in the huge growth of some guns no shadow of a reason for abandoning armour, but a very powerful reason indeed for straining every scientific and every manufacturing resource in rendering the ship's armour defence as perfect as possible. As to the torpedo, that is a weapon to which, terrible as it is, I see no necessity whatever for giving in. I have, in my own belief at least, quite successfully solved the problem of defeating these devices, and having placed in the hands of the Admiralty plans which are capable of almost any amount of development for this purpose." With reference to the great cost and size of ironclads, he thinks they have been much exaggerated before the public. We hear people talk as if we had of late years been enlarging our ironclads to colossal proportions beyond all that was thought or dreamed of twenty years ago; but during the whole period of our ironclad progress we have increased in tonnage but 700 tons, and that only in a single ship. The Inflexible carries 24 in. of armour and 80-ton guns. "Surely," says Sir E. J. Reed, "there is nothing in this history of the subject to scare us from adopting, but everything to encourage us to adopt, whatever increase in thickness of armour our safety and honour may require. Of the question of cost, I will simply say that increased thickness of armour on a ship does not necessarily mean an increase of cost; for I am persuaded that we may greatly simplify, and thereby greatly cheapen, large ironclads; but even if that be otherwise, why are we to shrink from any extra outlay that our Naval strength and security may fairly demand?" The writer further contends that ironclads are not of "short advantage," but that they are available for a lengthened period. He proceeds to show from Mr. Barnaby's figures that, as regards ironclads, France falls short of us by only about one first-class ship, or a couple of second-class. "In order to put ourselves on a level with France and one other Power in combination, we should require—were that power Italy—to build the equivalent of 10 ships of the largest class of ironclads; or eight such ships were the second Power Germany or Russia. As against a combination of three such European Powers as France, Italy, and Russia, we should of course require to build ships equivalent to both the ten and the eight, say, 18 ironclads of 11,000 tons each. These figures are so authoritative, so clear, and so significant, that they seem to me to need no comment. They afford ample ground for all the public anxiety that is felt. Without panic and without extravagance, it has become necessary to add largely and quickly to our ironclad fleet, unless the country is content, and the Government is content, to say that even the hope of Naval supremacy in Europe has passed away." Referring to the proposals for the building of a large additional number of not only unarmoured, but extremely fragile vessels, with the idea of protecting our mercantile fleet, Sir E. J. Reed says:—"When the object is to defend our own trade from the attacks of armed vessels, I am at a loss to understand the wisdom of expending money upon such extremely fragile craft, themselves utterly incapable, as I regard them, of offering any resistance worthy of the name to any gun afloat worthy of being called a gun. It is always distasteful to me to discuss the subject, because any sense of intelligence which I may possess, and any knowledge of the subject that I may have acquired, are so completely at issue with the astounding pretensions put forward on behalf of thin unarmoured ships, that were I to contend for my views of the matter I should bring upon myself endless distress and trouble." Sir E. J. Reed contends that in our mercantile marine we have ample provision for "unarmoured cruisers" besides those we already possess in the Navy. "But the country ought not to depend only upon unarmoured cruisers for the defence of its mercantile marine. Fortunately, the Admiralty are of this opinion too; hence the Impérieuse and Warspite. But powerful and fast as these two ships are to be, they are not fast enough for all purposes, and I maintain that there is no reason whatever for not building at least three or four ships armoured and armed fully as efficiently as they, but having a speed of twenty knots an hour. Such ships would be well within the tonnage of some of our existing ironclads; and what power, what security, what mastery of the seas, what national pride and honour would they not confer upon us? In our whole existing ironclad fleet we now have but one finished ship of 15 knots, and only two of 16 knots under construction. Why is this? Why have we no armoured ships of 18, 19, or 2 knots? The reason most certainly is not that they would be any larger, or much more costly, or more difficult to build than some others; but, even if they were, that would not justify their omission from our service. I have asked the question, but I cannot answer it. What I feel sure of is that with less than half-a-dozen 20-knot armour-clads each with large coal supply, we might sweep the seas of everything that can at present assail our commerce; and I am perfectly satisfied that no other form of main defence for our mercantile marine would in the end be one-half as effective or one-half as economical."

Replying on behalf of the Government to a resolution proposed at the annual meeting of the Scottish Liberal Association, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman said the state of the Navy was a matter of supreme national moment. He took that opportunity of acknowledging the public services of Mr. Smith, the late First Lord, in raising the question out of the arena of party. On the part of his colleagues and himself, he cordially welcomed the increased attention devoted to the subject. Their difficulty was that no one seemed to be interested in the matter. They had no jealousy of what had been said on the condition of the Navy; their only desire was that the active public interest should result in a more assured feeling on the part of the community that our great national and Imperial defences were being properly and duly secured.

In a letter on the British Navy, Lord Henry Lennox expressed a strong opinion that the time for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the "state of the Navy" has gone by. The time for action "has arrived, if we are not to be too late, and Parliament should vote at once the money necessary for meeting the present absolute requirements of the Navy." His lordship asserts that those who have been entrusted with the administration of our Admiralty, "have been deceived either deliberately, or through inexcusable ignorance, by those permanent officials, as well as by those in higher authority, whose duty as colleagues it should have been to speak plainly, even if their own tenure of office had been compromised thereby. From personal observation and inquiry," continues the writer, "I assert that our present type of battle-ships, many of which are but imperfect copies of foreign designs, are a cause of great anxiety to those officers who are, or may be, charged with their navigation or conduct in action. Their deficiencies of speed, dangerously partial armouring, limited coal-carrying powers, and in some of our most costly and important ironclads (instance Agamemnon, Ajax, &c.) serious want of steering-power, indicate such inefficiency in the Constructive Department of the Admiralty as to demand its thorough reorganisation. Not a reorganisation in the interests of a fortunate few, but of such a character as to concentrate upon the construction of our ships the best intellect from among the many Naval officers, civil engineers, and marine architects the country can produce, and so ensure that the money voted shall not again be wasted upon (to speak plainly) such ghastly failures and costly abortions in the shape of ships of those which have recently been added to our Navy."

Replying for the Navy, at a civic banquet held at Portsmouth, Admiral Sir G. P. Hornby remarked that he could not allow that occasion to pass without making a comment upon the materiel of the Navy. Attention had been prominently directed to its condition by a newspaper that was entirely at one in politics with the Government, and that, in his opinion, was a matter of happy augury, as it gave reason to hope that they were coming to the time when the welfare of the Navy would no longer be a party question. Then both parties would cease from deluding the country into a false security that was extremely dangerous to our safety and our prosperity. They had, therefore, good ground for anticipating before long an increase in the Navy Estimates, which would be advantageous to that service.

Sir Thomas Brassey, in a speech at Hastings on Tuesday evening, made an interesting exposition of the official view of the situation of the Navy question. It is chiefly as to our relative position with that of France that the public anxiety had been aroused. Classification was difficult, but taking as ships of the first-class those with hulls of iron, protected by a maximum thickness of armour of not less than 9 in., and with a displacement exceeding 8,500 tons, we had ready for sea 10 ships, with an aggregate displacement of 95,840 tons. In the same class the French had 3 ships, with a displacement of 28,990 tons. In 1886 the first-class would be increased to 140,310 tons by the Ajax, Agamemnon, Edinburgh, Colossus, and Collingwood. The French would be raised to 49,070 tons by the addition of the Foudroyant and Amiral Baudin. Taking the second-class ships with hulls of iron or of wood, but in the latter case launched within 16 years, we had 16, and a displacement of 79,740 tons; French, the second-class, 11 ships, with an aggregate displacement of 79,338 tons. Taking the third-class ships, with hulls of iron and wood, and protected with armour from 4½ in. to 6 in. in thickness, the British list contained 14, displacement 55,981 tons. The advantage we possessed in ships of the third-class was not due to the recent construction of such ships, but to the falling-out from the French list of a considerable number of their older wood-built ships. Lord Northbrook had adhered to the view that the necessity for great additions to the Estimates would not arise until it became evident that it was in the contemplation of the French naval administration to carry their construction of fighting ships beyond the standard of strength laid down in their latest programme of armoured building. We had at present and in the near future a considerable advantage in ironclads over our most formidable rival, even if combined with those of Italy. The combination of Germany with France could not be considered in a serious light, and with a combination of Russia with France we should, perhaps, have less to fear than in the case of France and Italy combined. It was admitted on all hands that the present Administration had made a great advance in the rate of construction. They found the Navy in a position of considerable inferiority to the French in regard to unarmoured vessels, and they had brought it to a position of superiority. Should the construction of vessels of this sort be proceeded with at the average of the last four years, England would gradually acquire a decided advantage. The Mercantile Marine was capable of doing much for its own defence against the improvised cruisers of foreign Powers. There was a large fleet on the Admiralty list of great speed, and with subdivided but watertight compartments. Modern armaments should be provided for a considerable number of vessels, and this was one of our most pressing necessities. The protection of our coaling stations was another matter of urgency.

Mr. Childers, at Nottingley, on Tuesday, said they were now imperiously told that the Navy Estimates should be raised from £11,000,000 to £1,000,000 a year, and that the fortification vote should be a good many millions more, not only for colonial, but for mercantile harbours. Of course, his mouth was altogether closed as to the probable future of Naval and Military expenditure, but concerning the general indifference shown in the past outside the two services, he rejoiced at the temperate discussion which had been commenced, and which he hoped would continue. The general outline of the Naval and Military Estimates, the amount of shipbuilding, the number of men, and aggregate cost, was settled not by the Treasury, but by the Cabinet, where the First Lord and Secretary of State were present to defend the proposals, and where the Chancellor of the Exchequer was also present to offer his views. It was on the Cabinet, and not on the Lords of the Treasury that the decision and responsibility rested.

Addressing the Hull Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday, Mr. Norwood strongly advised the keeping-up of the Navy in an efficient state, saying once our maritime supremacy came to be doubted, we should hardly ever recover from the blow. He also referred to the sittings of the Committee on the Navy, and stated that the report of the Committee would be laid before the House in a few days. He was betraying no confidence when he said they recommended the building of ironclads in private yards, reserving the repairs for the Government dockyards.

The First Lord of the Admiralty took leave of the Khedive on Tuesday, previous to his return to England.

The anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar was celebrated at Portsmouth on Tuesday by decorating the Victory, as usual, with wreaths and floral garlands. The annual meeting and treat in connection with the Royal Seamen and Marines Orphan School was held according to custom, Admiral Sir G. Hornby presiding. The members of the Royal Naval Club of 1765 gave their customary dinner at Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's, London. Admiral Sir W. K. Hall was president, the Lord Mayor being the guest. There were present:—Capt. Sir Thomas Bruce, Com. W. Baily, Capt. St. John Hornby, Capt. Horatio Nelson, Capt. H. H. Boys, Vice-Admiral Robertson Macdonald, Capt. H. Salmond, Vice-Admiral de Kantzou, Capt. J. B. Sullivan, Capt. Hugh Davis, Capt. P. R. Sharpe, Com. W. L. Morrison, Capt. R. S. Bateman, Capt. H. E. Crosier, Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney, Capt. R. Thompson, Vice-Admiral Gore Jones, Capt. E. Burstal, Capt. H. Herbert Edwards, Capt. Inglefield, Com. G. Erroll, Com. H. F. Kemble, Rear-Admiral Soady, Com. E. D. Law, Rear-Admiral Howard, Com. Richman, Admiral Robertson, Com. Robertson Shersby, Com. R. Orme Webb, Capt. Harvey Royde, Com. E. C. Royse, Capt. Richard D. King, Vice-Admiral Blomfield, Rear-Admiral Buckle, Capt. Colomb, Admiral Sir F. Nicholson, Com. H. H. Alleyne, Capt. R. Pitman, Vice-Admiral Kennedy, Vice-Admiral Borlase, Capt. E. Kelly, Vice-Admiral Boys, Capt. Sir Lambton Lorraine, Bart., Admiral Sir W. Mends, Rear-Admiral Sir F. Richards, Capt. Hon. E. S. Dawson, Rear-Admiral Hon. A. J. Ward, Rear-Admiral R. C. Mayne, Vice-Admiral R. V. Hamilton, Capt. S. H. P. Dacres, Com. E. Noel-Howe, Admiral Sir G. King, Capt. C. Johnstone, and Mr. H. J. Kelly, R.N., secretary.

Vice-Admiral Rice made his last official visit on Monday, to Chatham, in his capacity of Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by Rear-Admiral Watson. He made an inspection of the vessels building and fitting, as well as of those in the Steam Reserve.

The Admiralty have sent instructions to Rear-Admiral Lethbridge at Queenstown, ordering the withdrawal of the gunboat Banterer from the district of Tory Island. He communicated this order to the commander of the vessel on Tuesday. A correspondent residing on Tory Island says there is little further information of much interest to be told beyond that of the painful sights seen too often of human bodies floating for days and days around the island. until at length they are either thrown ashore in a frightfully mutilated state, or perhaps carried off by the winds and currents, never again to touch the shore. Divers brought by her Majesty's gunboat Banterer last week left the same day, diving being impracticable. Where the hull of the Wasp lies is the wildest spot around the northern part of the island. On her return to Westport the Banterer will resume Coastguard service. The Admiralty have instructed Rear-Admiral Lethbridge, at Queenstown, to convey their thanks to the Rev. J. O'Donnell, Catholic curate of Dunfanaghy and Tory Island, for the kindness and energy shown by him, and the very valuable services which he rendered in connection with the disaster to the gunboat Wasp. They also direct the Admiral to award £5 to each of the three lighthouse-keepers at Tory Island. The body of Sub-Lieut. Guppy has been recovered.

The captain's good-service pension of £150 a year, vacant by the retirement of Capt. J. W. East, on the 16th inst., has been awarded to Capt. W. H. Cuming, from that date.

The Admiralty have issued a Fleet circular, detailing many alterations to be made in the Queen's Regulations, relating to the Naval Discipline Act and summary punishments. It is directed that if a sentence of imprisonment cannot be duly executed, the officer awarding the sentence may direct that it shall not begin to take effect until the arrival of the prisoner at some place where he can be duly imprisoned, although he may, in the meantime, become entitled to his discharge from her Majesty's service. Referring to solitary confinement, it is ordered that offenders, although not awarded sentences involving solitary confinement, will, nevertheless, be liable to kept in separate confinement by direction of the Governor of the prison wherein they may be confined for breaches of prison discipline, if such awards are sanctioned by the rules of the prison. Reduction in class of chief petty officers, and their restoration to the class from which they have been reduced, or to any intermediate class, is dealt with in the circular.

It has been found that it was possible to fire five rounds from the two 80-ton guns in a little over three minutes at Dover. This included the swinging of the turret from the loading chamber to the required position, and vice versá, loading, &c.

London Amusements.

The International Health Exhibition being about to close, the number of provincial visitors to the metropolis has been this week greatly increased, and an unusual extension of the list of morning performances indicates the expectation of managers that many who pay a visit to South Kensington will be glad to witness some existing theatrical attractions before they return homeward. At Drury Lane, the Lyceum, the Gaiety, the Globe, the Opera Comique, the Strand, the Vaudeville, the Royalty, the Criterion, Toole's Theatre, the Savoy, the Novelty, and the Prince's Theatre, special early programmes have been arranged for this day (Saturday).

The PRINCESS'S THEATRE has been nightly crowded since the first night of the revival of "Hamlet," with Mr. W. Barrett as the representative of the Prince of Denmark, and the new effect of the scenic illustrations, and the novel rendering of the principal character in the play, have had a marked influence upon playgoers. The costumes and scenery are at variance with theatrical usages, but the "Play Scene," enacted in the open air, with torch-light effects and a moonlit sea for the background, must be regarded as a welcome innovation. Much controversy and criticism may be fairly expected, but the poetical tragedy, never to be witnessed without mental profit, will undoubtedly draw numerous audiences to the Princess's for many months to come.

The reopening of the ALHAMBRA as a music hall, under the acting management of Mr. Charles Morton, who first originated this form of entertainment at the Canterbury 33 years ago, is likely to prove fortunate for those interested in the pecuniary prosperity of the establishment in Leicester Square. It is worth noting that within the strict boundary of the City proper, not a theatre or a music hall exists, as the inhabitants of the houses, almost exclusively appropriate to commercial purposes, seek their recreation elsewhere. At the Alhambra the present programme of song and ballet is undoubtedly attractive, and it is understood that it will shortly be strengthened by additional engagements.

At the ROYALTY, Mr. M. L. Mayer's winter season of French plays has been commenced under very favourable auspices, the Prince of Wales and a distinguished audience being present on the first night, when M. Edouard Pailleron's clever satirical comedy of "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie" was played for the first time in this country. The piece was originally produced at the Comédie Française, April 25, 1881, and effectively deals with a sketch of society in the France of the Third Republic, which we should comprehensively designate as "Boredom." Mdlle. Jane May charmingly plays the little, impulsive heroine, Suzanne, and her talents are further developed in the three-act comedy of "La Cigale," in which three new songs are introduced.

A dramatic version of "Ouida's" fantastic novel, "Folle-Farine," originally published in 1871, has been arranged by Mr. W. Avondale, and successfully brought out at SADLER'S WELLS.

The OLYMPIC will be reopened this (Saturday) evening with a novel panoramic exhibition representing the "City and Temple of Jerusalem," on which the Rev. J. F. Rupert will deliver an explanatory lecture. The musical accompaniments will be performed by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Hamilton Clarke.

At the WESTMINSTER AQUARIUM, the anniversary of the Battle of Balaclava will be celebrated this (Saturday) evening by a military festival and assault-at-arms, prizes being given for feats of swordsmanship and skill in bayonet practice. Regulars, Yeomanry, and Volunteers in uniform are to be admitted at half-price. A special military concert will also be given at Covent Garden Theatre.

"Romeo and Juliet" will be produced at the LYCEUM on Saturday, November 1, and the house will be closed for five evenings next week to allow of nightly rehearsals.

An Italian opera season, under the direction of Mr. Mapleson, with an engagement of Madame Patti for 12 nights, is now included among the arrangements of DRURY LANE for the next season.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Although the interest you evince in the education of aspirants for the Army is quite natural, still parents should be grateful that you have grappled with a cruel tyranny,—viz., the University fetish of head and other masters. Your Wellington College correspondent pursues a very laudable course in defending his class, yet seems to admit that his school is intended mainly for Army candidates. Permit me, therefore, to ask him what is the practical value to such young fellows of Greek and Latin versification. I am told that a serious amount of time is so employed at Wellington—and wasted, if it be true—that few pupils compose anything readable, while many addle and bewilder their young brains so as to render them temporarily unfit for more profitable studies. Pray let me further ask your correspondent, "H. A. B.," why students on the modern side of his seminary are practically shut out (handicapped, at all events) in the examinations for scholarships,—except, perhaps, in one instance. It is notorious that the classical side is favoured—Greek, Latin, and versification being prominent subjects, mathematics being considered of secondary importance, and drawing, I apprehend, ignored. Is it not the case that only one in eleven of the scholarships Wellington College offers any chance of success to boys in the modern department? That College certainly improves rapidly, and it may be hoped that there is a cessation to the numerous changes which have taken place in the establishment generally, and that masters and boys will be permitted acquaintance with each other. Experience in teaching appears to have been considered of no value there, except in a solitary instance.—I am, &c.,

THE phrase, "the New School of Thought," suggests some thoughts old and new. The old are not the less true because they are old. The new are possibly old ones in disguise. The phrase itself has been badly born. It appeared in public with a brand on it, for the birth was the result of an illicit intercourse which one of the parents thought was private and confidential, but which the other, having no shame and no idea of honour, used to make the most of dishonour in pounds, shillings, and pence. These may be dark sayings, but they are worthy of all acceptation. So "the new school of thought" was introduced to the world. Who are its masters? Who are its teachers? Who are its pupils? What are its lessons and results? The phrase is applied to the Navy and the Army of this country, and it might be inferred from the way in which it received its baptism of fire that there was some portentous development to come on the world. On examination, however, it turned out that the "new school" was as ricketty as the parentage of the phrase from which it was derived was disreputable. The instruction given at the school is, or was, a practical illustration of the principles enunciated in the simple words, "Caw me, and I'll caw thee,"—for all the scholars. The master, however, reserved for his exclusive use certain rules, of which he insisted on the virtues as articles of faith for his monitors and head boys. The postulate of the system was that before the school was started all the world was ignorant, and that if any one went right or learned to do right, it was by accident. The great war-game was the novum organon of the military Bacon, and his theory was this,—All that professors of this game taught hitherto was "bosh!" They believed in veterans—i.e., men trained to war. Rubbish! They held that ancient traditions which evolved esprit de corps were to be cherished. Stuff and nonsense! They thought that officers of the Army had a career open to talent, and that all were entitled to their turn in certain grades to have a shy at fortune. Preposterous! They considered that it was unjust, disheartening, detrimental to the service, to shove its officers aside, and to select from a huit clos all the holders of service appointments, every time there came an opportunity for active service, the same men every time. Senile twaddle! "The New School of Thought" teaches that the best officers are to be selected for regimental commands and Staff employ, no matter what feelings, interests, traditions, rights may be in the way. Well, let it be granted that the dogma is indisputable! What are the tests by which the good and the best officers are to be tried? There is no answer, save such as may be found in a very practical lesson: that no officer who does not approve of what is taught in the new school can be good, and that under no circumstances can he be picked out for employment. It is the principle announced by Lord Grosvenor in regard to the Government distribution of information to newspapers,—"Nothing for those who do not support us more or less." There is nothing to be said against the principle of selection, if it can be carried out to the benefit of the public service; but in the best armies in the world, old and new, it is not, and it was not, adopted as it is proposed that it should be adopted now. This principle of selection is the beginning and ending of the teaching of "the New School of Thought." With improvements in tactics and discipline it has nothing to do, but in changes of names and in the arrangement of local apparatus it is much concerned. For "the New School of Thought" battalions —nay, corps d'armée are represented by names—the Professors draw figures on a board, and give them local titles, and produce an Army—Cavalry, guns, and Infantry complete. They fill the Army List with ghostly legions, and clap their hands in delight at the defilade of the unsubstantial cohorts they have summoned to represent the ancient Army with its prestige and its traditions which flourished ere the new school was thought of, and which will, we hope, be restored when this reign of crotchets is no more.

THE late First Lord of the Admiralty contributes an article of great interest to the November number of the National Review on "The Navy: its Duties and Capacity," which, both from the authority and knowledge with which it is written, and because there is an utter absence of political or party flavour about the paper, should be widely read. Mr. Smith, showing how, until quite lately, the mass of the people still held fast to the comfortable conviction that England was as strong comparatively and as safe as ever, in spite of the fact that altered conditions of maritime warfare — owing to the substitution of mechanical appliances and machinery of all kinds for manual skill and dexterity—have tended to reduce the advantages which our Fleet was supposed to possess over an enemy, goes on to point out the extent of the interests we have to guard, the dangers besetting us, and how a serious interruption to our commerce would not only affect to a most injurious extent our trade interests, but probably involve a monetary crisis at home and in our Indian and Colonial Empire. "If Government can satisfy the country that we now possess Naval resources equal to any possible hostile combination, the confidence of the public would return." He takes station after station around the world, detailing the force we have in each place, and showing how at each and all of them, almost without an exception, such force is utterly insufficient to meet the strain of war. Proceeding next to consider what we should expect from our Navy, he says:—"The first and paramount duty of the Navy would undoubtedly be the protection of our own shores and of our own ports, and it would be only right that the country should know how this is to be secured. There must be strong fleets in the Channel and in the North Sea, and, probably, a flying squadron cruising between Gibraltar, Madeira, and Cork; and some ships in reserve in our own dockyards, to take the place of any that might be disabled in an engagement, which must inevitably be attended with more complete destruction than in the old days of sailing-vessels, if, as in former times, our commanders endeavour to close with the enemy. . . . . . A powerful Fleet will also be required in the Mediterranean, with reserves at Malta, and undoubtedly some addition will have to be made to the North-American, the South-east Coast of America, the Pacific, the West Coast of Africa and Cape of Good Hope, the East Indian, the China, and the Australian Squadrons." At present, only six ironclads in the Channel Squadron are available for the protection of our coasts and harbours. Of these, only two, the Neptune and the Sultan, approach to the first-class of fighting-ships. The Achilles, Agincourt, and Minotaur carry only thin armour and light guns compared with modern ships; and, owing to defective and worn-out machinery, are incapable of high speed. "No ship-of-war," says Mr. Smith, "which is unable, by reason of worn-out boilers or machinery, to steam at full-speed, can be considered as effective for war purposes." As they are also in this condition, he considers the nine guardships at the mercantile ports and the turret-vessels Glatton, Hydra, Gorgon, Cyclops, Hecate, and Prince Albert comparatively of little use. Next, a powerful Fleet in the Mediterranean is of paramount importance, as on its shores are the arsenals of Toulon, Spezzia, Naples, Venice, and Pola, and there are not wanting signs of the possibility of a great Naval war. "What do we possess? There are now in the Mediterranean the Alexandra, Inflexible, Superb, Temeraire, Monarch, and Invincible—ironclads. The first five of these ships may be taken to be fairly equal to any five foreign men-of-war now in commission that could be brought against them; but regard must be had to foreign ships in reserve and building in framing any estimates of the strength required by this country in time of war. We have, then, seven so-called first-class battle-ships in commission in the Channel and in the Mediterranean. What ships are now ready to add to this force? The Ajax, Agamemnon, Dreadnought, and Devastation at home, and the Thunderer and Orion at Malta, and the Hotspur, Rupert, and Bellerophon of the second-class—armoured battle-ships. In addition to these, it may be hoped that the Conqueror, the Colossus, and the Edinburgh may be ready for sea within a year from the present time; but as against this reinforcement, there must be taken the extreme probability that some of the ships now in commission will require a thorough repair during the coming year, if they are to continue efficient. The boilers of the Alexandra were put on board in 1875, those of the Temeraire in 1876, and those ships have been in active employment for nearly eight years. It is inevitable that some of these ships now in commission will require heavy repair, which will remove them for many months from the list of effective men-of-war." Further, he observes that "in time of war fast cruisers, despatch-vessels, and torpedo-ships will be necessary," drawing attention to the fact that, with the exception of the Boadicea and the Euryalus, we have no unarmoured fast men-of-war in commission that can steam over twelve knots. He believes that we should have at least some ten or twelve fast cruisers available at the outbreak of a war, as additions to the squadrons in foreign waters. Help from our Commercial Navy he considers it futile to rely upon, although the very fast mercantile steamers might be made of use. "The conclusion that forces itself on the minds of those who study the subject is that, with the exception of some unarmoured cruisers not yet completed, we have in ships built and building no more than a sufficient provision for the reliefs required in time of peace; that there is no reserve to meet the first demands and the losses occasioned by a state of war; and that, as regards the lighter and more modern instruments of warfare—the sea-going torpedo-ship—we are lamentably deficient." Then, dealing with the necessity of being ready at all times for war, he significantly observes "that the development of Naval force abroad has been more persistent and has been carried out with greater tenacity and determination during the last four or five years than at any other time since the great war;" and he concludes:—"In 1872, the present Civil Lord of the Admiralty, Sir Thomas Brassey, wrote:—'The improvement of our Navy may be to some amongst us a repugnant task, because associated in their contemplation with all the horrors of war. But the English patriot will desire to maintain the Naval supremacy of his country as the only reliable guarantee in anxious and threatening times for the integrity of his native land, and as an instrument in the hands of generous and far-seeing statesmen for the preservation of peace and the progress of civilisation.' These words are applicable to the present day. It is the universal desire for peace which makes sensible people demand that the Naval supremacy of this country shall be incontestable. 'The strong man armed keepeth his goods in peace.'"

THE Royal Warrant for the organisation of the "Medical Staff" and "Medical Staff Corps," just issued in Army Circulars, takes effect from August 1 last. The terms "Army Medical Department" and "Army Hospital Corps" disappear from the Army List. Medical officers and quartermasters for the future belong to the "Medical Staff," and the men to the "Medical Staff Corps." Why the officers and men should bear different designations we are at a loss to imagine. As well call the Royal Artillery officers "Royal Artillery," and the men "Royal Artillery gunners and drivers." "Medical Staff" is a most unmeaning term. "Medical Staff"—of what? The Army? If so, why not call it by that name? There was, we believe, some idea that if the officers were given the designation, there would have been some trouble about Staff allowances; but surely this point might have been made clear in the Royal Warrant, without the clumsy alternative of a double title. Beyond the change in designation and some rules regarding the rates of pay to be drawn by the non-commissioned officers and men of the corps, there is little to call for remark in this new Warrant. There is an apparent contradiction in the paragraph regarding command:—"307 (a). The officers of the Medical Staff shall be the officers of, and shall command, the Medical Staff Corps, as well as all patients in Military hospitals, and such officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, as may be attached for duty to the Medical Staff Corps; but they shall not hold any military command outside the corps." Now, what is the meaning of this regulation? We believe the intention is that officers and men detached from their corps —e.g., on active service—for duty with the Medical Staff Corps will fall under the command of the senior medical officer; but that so long as the corps is present, the officer in medical charge will remit all cases requiring punishment to the regimental commanding officer. If this be the true reading of the Warrant, the sooner it is made clear the better, otherwise there is certain to be misunderstanding on a subject the regulations regarding which can manifestly be read in different ways.

WHATEVER proposals may be made for strengthening the British Navy, and rendering our first line of defence equal to the requirements of the country, it is essential that the creation of a Torpedo Fleet should have a prominent place in any scheme to be considered. In no department of the Navy are we so far behind the rest of Europe as in the fleet of torpedo-boats for the defence of our Home coasts and Naval stations abroad. This serious deficiency will doubtless be considered, now that the relative strength of the British Navy is occupying attention, in consequence of the national demand for adequate defence. During the recent Admiralty inspection, the importance of pushing forward the construction of torpedo-vessels of various classes was referred to by Sir Thomas Brassey, who did not hesitate to admit that "a considerable number were necessary for the defence of our Dockyards, our Naval ports, and our coaling-stations." "Torpedo-vessels," added the Civil Lord, "are also required of a larger type, to act in combination with our sea-going squadrons." The Admiralty have, we understand, already commenced to deal practically with the deficiency to which we refer; and arrangements are being made to allay national anxiety relative to coast defences by the cheapest and most effective means. The torpedo flotilla will, it is anticipated, be considerably augmented by sea-going torpedo-cruisers and torpedo-boats, without further unnecessary delay. While increased attention to the growing importance of torpedo-warfare must be egarded as a hopeful sign, it is necessary to consider the position in which the country is placed by the lamentable defect in our Naval defence which has been officially recognised. It has been pointed out that, "According to official admissions made in the House of Commons, England has not one first-class 'sea-going' torpedo-boat ready for action." At the end of the year we shall have twenty-four first-class and fifty-three second-class torpedo-boats, and of this number two of each class are at Hong Kong and Malta, two of the first-class are at Gibraltar, leaving available for all purposes sixteen first-class and forty-nine second-class torpedo-boats at home. The activity displayed by foreign Governments in constructing torpedo fleets is significant and remarkable. While the first Naval Power has neglected to provide herself with any considerable number of the most economical and most effective means of defence, other nations are already fairly well provided. The strength of rival Powers has been brought to the notice of the Legislature, and the statement made on the subject has never been contradicted. At the end of the year, France will have fifty first-class and thirty-two second-class torpedo-boats; Italy, forty-three first and twenty second; Denmark, five first and five second; Holland, fifteen first; Austria, four first and ten second; Russia, ten first and ninety second; Greece has twenty of both classes, while Germany has recently ordered seventy, in addition to eight first and three second which she already possesses. We find that, in the year ending next March, the expenditure of Great Britain on torpedoes and torpedo fittings has been £230,000, while France is expending in the present year about £1,000 more than England, and Germany has determined to set apart for torpedoes the large sum of £840,000. The attention of the Government should be directed to the fact that the Budget just presented to the Austrian Delegation will contain a proposal for the building or purchase of sixty-four torpedo-boats in addition to those already possessed by Austria. Sufficient evidence has been given, and much more could be adduced, that foreign nations are keenly alive to the necessity of possessing a large and powerful fleet of torpedo-boats. The question of cost will crop up, as a matter of course; but the most rigid economist may find some consolation in the assurance that a hundred first-class torpedo-boats of the latest type could be built for the cost of two ironclads, and would be a match for many such leviathans. At the same outlay, 150 second-class boats could be sent into action. The necessary outlay will have to be provided for constructing both sea-going and harbour torpedo-boats; and no reasonable amount will be grudged by the nation, especially when it is considered that 50,000 miles of waterways, with their £1,000,000,000 worth of trade scattered all over the world, have to be protected, irrespective of what we have to defend at home, the value of which is altogether beyond calculation. Deducting the second-class torpedo-boats required for the armament of the ironclads and the six first-class boats divided between Hong Kong, Malta, and Gibraltar, there remain only "thirteen" available in this country; while it is firmly maintained that 250 boats are necessary for Home defence, and at least 100 for the protection of our stations abroad. A mosquito fleet for the adequate defence of the Empire would cost "a few millions of money," and the expenditure would not be a large premium of assurance when "the masses of maritime wealth at the mercy of the enemy's cruisers" is reckoned. The cargoes and hulls of our mercantile marine are, it has been estimated, worth, at any given time, a thousand millions sterling. To protect these our means of defence is wretchedly inadequate. Increased expenditure for the Navy entails a struggle between the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Treasury; but if the former be backed by public opinion, strongly and generally expressed, the requisite funds must necessarily be forthcoming. Not more than two harbours in the United Kingdom are adequately protected, and some of the most important commercial ports absolutely lack a single torpedo-boat; yet Germany proposes to provide forty-six torpedo-boats for the defence of Kiel, and a similar number for Wilhelmshaven. There can be no question that the class of "sea-going" torpedo-cruisers should be largely increased at once. The Admiralty have authorised the construction by contract of a new torpedo-cruiser, the Scout, an improved Polyphemus; and a promise has been given that should the new torpedo-ship prove a success, scouts will be attached to the squadrons in considerable numbers. Torpedo depôt vessels, similar to the Hecla, are urgently needed to supply the fleet with torpedo craft; these especially-designed ships should be fitted to carry twelve first-class, or twenty-four second-class torpedo-boats available for service at any threatened point on a station. The depôt vessel could proceed wherever it was necessary, and this arrangement would entirely change the present system of allotting a totally insufficient number of torpedo-boats at given places abroad. In St. Helena, the Cape, and the Mauritius; in Cyprus, Aden, and Bombay; in the Straits Settlements and Hong Kong; on the Hooghly and the Irawaddy, there is not a single torpedo-boat. The seaports of our Eastern possessions, as we have pointed out, are at the mercy of a hostile Fleet. Bombay and Calcutta, Rangoon and Singapore, Kurrachee and Hong Kong should be rendered unapproachable. It may be argued that, in the event of a Naval war, torpedo-boats could be turned out with great rapidity, but trained men are necessary to handle them, and further delay is unwarrantable. Orders have been given, we understand, to private firms for the construction of several large torpedo-boats of types supplied to the Australian, Danish, and Russian Governments, and there are evidences that an adequate torpedo fleet will be provided for the defence of home ports and British possessions abroad.

The First Lord of the Admiralty arrived at Malta on board the Iris on Tuesday. After visiting the Governor at the Palace, Lord Northbrook inspected the Government dockyards and the site for the new dock, lunched with Admiral Graham, and embarked on board the Iris, which left for Marseilles.

Vice-Admiral Rice, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, transferred his flag on Tuesday from the fore to the mainmast of H.M.S. Duncan, on being promoted to the rank of full Admiral. The Duncan notified the event by firing a salute of seventeen guns. The vacancy on the list of Vice-Admirals will be filled by the promotion of Rear-Admiral Algernon Lyons, late Commander-in-Chief on the Pacific station, and Captain Charles Rowley will be advanced to the rank of Rear-Admiral. Vice-Admiral Corbett, C.B., the newly appointed Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, arrived at Admiralty House, Sheerness, on Thursday, and hoisted his flag on the Hydra, tender to the Duncan. He commenced his official duties yesterday, when Admiral Rice hauled down his flag. The retirement of the last-named gallant officer promotes Vice-Admiral A. Phillimore to the rank of Admiral, Rear-Admiral Brandreth, Controller of the Navy, to Vice-Admiral. This latter vacancy will place a good-service pension of £150 per annum at the disposal of the First Lord of the Admiralty.

The Engineer of this week, in a long article criticising Sir Edward Reed's four-column letter to the Times, finds fault with the method in which those who have the misfortune to differ from him are dealt with therein, and after giving a short résumé of his views, it proceeds, with more or less success, to smash and pulverise them all. Objecting to the method of comparison adopted—i.e., displacement tonnage—and combatting Sir Edward's opinions of the Esmeralda, the article concludes by endeavouring to make him responsible for the assertion that in the Mercantile Marine we have a large number of vessels which can be used for fighting purposes in war time,—a statement which, we expect, Sir Edward will repudiate with his accustomed vigour.

Although we consider that the workmen at our naval ports should be first thought of in the event of the much-needed increase of expenditure in ship-building being made, there is a great deal to be said in favour of Mr. Gourley's appeal to Mr. Gladstone in the House last Monday night, that some of the orders should be given to the private firms on the Northern rivers. Few can doubt that by so doing hundreds of our fellow creatures would be saved from starvation, and if that is too sentimental a reason to affect our economists, the fact that never could they get the work done so cheaply and advantageously as at the present moment should certainly carry some weight. It is probable, however, that until the report of the Committee, with regard to the building of ships in dockyards or in private establishments, which is just now receiving the consideration of the Admiralty, has been published, no steps will be taken in this direction; but from the admission made by Mr. Norwood at Hull the other day, we are given to understand that a favourable result may be expected.

Several important questions relating to Naval subjects were asked in the House of Commons last Thursday, and it is evident that recent disclosures and criticisms have caused much more attention to be paid to service matters than might have been anticipated at the commencement of a special Session, had it not been for the agitation that has been produced. Mr. Gourley asked the Civil Lord of the Admiralty how many ocean cruisers were in commission, and required minute particulars relating to those vessels; also how many sea-going torpedo craft were in commission, how many were building, and whether any were sufficiently large and powerful for ocean fighting; and further, if it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to appoint a Royal Commission or Select Committee to inquire into the condition of the Navy. Sir Thomas Brassey appealed to Mr. Gourley not to press for the information at present, adding that the promised statement of the Prime Minister on the condition of the Navy would embrace a more or less general reference to all the important points raised in this question. In reply to Sir W. Barttelot, who made enquiries relative to the China Sea Squadron, Sir T. Brassey said he was not prepared to state what were the intentions of the Government with regard to strengthening our squadron in the China seas. The Agamemnon has been ordered to China. This answer not being regarded as satisfactory, an appeal was ineffectually made to the Prime Minister and to the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, the information asked for not being forthcoming. Mr. Gorst inquired whether there was any truth in the published statement that the "Agamemnon could not steer, and must undergo extensive alterations before going to sea?" Sir T. Brassey disposed of this question by requiring notice to be given. In reply to Mr. W. H. Smith, the Civil Lord explained that there had been a necessary modification of the mechanism of the 43-ton gun. The loading arrangements for the Conqueror were nearly finished, and those for the Colossus were expected from the manufacturers in two months. The guns and gear would, it was anticipated, be ready for the Conqueror within one month of delivery of the breech mechanism, and for the Colossus within two months of delivery of all work ordered from the manufacturers. Should these anticipations be fulfilled, the armament for the Conqueror should be ready in four months, and for the Colossus in five months from the present time.

The Italian Dockyards are still in full activity, and it is expected that in the course of a few months several new heavily-armoured vessels-of-war will be ready for service. The ironclad Francesco Morosini, now on the stocks at Venice, will be launched before the end of the year, while the Andrea Doria will take the water during the first three months of 1885. In the spring, too, the Italia will be added to the fleet. The Lepanto is being rapidly proceeded with, but will not be finished for another couple of years. Each of these great ironclads—with the exception, of course, of the Lepanto—will cost something over £900,000. The Italian Minister of Marine hopes presently to be able to reduce the time required for the armaments of his ironclads to thirty months each.

Captain James E. Erskine, Commodore on the Australian station, has informed the Admiralty that he arranged to leave Brisbane last Monday for New Guinea.

The Admiralty, having granted an addition of £8,000 to the vote for wages for Portsmouth Dockyard, the discharge of employés has been stopped.

An appointment of Naval Aide-de-Camp to her Majesty has been placed at the disposal of the Lords of the Admiralty by the promotion of Captain Rowley to the rank of Rear-Admiral.

Commander Hammill, of the Monarch, who took part with the Naval Brigade in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, and has rendered valuable service on special duty in connection with the Nile Expedition, has been appointed to the Alexandra, flagship of Admiral Lord John Hay, commanding the Mediterranean Squadron, his place in her Majesty's ship Monarch being taken by Commander C. S. Donner.

The French Ambassador, M. Waddington, has had a lengthy interview with Lord Granville at the Foreign Office. The subject of discussion, it is understood, was the recent boarding of British vessels in the China seas by French war-ships, which matter has been the subject of communication between the Governments of England and France.

Sir John Hay will, if opportunity offers in the course of the present Session, call attention to the insufficient number of the ships of the Royal Navy for national defence, and the inadequacy of the shipbuilding programme to meet that deficiency.

Captain Francis M. Prattent, now serving as Commodore at Jamaica, has been awarded the Good-Service Pension of £150 a year from October 30, vacated by the promotion of Captain Richard Wells to Flag rank on that day.

The vacancy at the Admiralty, consequent upon the removal of Mr. Campbell-Bannerman to the Irish Office, will not, we understand, be filled until Lord Northbrook returns. It is reported, however, that Sir Thomas Brassey will become Secretary to the Admiralty; and that Mr. Duff, now Secretary to the Lords of the Treasury, will succeed Sir T. Brassey as Civil Lord of the Admiralty. Mr. Bannerman has been re-elected for the Stirling Burghs without opposition.

Commander J. E. Blaxland, who was specially promoted for his services in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, when he served in the Naval Brigade, has been selected by the Lords of the Admiralty for service in H.M.S. Belleisle on Coastguard duties, Ireland.

Since the duty of replying to questions in the House of Commons has devolved upon Sir Thomas Brassey, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, the inquiries on subjects connected with the Navy have been somewhat numerous. Referring to the Committee presided over by Lord Ravensworth on the building of ships in dockyards or private establishments, Sir H. Drummond Wolff asked on Monday whether any steps had been taken in the matter, and whether he could state what course the Government intended to pursue? Sir Thomas Brassey replied that the report on the building and repair of her Majesty's ships would be in the hands of Members immediately. A Departmental Committee was appointed to advise as to the practical steps to be taken, and their report had only been received that day. It would require careful consideration, and he could only say in the meanwhile, on behalf of the Admiralty, that they were grateful to Lord Ravensworth and his colleagues for their labours and suggestions.

In reply to a question as to the pay and rations of seamen of the Royal Navy, Sir Thomas Brassey said additions of pay had been from time to time granted, and the pay of petty officers was increased last year. No further changes were at present proposed. The rations were excellent in quality and sufficient in quantity. Relative to the promulgation of "The New Scheme for the Dockyards," the Civil Lord of the Admiralty informed the junior Member for Portsmouth that a scheme for the reorganisation of the constructive staff had recently been made public, and no other change was at present contemplated.

Rear-Admiral Tryon, who will leave England early in December to take over the command of the Australian station, will be accompanied by Captain Atwell Peregrine W. Lake, Flag-Captain of the Nelson. Captain Lake is the son of the late Colonel Sir H. A. Lake, K.C.B., who will be remembered in connection with the memorable defence of Kars. Rear-Admiral Tryon has appointed Lieutenant William C. Pakenham, at present serving in the Tenedos on the North America and West Indies station, to be his Flag Lieutenant; and Mr. Charles J. Pawsey, Paymaster, to be his Secretary.

The Secretary to the Treasury informed Mr. M'Coan, in reply to a question in the House of Commons on Monday, that the report on "Our Colonial Defences" was strictly confidential, and could not be laid on the table of the House. The Report of the Royal Commission on the Defence of British Possessions and Commerce Abroad was presented in July, 1882; on this document the Inspector of Fortifications based his Memorandum, which is to be submitted to Parliament. It must be obvious that the reasons for not publishing the Report referred to by Mr. M'Coan are sufficiently cogent to justify the refusal.

It was recently announced that Captain Lang, R.N., who has been acting as Chief Organiser and Vice-Admiral of the Chinese Navy, had relinquished that position. The retirement of Captain Lang will, we understand, be only of a temporary character, the Chinese Government being desirous of retaining his services after the conclusion of the present complications between China and France.

The command of the Lion, training-ship at Devonport, has just become vacant on the expiration of Commander M'Kechnie's term of appointment. Commander Hammick, who succeeds, served with distinction with the Naval Brigade in the New Zealand War of 1864, being specially mentioned in despatches.

The present position of Warrant officers of the Navy having been brought to the notice of the House of Commons, Sir Thomas Brassey, in reply to the junior Member for Portsmouth, said considerable concessions had been made of late in the case of those officers. All Warrant officers serving in harbour ships with appointments from the Admiralty were now granted pay at seagoing instead of harbour rates. Numerous additional Greenwich pensions had been provided. The grant of compassionate allowances to the children of Warrant officers whose deaths are attributable to the service was under consideration.

Referring to the Naval Artillery Volunteers, Sir Thomas Brassey, in answer to a question put by Mr. Macliver in the House of Commons, said that the decision with reference to applications for the enrolment of Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers had been postponed until a general scheme of defence had been matured, based upon the report of the Committee on the Defence of the Commercial Harbours. The Admiralty were not at present prepared to entertain the question of increasing the force.

The Portsdown Hill fortifications bounding Portsmouth on the north have not yet been armed, but directions have been given that Forts Southwick, Nelson, and Widley are to be proceeded with, a local contractor's firm having been appointed to commence the construction of the gun portions. It has been stated that "the delay which has taken place in mounting the armament of the forts has proved exceedingly fortunate, as the question of muzzle-loaders versus breech-loaders has been determined in the meantime, and guns of the newest type will now be provided. Similar delay in the arming of the Spithead forts would have been the means of saving much money and misplaced ingenuity in devising a means of reversing the old 38-ton guns and loading them in cramped casemates." The forts on the crest of Portsdown Hill have been constructed so long, that it is satisfactory to know that orders have been given that their armaments are to be completed without further unnecessary delay. Forts without guns are obviously useless, and the Portsdown Hill fortifications, so energetically demanded some years ago for the protection of the arsenal and defence of Portsmouth, cost an immense amount of capital and labour.

Admiral Richards, commenting in Friday's Times on the letter Sir Edward Reed lately wrote to that newspaper, considers that it scarcely required four columns of the "Thunderer" either to convince the Government that we must keep up and strengthen our ironclad fleet, or to refute the argument, that so rapid are the changes in guns and armour, we must stand still until perfection is attained. While giving Sir Edward credit for the initiation of the first real ironclad fighting-ship, and admitting him to be a competent authority, he ridicules the idea that six 20-knot armoured cruisers would be sufficient to sweep the seas of possible Alabamas and Esmeraldas, and suggests sixty as nearer the mark; but he would have them only partially protected, with full sail-power and heavy guns. He is more hopeful of the general situation, as he thinks the leading men of both parties seem inclined to "rise above the technicalities which tend to hide the true issues from the nation."

Anticipating the needs of the four powerful ironclads now in course of construction in the Black Sea ports, the Russians are making rapid progress with their new docks at Sebastopol. At present the only accommodation there is an iron floating-dock, such as we have at Bermuda, but the new docks are to be built of granite, on the site of those destroyed by the Allied Forces in 1855. Upwards of 3,000 men are said to be at work upon the one in hand, the dimensions of which when finished will be 599 feet long, 123 feet broad, and 27 feet deep, amply large enough to dock the heaviest vessels in those waters. The foundations of the other docks are also completed, and it is intended that both ships and docks shall be finished in the early part of 1886

Captain C. E. P. Jervis, 106th Durham Light Infantry, has been appointed an Instructor in Tactics, Military Administration, and Law, at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst.

The following instructions have been issued for the guidance of officers carrying out reconnaissances in the various military districts during the winter months:—1. The road reports are to be done on Army Form K 1305, in strict accordance with the regulations and example contained in the official "Text-book of Military Topography." 2. The lateral communications, when of sufficient importance, are to be reported on separately, and the report marked "Lateral Communications." 3. River reports are to be done on forms drawn up in accordance with the "Text-book," which will be provided. 4. As much of the country on either side as is visible from the road itself should be sketched (generally about half a mile). The position of commanding heights within cannon-range of the road should be designated. Contours to be shown at 30 ft. vertical interval. 5. Positions of importance to be reported upon separately,—scale 6 in. to a mile, contours 20 ft. Forms of "reports on positions" will be provided. 6. The work may be facilitated in some cases by enlarging the 1-in. map to the required scale, and identifying the sketch so enlarged with the ground. Further detail can then be filled in, and the work more rapidly proceeded with. The services of the non-commissioned officers can be utilised in this, as it affords good practice in reading and amending maps. Sketches of positions especially may be so dealt with, the main features being mapped out and the detail filled in on the ground. 7. Sketches should be neat and distinct, but time need not be spent on mere elaboration. The reports should be carefully and concisely drawn up, embodying all information of military value.

A Ceylon judge has just laid down that an officer in military employ is free from arrest in a civil case. It would be a good thing to know if this is really the law.

The appointment of Captain Lord William Beresford, 9th Lancers, to be Military Secretary to the new Viceroy, has given universal satisfaction in India. Lord William Beresford has always devoted himself to his social duties, and avoided some of the pitfalls his predecessors had fallen into; and by his untiring efforts he has succeeded in making himself very popular in Indian society.

The renumbering of the regiments of the Native Army, or rather the alteration in their nomenclature, is being dealt with very delicately. It is expected that, as far as possible, the wishes of officers and men of the different regiments will be respected.

In last Tuesday's Gazette we observe the promotion of Major and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel A. M. Taylor, 19th Hussars, to a substantive Lieutenant-Colonelcy in his regiment. This officer has been exceptionally fortunate in his career, being at the present time, at the age of 34, probably the youngest and most certainly the Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel of the shortest service in the whole Army. He has passed through every grade of his regiment from Sub-Lieutenant to Lieutenant-Colonel in less than 13 years, during which time he was for nearly two years Regimental Adjutant. He was present with his regiment in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, and for his services in that campaign he received the brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He remained in Egypt until quite lately doing duty with General Wood's Egyptian Army; but he has now rejoined the 19th Hussars, who are on their way to the front with the Expedition up the Nile.

The new regulations for the Army Pay Department are beginning to exercise a marked influence in filling up the vacancies which have for so long been accumulating in the Department. The arrangement by which an officer can join the Department for five years without prejudice to his position in his regiment appears to be very popular with all ranks, and consequently applications have been received in considerable numbers.

The question of sending reinforcements to Tonquin has been greatly perplexing the French Government, which will probably wait for the decision of Parliament before incurring any further expenditure. We see, however, that the Foreign Legion is to be increased, as also the Algerian Rifles. Recently we said that any reinforcements sent out to Tonquin to meet the requirements of the moment would probably be drawn from Africa, and this is the case. Some African troops will be sent to reinforce General Brière de l'Isle, and these will be replaced by the corps whose formation is proposed. We also last week expressed astonishment that, instead of creating a brand-new colonial army, the French authorities did not turn their attention to augmenting the Marine Infantry. We believe that this course will be adopted. The Marine Infantry, in fact, forms a colonial force. In military circles it is strongly urged that the French Government should send out Cavalry to Tonquin to pursue the enemy, and there is some talk of despatching half a squadron of Chasseurs d'Afrique. Out of the 50 horses sent out some months ago only one remains. Altogether, the conduct of the campaign in Tonquin is far from giving satisfaction, and it is painfully evident that the French troops are not in sufficient numbers to do what is expected of them. It is said that the French Government has given up the idea of ordering any more offensive movements, and that it will simply try and hold what it has got. Its opinion is that General Brière de l'Isle has men enough to hold the Delta. In the meantime there is much talk of an arrangement between France and China, and this solution is devoutly to be wished for.

Better late than never! It is stated that Forts Southwick, Nelson, and Widley, on Portsdown Hill, are to be at once armed with guns of the newest type.

A correspondent who certainly ought to know writes:—"Englishmen have always been taught to think that Great Britain is ranked amongst the 'Great Powers,' but it would appear that the feeling is no longer supported by facts; at least, such would seem to be the case if the following be true, which I hear on good authority:—It is said that Sir F. P. Haines, and those who accompanied him to the German Manœuvres, were bracketed 'for orders' with the representatives of Roumania and Switzerland! This seems so absolutely improbable that I give it you with hesitation, but my authority is, I again repeat, 'good.' Straws are said to show which way the wind blows, and the intentional insult given by Germany to this country would seem to show that England's 'greatness' is no longer recognised, and that the last shreds of it will be wrested from her on the first opportunity. That this may occur within a measurable space of time seems quite possible, and it is quite certain that the only part of England's armour vulnerable to attack by Germany is her own coast-line. Surely Sir Paul should contradict this story, or report it officially; and if it be true, he should be the last 'representative' until full apology is made."

The Revue Scientifique and the Revue d'Artillerie have been examining the part played by mountain-guns in Tonquin. We perceive that the War Minister for this campaign lent the Minister of Marine, who has the direction of the expedition, two mountain batteries, —12 guns, with 600 rounds each. The gunners were also furnished by the War Minister, and for a fortnight previous to embarkation were exercised at working the guns and loading the mules, with which animals they were unacquainted. They were also taught to draw the pieces themselves, in consequence of the difficulties which would probably be encountered in Tonquin. There was a good deal of trouble in getting the guns up the river in junks, and more trouble still in lugging them up to the citadel of Hai-Dzuong, which stands at 1,500 mètres from the water's-edge. The gunners had to effect this transport, as the mules had not arrived. The march to Bac-Ninh was exceedingly difficult, but, with the aid of coolies, the mountain guns did better than the naval guns, drawn by horses. The range of these pieces was so superior to those of the enemy, that they drove the Celestials away. Some of the men attached to the guns died of excessive fatigue, but there were no killed or wounded. In the attack on the fort of Do-Son Battery 12 fired 110 rounds of shrapnel, and the shells bursting in the air, entirely upset the Chinese troops. In the battery in question, everyone is said to have worked with zeal and devotion; and although some of the marches were 80 kilomètres, along bad roads, with water sometimes coming nearly up to the knee, nothing was left behind. According to the Revue d'Artillerie, the artillery had no opportunity of reaping much glory; but it did its duty, and deserves credit. On its side L'Armée Française makes some interesting remarks with regard to the difficulty of men and mules acting together. When it comes to going up-hill the mule quickens his pace, and the steeper the ascent the faster he goes; hence the men trying to keep up with him get blown. It is quite the reverse when it comes to going down hill. The steeper the descent, the more the man is propelled on, while the mule picks his way, as if in fear, and descends carefully and leisurely. L'Armée Française opines that if the full value is to be got out of mountain batteries where mules are employed, men and animals must be trained to work together.

The qualifications for admission to the nursing service of the Army, with full particulars as to pay and pension, have been published in leaflet form for issue to the public. There will be three recognised grades, namely, lady superintendents, with salaries of £150 a year, reaching by annual increments to £200 a year; acting superintendents, and nursing sisters. The latter get £30 a year, rising to £50 a year, and the former the same scale of wages, but £20 a year additional as charge pay. All receive free quarters, board and washing, and servant allowance; and the pensions, which are obtainable at 60 years of age, are equivalent to 30 per cent. of the wages after ten years' service, with an additional 2 per cent. for each additional year. Special pensions or gratuities will be given to those disabled in the service before acquiring the right to retire.

EXPENSES ON BOARD TROOPSHIPS.

"Twenty-two" writes:—"As far as my experience goes, I have always found travelling in a hired transport far preferable to travelling in a troopship. In the former you expect better feeding as well as better accommodation; but I must say, as far as the s.s. Hankow is concerned, I had far rather be in a trooper. The food, in my opinion, was not as good as that supplied in a troopship; and as for the accommodation, two officers were packed into a cabin not large enough to hold one. Apart from this, I would inquire, why, if Government chooses to send officers by a hired transport, they should be required to pay for their wines and liquor so much more than if they had been sent by troopship? I enclose my weekly bill for liquor for your inspection, by which you will see the high prices charged in comparison to troopship prices. Surely officers should not be made to suffer for the convenience of Government, and hired transports should be obliged to sell their wines, &c., at the same price as troopships do?"

The Morning Post says:—"No further appointments of officers will be made at the War Office for service with the Egyptian Army, pending the ultimate decision respecting the future of that force."

In reply to Gen. Alexander, the Civil Lord of the Admiralty stated, in the House of Commons on Thursday, that no promise had been made as to the officers and men of the Marines at Suakim being relieved every three months; but the detachment was relieved from the force at Suez as often as the exigencies of the service would permit.

The evidence taken before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on harbour accommodation was issued on Saturday as a Blue-book.

Col. Lorne Campbell has returned to Cairo from leave of absence, and resumed his duties as Assistant Military Secretary.

It is rumoured that the Ramleh Barracks have been condemned and that it is proposed to quarter the reserves of the Alexandria garrison at Rosetta, where excellent barrack accommodation exists.

Orders have been received at Sheerness directing the unarmoured composite corvette Pylades to be launched from the building-slip at Sheerness Dockyard on Wednesday next. The Pylades is sister-ship to the Caroline, and has been about 18 months in course of construction.

The Danish gunboat Fylia, with Prince Waldemar on board, left Dover in charge of a Channel pilot on Thursday, the Prince having arrived the previous evening from Marlborough House, where he had been on a visit to the Princess of Wales.

A district court-martial, held at Plymouth, has sentenced Pte. W. Claverty, Royal Marines, to 56 days' imprisonment (14 days remitted), for disobedience of orders given personally to him by his commanding officer.

The Queen has forwarded through Gen. Sir Henry Ponsonby, K.C.B., her annual subscription of £50 to the Army and Navy Pensioners' Employment Society, of which her Majesty is patroness.

On Saturday evening a number of officers who had, more or less, participated in the engagement at Balaclava—nearly all of them "Heavies"—celebrated the anniversary by dining at Willis's Rooms. Gen. Sir E. C. Hodge presided, supported by Gens. the Earl of Lucan, Forrest, Shute, Clarke, and Goodman, Surg.-Gen. Mouat, Dy.-I.-Gen. Anderson, Cols. Simpson, Mussenden, Davies, Ferguson, and Prendergast; Majors Wilkin, M'Creagh, and Coney; Capts. Fisher, Rowe, Teevan, Webb, Clutterbuck, and Hunt. Non-commissioned officers and men met at a dinner in the Royal Aquarium; Serjt.-Major Smith, 11th Hussars, in the chair.

EXPERIMENTS AGAINST ARMOUR-PLATES.

Some interesting experiments against armour were recently made at the Polygon of Muggiano by the Royal Italian Marine. The experiments were ordered by the Minister of Marine to find out precisely the resistance of the armoured redoubts of the Italia and Lepanto, clad with Schneider steel or compound (Sheffield) plates, and above all to ascertain the effective power of the new Armstrong 43-in. breech-loading gun with forged and tempered steel projectiles. For this purpose there had been erected three targets representing the redoubt of the Italia. The plates were placed against a backing of teak wood 520 millimètres thick. One was forged Schneider steel from the works at Creusot, and two of the compound type from Cammell and Brown's works at Sheffield. Hitherto chilled cast-iron or steel-cast projectiles have been used, with a velocity not exceeding 470 mètres at impact. In the Italian experiment not only were forged steel Krupp projectiles used, which are supposed to be the best at present, but they were also fired with a velocity of 580 mètres—i.e., with 100 mètres more velocity at the point of impact than in the previous tests. The introduction of these two new factors in the firing was, as has been foreseen, of such a nature as to modify the results obtained. The practical results of the trials are that the compound armour showed more resistance to penetration than the steel plates, although they were more broken, as anticipated, but no portions were stripped from the target. As compound plates 48 centimètres thick under such circumstances have shown such resistance to penetration at close range and normal fire of the present most powerful gun, it is believed that when placed on a ship, especially at an angle, they will afford perfect security against the attack of the same gun when fired under the circumstances which are likely to exist in actual warfare. They have also the advantage of resisting the projectiles from small guns better than the steel plates.

The Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, Sir W. Houston Stewart, struck his flag on board the Royal Adelaide on Tuesday afternoon, and proceeded on short leave of absence. Rear-Admiral C. T. Curme shifted his flag from the Indus to the Royal Adelaide during the Commander-in-Chief's absence.

A farewell dinner was given on Saturday night last by Com. Coddington and the officers of the flagship Duke of Wellington to Capt. Rowley, on his promotion to flag rank, and the occasion served also as a welcome to Capt. Colomb, on assuming the command of the ship. All the officers were present, as well as Com. Browne, of the Fire Queen, and Com. Dodds, of the Medina, both tenders to the flagship. Beyond the loyal toasts there was only one other, "The new Admiral and the in-coming Captain," in proposing which Com. Coddington made a few judicious observations on the comfortable character of the ship when under the command of Capt. Rowley, and expressing his conviction that the same harmony would prevail under Capt. Colomb. Both officers suitably responded.

Prince George of Wales will, Truth asserts, go to Heidelberg when he leaves Greenwich, and he will stay there two or three months with Professor Ihne, under whose charge Prince Edward was placed last summer.

It is stated that Austria, without waiting for the example of England, has added close upon 15 per cent. to her Naval Budget this year. The Emperor of Austria has laid great stress upon the necessity of applying modern means of defence to give more efficient protection to the coasts.

Major Colomb, R.M.A., as a very old student and a contributor to the literature of Imperial defence for nearly 20 years, writing to a contemporary, entreats such eminent authorities on technical portions of the general question as Admiral of the Fleet Sir Thomas Symonds and Sir E. Reed not to draw off public attention from the steadfast contemplation of the two main questions of the hour—i.e., numerical naval deficiency and unprotected coal depôts. The writer ventures to say it is because naval experts have so confused the mind of England by elaborate and seemingly endless arguments and wrangles over details of naval architecture, which the public cannot fully comprehend, that popular apathy has supplanted popular vigilance as to the most ordinary naval precautions, with the obvious result,—national peril.

Qrmr. Francis Butler, R.M.L.I., has been awarded the Greenwich Hospital pension of £50 per annum, vacant by the death of Capt. Thomas Cooper, R.M.L.I., on July 2 last.

The Vitiaz, corvette, will be launched at St. Petersburg to-day.

The Paluma was commissioned on Tuesday morning with a crew of blue-jackets from Sheerness Royal Naval Barracks, and will leave England at an early date for Queensland, on surveying service, in charge of an officer of the Royal Navy.

The Undine, from Kiel, bound for the Mediterranean, went ashore on Tuesday near Aggerstrand, on the Danish coast. All the officers and crew were got safely off with the exception of two reported missing.

Mr. Evan Macgregor, C.B., of the Admiralty, was married on Tuesday to Annie Louise, daughter of the late Col. W. A. Middleton, C.B., R.A., in Henry VII.'s Chapel, Westminster Abbey.

Sir William Dowell was, on Oct. 25, about to leave Amoy for Shanghai, calling at Wenchow.

A bluejacket threw a quart mug through one of the plate-glass squares of the front window at the Sailors' Home, Portsea, on Sunday afternoon, from sheer wantonness.

The German West African squadron, consisting of the following corvettes—Bismarck, flagship, Gneisenau, Olga, and Ariadne—sailed hence on Thursday morning for its destination.

Active Service cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with Rowland's Odonto, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such Rowland's Odonto has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for Rowland's Odonto, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

THE KHARTOUM EXPEDITION.

A correspondent, at Assouan, sends us a fresh instalment of his journal:—Assouan, Wednesday, Oct. 8, 1884.—The company of the 2nd Duke of Cornwall's L.I. (46th), under command of Lieut. Perkins, which has been stationed for some time past at Shellal (Philæ), at the head of the First Cataract, was this morning relieved by A Company, 2nd Essex (56th) Regt. (Pompadours), under command of Major Spencer, with Lieuts. Machell and Bagwell as subalterns. This company is to remain at Shellal until water transport is provided to take it to Halfa. Twenty-three of the Nile expeditionary boats were successfully navigated up the Cataract, and some were at once taken in tow by a steamer for Halfa. This day's mail-boat brought Major Lawrie, A.P.D.; also Lieut. Beaumont, 60th Rifles, who is going to perform the duties of signal-officer at the front. They embarked this day for Halfa. The post-boat had also on board part of the boiler and some cylinders belonging to the Yarrow steamer. Lord Northbrook, in one of the Khedive's steam yachts, arrived this evening. Thursday, Oct. 9.—Lord Northbrook proceeded to Shellal by a special train, which left Assouan at 8 a.m. He returned to Assouan in a schaloupa down the Cataract. In the evening, the Egyptian troops stationed at Assouan paraded for his lordship's inspection. He was highly pleased with the appearance and steadiness of the different regiments. The Camel Battery, of 12 Krupps, 6-centimètre guns, under the command of Major Carter, E.A., attracted his special attention by the smart manner in which they manœuvred, coming into action under the minute. His lordship's yacht started on its return journey to Cairo as soon as the moon gave sufficient light for navigating the river. Lieut. Peel, 2nd Life Guards, one of the officers in charge of the boats, left for Wady Halfa during the day. Two small launches arrived to assist in towing the Nile boats as required. Friday, Oct. 10.—99 more of the Nile Expeditionary boats arrived to-day, under charge of Lieuts. Lord Avonmore and Pirie, and the work of off-loading them and getting them into the water was immediately proceeded with. The barge containing the Yarrow steamer, in the charge of Mr. Wigg, C.E., was brought to its moorings at the North End Railway Terminus. The different portions of this steamer will, as soon as off-loaded, be placed in trucks, and conveyed without delay to Shellal for reshipment to Wady Halfa. When she has reached her destination, at present fixed upon at Hamnik (Third Cataract), she will be at once constructed. Saturday, Oct. 11.—Nothing occurred worth noting. Boats going up Cataract successfully. Sunday, Oct. 12.—Lieuts. Pirie, 2nd Life Guards, and Vidal, R.E., embarked at Shellal for Halfa. This day's post-boat brought Major Crofton, South Stafford Regt., and Lieut. Sir G. Arthur, 2nd Life Guards, in charge of the boats (expected to arrive to-morrow); also 1st Field Hospital, under Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Markey, Surgs. Wallis and Dick, A.M.D. Capt. Brocklehurst, Royal Horse Guards, was also on board. These last-named officers proceeded at once by train to Shellal, en route for Wady Halfa. Monday, Oct. 13.—The whole of the last consignment of boats were got safely above the Cataract, making 131 in all above the First Cataract. Another lot of boats arrived, 88 in all. The unloading of the barge and steamers is being proceeded with. The weather has been most unusual and equally unpleasant. Yesterday, after being fearfully hot all day, ended up with a thunderstorm in the evening, and a very high wind, and some rain fell. To-day there was more rain in the morning, with lightning, and in the evening a gale of wind from the south-west. The dust-storms were very heavy and thick. Tuesday, Oct. 14.—The last portions of the Yarrow steamer were got safely on board the barges at Shellal, and will start for Halfa to-morrow. There have been no fresh cases of small-pox among the Royal Highlanders, so they are now out of quarantine, the week having passed. Fifty more boats were got up to the Cataract to-day, making 181 at and past Philæ now.

Writing from Sarras, on the 28th ult., the special correspondent of the Standard says:—"Yesterday I passed the wrecked steamer Ghizeh. Her crew had a narrow escape. The natives who were hauling her let go the hawser, and the vessel at once struck on a rock. The water poured into her engine-room and quenched the fires, and the stream carried her down at a terrific rate. Fortunately she sank close to the shore. Although half out of water, she is a hopeless wreck. The officers and crew, who have lost all their private effects, are now encamped upon the bank, awaiting orders from Dongola. Within 40 miles of this place I found abundant supplies for a marching force, and the crops nearly ripe. At Dal there are now 250,000 rations; but the river will be impracticable for native boats by the end of the month. It is falling rapidly, and the Cataracts are now much more formidable than when I myself ascended. Every day increases this difficulty. No troops will move up until all stores have been pushed to the front."

A company of the Staffordshire Regt. left Wady Halfa on Wednesday for Sarras, by route marches, as an experiment.

The Hussar contingent of the Camel Corps, under Lieut.-Col. M'Calmont, arrived at Assouan on Wednesday.

The statement that Lord Wolseley had received instructions to enter into an arrangement with the Mudir of Dongola, by which the latter would be nominated Governor of a border district in the Soudan under the nominal suzerainty of the Khedive, is declared to be devoid of foundation.

The Guards division of the Camel Corps, under Lieut.-Col. Boscawen, has arrived at Assouan, as has also Col. Clarke and the heavy division.

The Times' correspondent at Alexandria telegraphs on Oct. 30:—"I have just heard that the steamer Ghizeh has foundered above the Second Cataract. The event is said to have happened four days ago; but the authorities, for some reason, have been concealing it. It is understood that no lives were lost. The top of the mast only is now visible. The Queen's Own (Royal West Kent) Regt. will move to the front on Nov. 6, and the Royal Irish Regt. on the 9th. Owing to the contrary winds, the barges conveying coal have been a long time in arriving at Assouan, and the supply of coal is running short. Lord Wolseley has, therefore, applied to the Daira Sanieh for the use of their stores at Ashment Pasha, and Mr. Kelly forthwith telegraphed orders to deliver to the English Army 250 tons. Thus the difficulty is for the present surmounted. Major Chermside telegraphs that a native has arrived at Suakim from Berber who states that he heard, when at Berber, that three boats had been wrecked near Merawi, that some of the occupants had been killed, and that others had been brought to Berber."

The Standard correspondent at Wady Halfa writes on Oct. 30:—"This place is now a scene of the liveliest bustle. A great force of men are at work, and energy and method are accomplishing wonders. By to-night no less than 140 boats will have been taken up past the Second Cataract, and it is hoped that the remainder will be passed up at the rate of at least 50 a day. The work has been greatly aided forward by the construction by Lord Charles Beresford of a portage of 2,480 yards in length. By this portage all the more serious difficulties of the Cataracts are avoided. The boats are passed along by parties of men 35 strong, who, with the help of rollers and levers, are able to get the heavy boats across the portage. There are seven of these parties at work, and the average time they occupy in getting a boat across is an hour-and-a-half. The work is, of course, extremely heavy; but all hands work with a will and energy which set the heat and the difficulties of the work at defiance. It is hoped that matters will be sufficiently advanced to permit of all the mounted troops and guns advancing from Wady Halfa before the end of November. Fortunately, it has been found that a sufficiency of forage is procurable for the animals, at any rate as far up as Debbeh. This will greatly diminish the labours of the Commissariat, for the transport of forage was one of the most anxious and important portions of the Expedition. As no great change is to be looked for here just at present, I shall return to Dongola to-morrow, as much more news from the upper country is obtainable there than at this place."

Capt. Courteney, of the Engineers, has completed his report of the Cataracts as far as Dal. He considers that two very arduous portages will be necessary for the boats. One of these, near Dal, is seven miles long, and the boats and cargo must be carried over rocks and sand. The remainder of the river will prove extremely difficult, and the whole passage a most arduous undertaking.

Depôts are being formed along the Nile between Wady Halfa and Merawi. Telegraph stations are also being erected, and arrangements are being made for the organisation of camel transports round the Cataracts.

The Alexandria correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that persistent rumours are still current there that Khartoum has fallen, and that Gen. Gordon has been made prisoner. Neither the Khedive nor the British authorities, however, have received any confirmation of this startling news. The Standard correspondent at Alexandria, in allusion to the same rumour, says:—"There is a remarkable dearth of news from the South; and this fact seems to be the explanation of the very prevalent impression that some misfortune has happened, the news of which is suppressed by the authorities."

SOUTH AFRICAN AFFAIRS.

A Blue-book containing correspondence respecting South African affairs was issued on Thursday, comprising 99 despatches, covering the period from July 24 to Oct. 19. On Oct. 13 Sir Hercules Robinson telegraphed to the Earl of Derby that the Volksraad had approved the withdrawal of the proclamation placing Montsioa under the jurisdiction of the South African Republic, also submitting his views as to the measures desirable for the expulsion of Gishen freebooters from Montsioa's country, and mentioning Sir Charles Warren as a most eligible man to organise police and command the whole expedition. On the same day Sir Hercules telegraphed expressing the opinion that the Government of the South African Republic should be informed that her Majesty's Government are determined to expel freebooters, if necessary by force, and require a strict observance of the Convention of 1884. On the 17th ult. the High Commissioner reported by telegraph that his Ministers deprecated the forcible expulsion of freebooters, but that he did not concur in that view, and was of opinion that military measures should be pushed forward, but that no active measures should be taken until Ministers have had an opportunity of endeavouring to effect a peaceful settlement. The Earl of Derby replied next day that the Government maintained their former view of the liability of the Republic for the expenses incurred in expelling the marauders from Bechuanaland. In a letter to Sir H. Bulwer the same day, the Earl of Derby records having sent him a telegram on the 17th ult., inquiring whether certain troops could be spared from Natal and Zululand.

The Standard says:—"In view of the present critical position of affairs in Bechuanaland, it may be mentioned that the British force now stationed in the Cape and Natal, under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Smyth, K.C.M.G., which would available for service under Sir Charles Warren, in the event of military operations becoming necessary, is composed as follows:—Artillery—8th Baty., Western Division; C Baty., 1st Brig. Engineers—32nd Company. Cavalry—6th Dragoon Guards. Infantry—2nd Batn. Northamptonshire Regt., 2nd Batn. South Lancashire Regt., 1st Batn. Welsh Regt., 1st Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders."

The Woolwich correspondent of the Morning Post writes:—"Extensive contracts have been made with private manufacturers for ten-span harness and such other articles as are peculiar to the South-African colonies, and preliminary inquiries were made several weeks since as to the ships which would be available for transports in case it should be necessary to send out reinforcements to Natal. Tenders for the supply of war stores are now being received to the value of over £100,000; and although the bulk of these supplies may be only required to make up for the drain caused by the Nile Expedition, some of them are of such a special character that their destination does not admit of a doubt."

A telegram dated Durban, Oct. 27, says:—"Dinizulu still remains under Boer protection with Oham. It is Umnyamana who has transferred his support to the younger child of Cetewayo. The Usutus would seem to be divided into four parties. Dabulamanzi and Undabuko are playing each his own game. The Boer laager is now reduced to 12 waggons with 50 men, the remainder having returned to their farms in the neighbouring territories to attend to sheep-shearing and other seasonable work. A deputation of the Boer leaders is expected to arrive at Maritzburg this week in order to meet Sir Henry Bulwer. It is rumoured that they mean to ask the Imperial Government to take over the whole country, which would be the easiest solution of the question, but I cannot yet vouch for the accuracy of the report."

ADMIRALTY BLUNDERS.

A correspondent at Chatham writes to the Pall Mall Gazette of the 30th inst.:—"The exposé of the defects in her Majesty's ship Agamemnon, quoted in your issue of yesterday's date from Truth, has given rise to an unusual amount of controversy in Naval circles here. Unquestionably, the salient features of the moot question raised by the publication of the paragraph are in substance incontrovertible. I have it on the very best of authority that from the first very grave doubts existed in the minds of the officials in this dockyard as to the sailing capabilities of the vessel, which, it will be remembered, was built here, and sent to Devonport to fit. The glaring defects in the Agamemnon are, unfortunately, not confined to that vessel, for it has been, it now appears, generally known among the chief officials here that the Ajax, sister-ship to the Agamemnon, is not one whit superior to the Agamemnon. The Ajax was built at Pembroke, and is now here for fitting. At her trial trip, which took place some 12 months since, her steering apparatus was found to be very defective; so much so, that a collision was only just avoided. The cause of this unsatisfactory state of affairs in the navigation of these two immense and costly war-vessels is attributed by the Naval experts here to the faulty construction of the 'sheer' or longitudinal curve or bend of the hulls, which, being out of proportion to the other 'lines,' counteracts the effect of the rudder when the vessel is 'under weigh,' and causes her to 'heel by the bow,' as one of the Admiralty officials characterised it, when the head of the vessel is put about. The bulbous and disproportionate shape of the hull acts in the same manner as would be produced by forcing an unevenly-formed wedge through the water, the action of a 'head sea' or tidal stream producing an erratic course. Another blunder in the design of the 'fitments' of those vessels is the inefficiency of the hydraulic and automatic gear. The delay in sending the Ajax to sea is authentically stated to be owing to having to fit duplicate hydraulic-gear for working the turrets and guns."

Capt. Colomb, recently appointed to the Duke of Wellington at Portsmouth, entered the Navy in Nov., 1846, as a cadet on board the Sidon, in which he served in the Mediterranean under the late Capt. Henderson. In March, 1849, he was appointed midshipman of the Reynard, sloop, passing later on into the Serpent, with which he served under the present Admiral Luard in the West Indies and in Burmah during our last war there (medal and Pegu clasp). In March, 1854, he was appointed mate of the Phœnix, Com. Inglefield, and served in the Arctic Expedition of 1854, bringing home the officers and crews of the five Government ships left in the ice (medal and promotion to lieut., Feb. 3, 1855). On promotion he was appointed to the Hastings, with which he served under the late Sir James Caffin in the Baltic Expedition of 1855, including the bombardment of Sweaborg (medal). After qualifying in the old Excellent, Lieut. Colomb was selected, in Dec., 1857, by Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Pasley to serve as his flag-lieutenant at Devonport, and continued as such until the end of 1862. In June, 1863, he was appointed additional of the Edgar, in the Channel Squadron, and in December of the same year was promoted commander. In 1866 he was employed on temporary service at Portsmouth, when he was borne on the books of the Victory, and from July, 1868, until promoted to post rank, April 4, 1870, commanded the Dryad in the East Indies and on the East African Coast, rendering useful service in capturing slave dhows. He has subsequently served as flag-captain to Admiral Ryder in the Audacious, on the China station, has had command of the Thunderer, in the Mediterranean, from January, 1880 to 1881, and has served in command of the Steam Reserve at Portsmouth, where he is at present employed on special service. Capt. Colomb, who is the inventor of the flashing signals in use in the Navy, and of a special lamp for lighting the lower-decks, was a member of the War Office Committee on machine-guns. In 1878 he received the gold medal of the Royal United Service Institution. He is the author of "Slave-catching in the Indian Ocean," an interesting narrative of old days in the Dryad. Capt. C. J. Rowley on Monday handed over the command of the Duke of Wellington to Capt. P. H. Colomb, who was introduced to the officers. The latter will go on leave for a few days while the cabins are being repainted.

It is now an open secret in official circles (Truth says) that the Agamemnon, double-screw armour-plated turret-ship, is to all intents and purposes utterly useless. The rudder has been ingeniously contrived so as to work only in dead-water, and the pleasing result is that it is practically impossible to steer the costly monster; and when she starts, it is a matter of profound uncertainty what direction she may take! In all probability, it will be found necessary to convert the ship into a single screw, at a cost of £100,000, or thereabouts. The capacity of every one connected with the Admiralty for the perpetration of costly and scandalous blunders is certainly without limit.

SOME MAGAZINES FOR NOVEMBER.

Cornhill for this month opens with a touching short story, well suited to raise laughter or arouse sympathy. It is called "Major Cornelius," and bears some resemblance to "The Hermit of St. Eugene," a gentle story, written by Mr. Morris in one of the periodicals of last month. In the present tale there is really but one actor, all the other parts being represented by what may be called the "supers." But he is quite sufficient to arouse the interest of the reader. The scenes in the tailor's shop, both capitally illustrated, tell a story of struggling poverty, scantily relieved by the strictest self-discipline, while the last half-dozen lines explain the dénouement. There is a vivid picture of the sufferings of a "Female Nihilist," which bears a strong semblance of truth. The prelude, told in a few simple lines, is sad enough, indeed. It says:—"On the 27th of July, in the year 1878, the little town of Talutorovsk, in Western Siberia, was profoundly excited by a painful event. A political prisoner, named Olga Limbatovitch, it was said, had miserably put an end to her days. She was universally loved and esteemed, and her violent death, therefore, produced a most mournful impression throughout the town; while the 'Ispravnig,' or Chief of the Police, was secretly accused of having driven the poor young girl by his unjust persecutions to take away her life." The writer thus concludes,—"Such is the story, the true story, of Olga Limbatovitch. Of Olga Limbatovitch do I say? No; of hundreds and hundreds of others. I should not have related it had it not been so." "The Talk of the Town" is manifestly improving.

There must be few, if any, readers of Longman's Magazine who are not well acquainted with the particulars of a remarkable instance of a really great undertaking in the relief of thousands. This work grew out of the kind thought of one man, the captain of a sailing vessel, who made a collection amongst his crew for the purchase of "The Don." That work goes bravely on. A "Donna," too, has been provided to aid the Don, whose special sphere is to supply the wants of labourers out of work, for whom halfpenny and farthing portions are made up. This has been done during the whole of last winter and spring without a single hitch, owing to friendly subscriptions made voluntarily by the readers of Longman. Those who are interested in this sterling charity will read with pleasure the little tale published in the November number of this periodical,—"A Garden Party at Rotherhithe." It presents a cheery picture of the work that has been done, the grateful feelings that have been thereby engendered, and the untiring efforts of the "sisters" who are attached to it. "Jack" is a terribly long time in spinning his yarn of love and shipwreck; he has completed his 39th chapter, while "Madam," in the same number, "caps" it with 50 chapters. The anecdote of a "Mouse" is a strange one, but can scarcely be expected to create any profound interest among the readers of Longman. "Mousey" seems to know the value of a bank-note, but not to know how to apply that knowledge.

The November number of Blackwood opens with a most interesting paper on the correspondence and diaries of the Right Hon. John Wilson Croker, which throw a flood of light over one of the most important periods—political, social, and literary—in the history of England and of Europe. The reviewer, in the first place, gives a brief outline of the life of this distinguished man, before indulging in any critical observations which might receive notice later on. We are informed that John Wilson Croker was born in Galway, on Dec. 20, 1780, was educated at Cork and Portarlington, entered college at 16, and became the associate of men of note and position. He soon became a contributor to the Times, as well as a collaborateur with the Smiths, Howe, and James, on two separate journalistic adventures. He did not, however, desert the law, at which he made a fair income, and then married most happily; in May, 1807, became Member for Downpatrick. "Facts versus Mid-Lothian Fallacies" supplies the political article in Blackwood for the month.

The English Illustrated Magazine for November deserves high commendation for its illustrations. Its principal features are a visit to Eton, by Mowbray Morris; the commencement of a new story by W. E. Norris, entitled, "That Terrible Man;" and some further chapters of "A Family Affair," by Hugh Conway.

The Argosy is very good this month. In the December number there will be special attractions, namely, the usual extra Christmas number, a long and complete story by the author of "East Lynne," and an illustrated paper by Charles W. Wood on "The Ruins of Pompeii." The January number of the Argosy will also contain the opening chapters of a new illustrated serial story of domestic interest, the commencement of a story by "Johnny Ludlow," and also the first of a series of illustrated papers by Charles Wood.

Messrs. Cassell and Co., Limited, have published a goodly array of light literature for November. We observe also, what good children will welcome with a loud hurrah,—a highly-coloured Little Folks Annual, which contains a "shipful of children," and describes their merry adventures.

Mr. J. S. Winter, author of Cavalry Life and Regimental Legends (Chatto and Windus), has prepared another set of similar sketches, which will be published in two volumes early in next year.

Obituary.

Col. W. G. Trevor, 16th Regt. Bombay N.I., died on the 8th inst., at Bombay. He entered the Indian Army in 1854, became capt. in 1868, major in 1876, and lieut.-col. in 1880. He served with the 80th Foot in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1858-59.

Summary of Events.

OCTOBER 25.—Messenger arrived at Dongola from Mudir, confirming news of Col. Stewart's death. Col. Colville proceeded to Abugossi, to have an interview with the sheikhs of the Kabbabesh tribe.

OCTOBER 27.—Lord Wolseley and Col. Swaine started up the Nile.

OCTOBER 28.—Mr. M'Coan asked question in House of Commons as to publication of report of committee in defence of British possessions. Several questions also asked and statement made as to Gen. Gordon.

OCTOBER 29.—Hussar contingent of the Camel Corps arrived at Assouan, under Lieut.-Col. M'Calmont. Lord Wolseley reached Ambigol.

OCTOBER 30.—Publication of Blue-book on South-African affairs. Mr. Gladstone, in House of Commons, in reply to Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, stated that full instructions had been given to Lord Wolesley as to purposes of his mission.

THE AFGHAN FRONTIER.

The Morning Post has received information from India indicating that whatever may be the future policy of the Government in Afghanistan itself, they have already decided to take up a powerful position along the south-east Afghan frontier. The measures to be adopted are thus described:—Next year the entire railway system of the Indus region, from the Khyber to the sea, is to pass under Government control, and two more military lines are to be constructed to enable England to pour troops into Afghanistan through two passes lying between the Khyber and the Bolan. In this manner, if the Indus railway be treated as a base, more than 1,000 miles in length, resting on the course of that river, it will possess four strategical lines running from it towards Afghanistan, and terminating at four different points, each of which will be made a powerful military secondary base, if not that already, and from which, in course of time, other extensions will be made into the very heart of the Ameer's dominions. One of the projected lines, indeed, is destined at no distant date to push its way into a region almost unknown to Europeans, and the southern portion of which is now being overrun by the Zhob Valley expeditionary force. Starting from a point almost midway between Peshawur and Lahore, it will extend to the frontier military post of Dera Ismail Khan, and afterwards to the mouth of the Gomul Pass, where it will rest for a time, to be later pushed on by degrees through the Gomul region to the Afghan city of Ghuzni. The city has been frequently occupied by English troops, but never yet by a force proceeding direct to it from India. In our wars with Afghanistan we have always entered Ghuzni either from Candahar or Cabul. The Government now propose to penetrate to it peacefully through the Gomul by a direct route from the Indus, which is one of the main highways of Afghan-Indian trade, and which was selected by Napoleon I. for his projected Franco-Russian invasion of India. The intended railway is thus of the highest commercial and military importance, and when completed to the mouth of the Gomul Pass will undoubtedly exercise a powerful pacifying effect upon such neighbouring tribes as the Zhob Valley Kahars, whose depredations General Sir Oriel Tanner is now engaged in punishing with a force of 5,000 men. The second projected line is to start from Mooltan, and also run to to the Gomul region, joining the other railway at Dera Ismail Khan. Thus while Peshawur and Quetta have only one railway running towards them, the military post of Dera Ismail Khan will have two—from Mooltan and from Lahore. From Mooltan a branch is also projected to Dera Ghazi Khan, which in time will doubtless penetrate to Quetta and give that point two feeding lines as well.

Vice-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh has accepted nomination on the Royal Commission on Merchant Shipping.

The Anglian arrived at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, on Saturday afternoon, and disembarked invalids and time-expired men from Egypt. Amongst the invalids were several officers of the Army and Navy, and there were a few marines and blue-jackets with the troops. The worst cases were transferred to the Herbert Military Hospital. Orders have been received for the Anglian to load again with stores for the Nile expedition.

The storeship Cameo arrived at Malta on Tuesday from Alexandria, and the Teelin-Head from London. The hired transport Shelley left Malta on Monday for Portsmouth.

Lieut. Arthur Middlemass, who has been temporarily attached to H.M.S. Invincible, one of the vessels of the Mediterranean Squadron, has returned to Alexandria, in order to resume his duties as Inspector-in-Chief of the Egyptian Coastguard Service.

The hired transport Poonah arrived at Malta from Alexandria on Wednesday.

The Lords of the Admiralty have given notice that six commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry will be offered to candidates who compete for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, at the approaching examination. Gentlemen desirous of being placed on the list of candidates for these commissions should apply to the Secretary of the Admiralty. The fact of a candidate having his name placed on the list for the Royal Marines will not debar him from accepting an appointment to Sandhurst should his place in the competition render him eligible for entry.

2ND LIFE GUARDS. A telegram from Wady Halfa states that Sir George Arthur has been appointed aide-de-camp to Col. Harrison.

4TH HUSSARS. Capt. Blacker has been selected for the adjutantcy of the Sherwood Rangers (Nottinghamshire Yeomanry Cavalry).

6TH INNISKILLING DRAGOONS. The following general order was issued by Gen. Hon. Sir L. Smyth, commanding in Natal, on Sept. 22:—"I thank you all, Inniskilling Dragoons, for your excellent behaviour on all occasions. During the nearly three years you have been under my command, you have never given me one moment's trouble. Whether under the depressing influence of a grievous epidemic of sickness, or the discomfort of a prolonged camp life, or on long and weary marches in the field, you have always proved yourselves by your discipline and behaviour to be a credit and a bright example to the profession to which we belong. I thank you once more sincerely, good men and good soldiers that you are; and I cannot let this opportunity pass, for which I have long wished, of thanking you, Col. Curtis, at the head of your regiment, most sincerely for the admirable manner in which you have conducted for so long the difficult and delicate duties of the command of this post. You have carried out my orders in the most loyal and intelligent manner, and everything you have done on your own initiative has met with my entire approbation. The comfort it has been to me in all the difficulties of this extended command to have you in charge of such a troublesome spot, I cannot exaggerate. I thank you most sincerely, and in shaking you by the hand I shake hands with every individual in your gallant regiment." The Standard says:—"Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. Sir L. Smyth has specially brought under the notice of the authorities the services of Col. Curtis, commanding the 6th Dragoons, for his tact and ability as commandant of the Ekowe Column. In addition, Gen. Smyth, when recently visiting the regiment at Fort Curtis, Ekowe, expressed his satisfaction at having Col. Curtis in charge of that important post, and also at the conduct of the Dragoons (Inniskillings). The head-quarters of the regiment, the only British cavalry corps in the Natal command, was recently stationed at Rorke's Drift, the column then, including detachments from the infantry corps in Natal, numbering nearly 1,100 combatants. It is expected that Col. Curtis will shortly be appointed on the Staff in South Africa."

7TH HUSSARS. The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland has made the following appointment to the Viceregal Staff:—Capt. the Hon. A. Byng, 7th Hussars, now an extra A.D.C. to his Excellency, to be an Aide-de-Camp to his Excellency, vice Major Turner, R.A. Brevet Lieut.-Col. M'Calmont, in charge of the Hussar Contingent of the Camel Corps, arrived at Assouan on Wednesday.

8TH HUSSARS. Capt. T. W. S. Lowndes, late of the regiment, died at Winslow, Bucks, on the 27th ult.

9TH LANCERS. The Morning Post says:—"Col. Bushman, of the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers, who served with that regiment in the last Afghan War, and accompanied Sir Frederick Roberts in the memorable march to Candahar, will, it is understood, succeed Lieut.-Col. Combe, 10th Hussars, as assistant-adjutant-general in India."

11TH HUSSARS. Sir Evelyn Baring has received the following telegram from Lord Wolseley:—"Two messengers sent to inquire as to the fate of Col. Stewart's party have returned. They report that the steamer was towing two boats containing M. Naoom, with his brother and family. As the enemy was found to be overtaking them, the convoy boats were cut adrift, and all on board of them were made prisoners. Shortly afterwards the steamer struck on a rock near Catadieh. There were at this time 45 persons on board, four of whom were women. Col. Stewart, and two Consuls, one of whom was named Nicola, were among those on board. The whole party, except two natives, were killed by Sheikh Suleiman. This information was obtained from one of the two survivors by the messenger. The man said that Col. Stewart, whom he described as a tall man with a light beard, was certainly on board the steamer." Telegraphing from Dongola on Thursday, the special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says different reports regarding the existence of papers belonging to Col. Stewart's party and of the second part of Mr. Power's diary, have come in. Some say that all these papers have been destroyed; others that Sheikh Monasseer, of Wady Garna, had them in his possession.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

U Baty. 1st Brig., which had been stationed at Athlone, has arrived at Bombay, and proceeded to Kamptee.

T Baty. 1st Brig., which arrived at Bombay on the 21st ult. from Shorncliffe, has proceeded to Kirkee.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. Sir Charles Warren has been appointed Special British Commissioner for Bechuanaland to command a force of arms in carrying out the duty for which he was specially recommended.

Col. Maitland, Commanding, and Major Green, Brigade-Major, have returned to Cairo, on completion of their tour of inspection at Alexandria and Rosetta.

Col. Chermside has been appointed Governor-General of the whole of the Red Sea littoral, with his head-quarters at Massowah, for which port he has left Suakim.

GRENADIER GUARDS. On the recommendation of the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief (the circumstances of the case having also been laid before her Majesty), the Bronze Medal of the Royal Humane Society has been awarded to Pte. H. Loraine, 3rd Batn., now serving in the Camel Corps in the Nile Expedition, for plunging off the bridge which extends over the water in Kensington Gardens, and rescuing a man named Pope, who attempted suicide on the evening of the 23rd ult. The dive was a high one, 23 ft., and as the water is only between five and six feet deep, the risk of striking the bottom was considerable. The Duke of Cambridge has also requested the Assistant-Adjutant-General to convey to Loraine "her Majesty's high sense of the courageous act he performed in saving the man's life."

1st, or Royal Scots. The 1st Batn., under command of Col. White, was inspected on the Savannah, Barbadoes, on Oct. 4, by Major-Gen. Browne, commanding the troops in the West Indies, previous to their departure for Egypt. At the conclusion of a searching inspection, his Excellency addressed the battalion as follows:—"This is probably the last time I shall see you on parade before you leave the station, and I take the opportunity to say a few words to you. Your conduct whilst in this garrison has been all that could be wished, and is highly creditable to you. You are now going to a country where you are likely to see active service, and, if you do, I am convinced you will uphold the honour of your regiment. Remember, men, you belong to the oldest regiment in the British Army, a regiment with a long and great history, don't forget that; and it will rest with you to add to its renown. The manner in which you have turned out to-day is admirable, your cleanliness and smartness most creditable, and I shall take care to let it be known at head-quarters. Good-bye, men; I wish you luck."

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. Three companies of the 1st Batn. rejoined head-quarters at Sheffield on the 28th ult. from Bradford, on relief by a detachment of the 28th Gloucestershire Regt.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. A memorial has been erected in St. Patrick's Cathedral, bearing the following inscription:—"In memory of Gen. Clement Alexander Edwards, C.B., Knight of the Legion of Honour; born Nov. 15, 1812; died July 29, 1882; colonel of the Royal Irish Regt., in which he served for upwards of 53 years, being present with its 1st Batn. in the wars of China, 1842; Burmah, 1852; the Crimea, 1854; the Indian Mutiny, 1857; this tablet is erected by his brother-officers." Gen. Edwards joined the Royal Irish at an early age, followed its fortunes in many climes and through many hard-fought fields, succeeded to the command as the regiment was proceeding to the Crimea, where he had the honour to lead it at the final assault upon Sebastopol. No officer ever possessed greater tact and judgment in handling Irish-born soldiers than did the late Gen. Edwards, whose command was an embodiment of courage, kindness, and firmness, which bound up his soldiers in him, and prepared them to readily follow his lead through paths of the deepest danger and greatest difficulty. The 1st Batn. has been selected to proceed up the Nile on active service.

28th Gloucestershire Regiment moved on the 28th ult. from Portsmouth to York, there to be stationed. The Portsmouth Times says:—"Five years ago the regiment arrived home from Singapore, and mustered 850 men, none of whom had served with the colours for less than two years, but of this number only 49 remain; hence the greater part of the men now forming the battalion are young soldiers. The strength is three field officers, four captains, eight subalterns, two staff officers, 11 warrant officers and staff serjeants, 27 serjeants, 14 trumpeters, and 275 rank and file, and the battalion is accompanied by 36 women and 64 children. Six weeks ago the battalion received orders to be on the move, but from time to time these were alternately cancelled and countermanded. Both officers and men having packed up their gear, and having recently handed over the messes, canteens, and offices to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, a good deal of inconvenience has been experienced."

30th East Lancashire Regiment. The Royal Humane Society, on the recommendation of the Secretary for War, has conferred the Silver Medal of the Society upon Major Goodwyn for a gallant attempt to save the life of a stowaway lad named Jones, who fell from the steamship Nubia in the Red Sea. Though it was well known that sharks abounded in that part, Major Goodwyn plunged into the sea without divesting himself of any of his clothing, and swam about for twenty minutes in the vain search for the lad, his head exposed to the mid-day sun. The vessel was running eleven knots an hour at the time of the occurrence, with all her canvas set.

33rd West Riding Regiment. Capt. Curran has been appointed adjutant of the 3rd Volunteer Batn.

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. A telegram from Wady Halfa states that the regiment will be the first to take to the boats.

Capt. A. St. L. Burrowes, R.M.L.I., has been appointed Adjt. to the Royal Marine Battalion at Suakim, vice Poe, to command of Royal Marines in the Camel Corps.

Lieut. John Stamper, R.M.L.I., lately serving with the Royal Marine Battalion, Suakim, died at Suez Hospital on the 17th ult., from fever.

One captain, R.M.A., and one lieutenant, R.M.L.I., one serjeant and 18 gunners, R.M.A., one corporal, one bugler, and 29 privates, R.M.L.I., for H.M.S. Nelson; and one colour-serjeant, one serjeant, and 20 privates, R.M.L.I., and one corporal and five gunners, for H.M.S. Diamond, embarked yesterday in H.M.S. Tamar at Plymouth, for passage to the Australian station.

50th Queen's Own, Royal West Kent Regiment. The regiment proceeds up the Nile with the Khartoum Expedition.

56th Essex Regiment, at Assouan, has been ordered to Wady Halfa.

75th Gordon Highlanders are ordered to leave Cairo for the front directly the transport is available.

79th Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders. The Standard says:—"Major Gordon Money, of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, who has been acting as Assistant Military Secretary to Gen. Sir F. Stephenson in Egypt, during the absence of Col. Lorne Campbell, has, on the return of that officer from leave, been appointed to act as Brigade-Major of the 2nd Brigade of the Army of Occupation." Lieut.-Col. Gordon, Brigade-Major to 2nd Brigade, left Boolak Dacroor for Assiout, en route to Assouan, on Oct. 10. Major Money, Acting Assistant Military Secretary, will perform the duties of Brigade-Major.

93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. Lieut.-Col. Gordon, who has been acting as brigade-major on the Staff of Major-Gen. Lennox, commanding a brigade of the Army of Occupation in Egypt, has been ordered to the front on special service with the Expedition, and has arrived at Assouan, en route to Dongola.

99th Wiltshire Regiment. The statement of the Lahore paper that Lieut.-Col. Moir is returning is, we are authorised to state, without foundation.

Rifle Brigade. The Standard says:—"Major Delalynde Mansel, who was specially promoted for his services in the last Afghan War, has been appointed to act as Aide-de-Camp to Brigdr.-Gen. Oldershaw, temporarily commanding the Poona Division of the Bombay Army. On Major-Gen. Sir John Ross taking over that Divisional Command at the end of November, Major Mansel will resume duty on his Staff."

Medical Department. Surgs.-Major Greene and Garde and Surgs. Allin and Laffan have proceeded to Wady Halfa, with 75 non-commissioned officers and men of the Army Hospital Corps.

The Auxiliary Forces.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Yesterday the 25th official year of the force was brought to a close, and as soon as possible the full returns of enrolled strength, efficients, &c., will be sent to the War Office. The last returns were the best in the history of the organisation, showing 209,365 enrolled, 202,428 efficients, 17,928 proficient officers and serjeants, and 179,739 of all ranks present at inspection.

PRESIDENT.
H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, K.G.
CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE.
General H.S.H. Prince EDWARD of SAXE-WEIMAR, K.C.B.
OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 69 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The funded income of the charity yields only £930, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

The Committee earnestly appeal for funds to meet the current expenses.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE this week contains four pages extra.

Several Naval and Military letters, &c., are in type, but are forced to stand over through want of space.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE exchanges with or receives the following Service papers abroad:—L'Avenir Militaire; Bulletin de la Réunion des Officiers; L'Armée Française; L'Italia Militare; Rivista Europea; Rivista Militare; Memorial de Ingenieros; La France Militaire; Moniteur de la Flotte; Le Progrès Militaire; Der Veteran; Streffleur's Oesterreichische Militärische Zeitschrift; Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und Marine; Militär Wochenblatt; Giornale d'Artiglieria e Genio; Organ der Militär-Wissenschaftlichen Vereine; Vedette; Deutsche Heeres Zeitung; Militärische Zeitschrift; Armeeblatt, Wien; Army and Navy Journal of New York; The American, Philadelphia; Revista Maritima Brazileira; in addition to all the home and colonial professional periodicals and journals.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1884.

THIS is one of the most remarkable papers ever written. It is the "Magna Charta" of the slavers of Africa, the Bill of Rights of barbarism and fanaticism in Equatorial Egypt, the disgraceful surrender of civilisation and Christianity to savagery and Mahomedanism, over a territory as large as France, Germany, and Austria together. But it is as a military memorandum that we have to deal with it chiefly, and in that regard there are some extraordinary topics for discussion. The primary object of the expedition with which Lord Wolseley is entrusted is plainly and simply put. It is to bring away General Gordon and Colonel Stewart from Khartoum. Not a word of the third person, Mr. Power, although he was Acting Consul; not a word of German or Greek, of the merchants, traders, soldiers, &c.! Gordon and Stewart. Bring them away. It is not stated where Gordon and Stewart are to be brought to, or what is to be done with them. The primary object for which Gordon was sent to Khartoum is ignored. Lord Wolseley's work is very like that of Lord Napier of Magdala, when he was sent to Abyssinia to recover some English subjects from Theodore, at a cost of more than a million apiece. But that outlay is nothing to the cost of this present business. As poor Stewart is doubtless dead, there is only Gordon to be brought away; and we confidently expect that he will not be made liable to that operation for less than a couple of millions more than the delivery of Cameron, Rassam, and Co. cost the country. Gordon, delivered or taken from Khartoum, the primary, secondary, tertiary objects of the Expedition are achieved. No nonsense about smashing up the Mahdi; no pretence of rescuing a horde of Egyptians, who went, or were sent, to the Soudan, Sennaar, Darfour, just as Englishmen are sent by the English Government to India. They are niggers. Manchester, and Birmingham, and Christian England do not care for their black souls and dusky bodies. They are to be distinctly abandoned. In Darfour, on the Bahr-el-Gazul, and in the Equatorial Provinces, they are to be left to their fate as the garrison of Tokar was, as Berber was, as Dongola would have been, but for its valiant Mudir. But the Khartoum people are to secure a safe retreat. This is the crucial point, and it will test Lord Wolseley's utmost powers—indeed, it will break and defy them—to carry off these troops, &c., without advancing beyond Khartoum, and disobeying orders, as we hope he certainly will do, if necessary.

It is not credible that 140,000 men, or 100,000 men, are, or were, round Khartoum; because, if the men could be collected, they could not be fed. Still, there may be enough to "rush" the works from Nile to Nile, especially if there be treachery at work inside, as there was at Berber. But we do not believe the Cairo and Alexandrian rumours that Khartoum is actually in the hands of the Mahdi. It is not easy to conceive such an event could have been communicated from any point on the Nile, or that the news could have been passed on by word of mouth without the authorities at Dongola, Korosko, Assouan, or Esneh hearing of it. They would not keep it secret, as they did the loss of the Ghizeh steamer. Perhaps that was not known, Quia canet vate sacro. There were no newspaper correspondents near at hand. These gentlemen are all a little behind the fair.

A revised Circular respecting the examination of Surgeons and Surgeons-Major has appeared, but no mention whatever is made of two important points connected with the scheme. First, what facilities are to be given to the officers concerned to prepare for the examination? This is no mean point, for at present, with a small staff of Medical officers at home doing double duty, in consequence of the drain on the Department for Egypt, there is no time for readiness. Second, what is to be the constitution of the examining boards? This information is necessary to assure those to be examined that there will be no partiality, favour, or affection in constituting them. There is a suspicion that those may be appointed whom it would be advisable to leave out. It would be fair that the framers of the scheme should not serve on these boards, as it is not unlikely that, seeing the unpopularity of the measure and the outcry against it among the higher ranks, they may not be without bias as examiners.

Lord Wolseley and Lord Charles Beresford have expressed their mutual satisfaction with their existing relations,—the Commander-in-Chief with the cheerfulness, readiness, and resources of his Naval Aide-de-Camp,—the Naval Aide-de-Camp with the kindness and amiability of his General, who has inspired him with complete confidence in the success of the Expedition. Looking back at the refusal of Lord Wolseley to receive Lord Charles Beresford at his head-quarters before the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, it is evident, as Lord Wolseley said indeed at the time, there was no personal objection to his lordship, but that Lord Wolseley was actuated in declining to let him join the Staff, even as aide-de-camp of the Khedive or as a correspondent of a newspaper, because he thought Lord Charles Beresford, having been promoted for the attack on Alexandria, should, as is the rule, go home instead of volunteering for service out of his line of business.

We learn from India that the Duke of Connaught has been to Rawul Pindee, Attock, and Peshawur. At the latter place he was provided with an escort, and rode to the Khyber; while at Attock he was shown the fort, and also taken on the river. At Rawul Pindee, which prides itself on being one of the most loyal places in India, the Duke and Duchess received a most enthusiastic welcome.

Lord Wolseley has written to the editor of this journal to say that the letters in a local paper, published by a late employé of the Army and Navy Gazette, to whom they were addressed by his lordship privately, in reply to communications respecting some invention, were not intended by Lord Wolseley for publication; and that he will not take any further notice of any letters addressed to him by the individual who has made such use of his name. Sir Geoffrey Hornby has also written to the editor of this journal to state that the use made of his name in the same way was "without his consent and contrary to his wishes," and that he merely answered some letters as he supposed from a Naval officer, with regard to uniform, and had no intention of figuring in print.

The proposal of the St. James's Gazette to discontinue the reduction of the National Debt for one year, which would give six millions, or for two years, which would give twelve millions, for the Navy and national defences may be unsound or not; but it is assuredly quite feasible, and there are no arguments against the measure which are worth consideration, if the money for an object of vital urgency and necessity cannot be procured in any other way. "We were once posterity," says the St. James's Gazette, with Hibernian recklessness; and we agree with our contemporary in thinking that we should not be deterred from preserving our present property and liberty by any consideration for the unborn generations to whom we should transmit an unimpaired Empire. A great war, such as a great Empire like that of Great Britain may be exposed at very short notice, would cost hundreds of millions, and every million we spend now diminishes not only the cost of maintaining our rights and honour by sea and land, but the risk and chance of any war at all. Consider what it would be for this ancient people, dependent on the world for their daily bread, to be reduced to starvation,—for this haughty, conquering race to have to pass through the Caudine Forks, and to surrender its Alsace and Lorraine to some victorious rival! If posterity could do anything to us, who had allowed their inheritance to be despoiled for the sake of some financial theory or political-economical arrangement, it most assuredly would be unpleasant for the present inhabitants of these isles and their rulers to fall into their hands. The arguments in favour of the immediate application of the Sinking Fund to the employment of the thousands of skilled artisans in the idle dockyards may not be accepted by the deadheads of finance, but there is a practical and immediate benefit to be obtained in security against fearful dangers which should commend the project to the Government and the country.

If a paper may be said in a sort of way to reflect the opinions of its readers, and if an editor only provides what he imagines to be palatable, the military public in India might be fairly taken to be in a bad way. Week after week the London military correspondent of the Allahabad paper puts both H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge and Lord Wolseley in the most objectionable light, the former as obstructing public business, and keeping a better man out of the post of Commander-in-Chief, the latter as doing almost everything which, as Adjutant-General, he should avoid, and in particular as acting with regard to his Royal Highness in a way which certainly Lord Wolseley would be the last man to approve of. The letters are an insult to the loyalty as well as the intelligence of the Army in India, and it is said the Pioneer will be made to feel that this must stop.

Major-General Gordon is a British officer on full pay. He is also an Egyptian officer of state,—the Khedive's Viceroy of the Soudan. Question No 1. Has he any right to surrender his master's territory to rebels? Question No. 2. Could he be tried by court-martial, and subjected to pains and penalties, for refusing to obey the orders of Lord Wolseley to hand over the property and lives of the Egyptian troops in garrisons and the other Egyptian subjects, with the property which he was sent to protect and save in Sennaar, Kordofan, &c., to the enemy? We do not know what the answers to these questions may be, but we do know one thing. It may be asserted without presumption that Charles Gordon would die a hundred deaths before he would betray what he believed to be his duty and his trust.

Can a blockade be declared and established without a declaration of war? A blockade can be resorted to enforce redress for grievances, or a demand made by one nation against another; but there must be a condition of belligerency, for no State can blockade the ports of another as it pleases.

There was, we are told, what to the world would be a curious "discovery," made at Apsley House in connection with the "setting in order" after the late Duke's death, for stowed away in one of the basement-rooms there were found, it is said, 76 French Eagles, with embroidered standards, dating from the time of Napoleon I. They were not, however, the spoils of war, but were in some sort spolia of victory—handed over, after Waterloo, to the great Duke by the King of France as curiosities" belonging to the defeated Emperor. Before Napoleon set out to meet his fate in Belgium, he ordered standards and eagles—one to each of the Departments—to be prepared for distribution on his return in triumph. These now repose under the roof of Apsley House.

A "Professor" "in the aibstract" is a formidable thing, and a Professor of History is a grave factor in a discussion; but when Mr. Oscar Browning, in the Pall Mall Gazette, says "the battle of Waterloo was won in the playing-fields at Eton," &c., he must be pulling the public leg, or goaking professorially in ridicule of some solemn hyfalutin', like that of Mr Kinglake, in praise of "scrooges" as preparations for battle. The men who founded this Empire were not the sons of the boys who were heroes among "wet bobs" or "dry bobs," though Eton, like other great public schools, contributed egregious examples to the rolls of British worthies of later days. Indeed, we are glad to say, we find that Mr. Browning was ridiculing the theory that the great public schools have had the enormous influence on the imperial fortunes of the English race which have been attributed to them by certain eminent literary alumni, for he shows that their influence is not very old and far-reaching in the past. The paper he contributed to the Pall Mall Gazette of October 30 may be commended without confidence to the dons of the great Public Schools, and we recommend parents and guardians to read it, and to consider well the remarks of one who has in a few terse sentences given expression to very sound conclusions on the relations of the great public schools to good national education. Some of the best officers in the Army were never at any of the schools of the elect, and Naval officers necessarily have not had the advantages of education at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, Rugby, &c.; but no one can assert they are deficient in manners or morals, high principles or independence of character, because they have not gone through all the trials of great public schoolboy life. "Let us free ourselves from the tyranny of superstitious reverence," and save our pockets in the full assurance that good officers and gentlemen can be turned out of the raw material in these islands without going through the mill of a few public schools on which the glass of fashion reflects its impressions, and that out of these overgrown seminaries there is no style or polish in scholarship or manners.

An officer of intelligence and experience, who had paid particular attention to the investigation of the physical facts connected with the display of numbers in Hyde Park last Sunday, has emphatically declared that there were not 30,000 persons present, and that of these, one-half at least were indifferent spectators—that is, people who went to see the others.

The other day a Paris journal called the Soir pointed out that the greater portion of the harness of the French Cavalry was in a lamentable condition, both leather and metal being quite unfit for service, and also the saddles of model 1874, which it would be impossible to utilise in the event of a mobilisation. In a second article the Soir gives the following details, which are not without interest. It says:—"At the moment of the reception of the harness, a master armourer of one of the cavalry regiments was told off to examine the metal portions. He pointed out the bad quality of the raw material, the iron being friable; he broke a number of stirrups, and had a considerable quantity of articles refused. The manufacturer flew into a passion and retired. Did he manage to get some influential person to interest himself in his behalf? However that may be, the first armourer was replaced by another armourer who was less difficult to please, and the rejected articles were accepted. Not long afterwards a member of the Committee of Control was making a tour of inspection in the regiment of armourer No. 1, when he was shown a stirrup which had been broken on duty. The trooper had fallen from his horse owing to this accident, and had been very much hurt. The armourer showed the Controller several other stirrups broken in the same way, and which had formed part of the articles whose rejection he had recommended. The Captain of the squadron in which the accident happened confirmed all that the armourer had said, and reported the facts to Head-quarters. Then followed reports from the various Commanders of Army Corps complaining of the bad material. And there the matter ended." No wonder that the Soir should feel some anxiety lest another war should break out, and the Cavalry be found wanting. A great many French contractors have been recently changed partly for the sake of economy, and partly for political reasons. Why trust Imperialists with the manufacture of Republican breeches?

A French Parliamentary Committee has been overhauling the War Estimates, and trying to induce the War Minister to accept a reduction of over 23,000,000 fr., or nearly £1,000,000. General Campenon refuses a reduction of more than 15,500,000 fr. The War Estimates which the Chamber will be asked to vote, and which they no doubt will vote, amount to 582,631,698 fr., or pretty near to £30,000,000.

The Progrès Militaire publishes a letter from Hanoi which contains an interesting account of the unfortunate Bac Lé affair, when Colonel Dugenne's column was defeated. The whole blame is laid on the staff, which ordered the advance on Langson without reconnoitring the position. The French column, too, was without artillery, and some of the native levies had never been taught to load their rifles before being sent to the front.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Oct. 25, 1884.

Sub-Lieut. the Right Hon. Lord J. C. M. D. Scott has been promoted to the rank of Lieut. in her Majesty's Fleet (Sept. 30, 1883).

COASTGUARD.

Commissioned Boatmen—Edward Jones, Blyth Haven, to be chief boatman, Robin Hood's Bay, vice Watts, promoted; John Kennelly, Ballywalters, to be chief boatman, Cranfield, vice John Morgan, promoted; William A. Wilson, Blyth Haven, to be chief boatman, Coatham, vice White, promoted.

Agamemnon, Capt. Long, is ordered to leave Portsmouth and return to Devonport forthwith. She will be taken into harbour, where all the remaining fittings required will be provided, and probably in about a week the vessel will proceed to her destination, the China station.

Avon, Lieut.-Com. Thompson, will proceed every week during the winter with classes of Royal Naval Reserve men to fire at a target at sea, in addition to her usual coastguard cruises.

Cruiser, Com. H. F. Hughes-Hallett, has been having some defects made good at Malta, prior to further service.

Cygnet, Lieut.-Com. Alexander M. Gardiner, was at Massowah last Tuesday.

Dolphin, Com. S. M. Eardley-Wilmot, was at Massowah on Tuesday last, and will be relieved next week by the Condor.

Dreadnought, Capt. Hon. Edmund R. Freemantle, is under orders to go out of Portsmouth Harbour on the 10th inst. At Spithead she will take in ammunition, and proceed to the Mediterranean to relieve the Inflexible.

Dryad, Capt. Hulton, is to be paid out of commission at Sheerness on the 10th inst., on her return from the East Indies station. A survey of the vessel has proved her to be in a very defective condition and not fit for further service. She is ordered to be dismantled, and to return all her stores. The Dryad is one of the obsolete class of wooden sloops, which have been almost entirely superseded by the composite sloops of the Kingfisher class, and was ordered home from Bombay in July last on account of her unseaworthy condition.

Euryalus, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir W. N. W. Hewett, Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies, will leave Aden for Bombay next week.

Flamingo, Com. Custance, will be paid off at Devonport on Saturday next.

Grappler, Lieut.-Com. Cochran, will convey Sir J. D. Hay—who left England on the 22nd ult.—to Tangier.

Hibernia, flagship of Rear-Admiral W. Graham, C.B., was recently towed up Malta Creek and placed under the dockyard shears to have her masts taken out, and to have two light masts for signalling purposes substituted. In addition to this alteration she has had a new upper deck laid.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, is to be ready to leave Devonport on the 17th. It is understood that she will proceed to China, viâ the Suez Canal.

Icarus, building at Devonport, is progressing rapidly. All the ribs are up, and the inner wrought-iron sheathing is fast covering them over.

Jumna, Capt. Singleton, left Suez on Sunday for Bombay.

Kingfisher, attached to the first division of the Medway Steam Reserve, is to be commissioned at Sheerness on the 11th inst., to reinforce the British Fleet in the East Indies station. She is now undergoing a thorough overhaul and repair.

Lily, Com. Gibson, sailed from Plymouth on Wednesday for the West Indies and North-American stations.

Mutine, Com. F. Edwards, left Victoria (British Columbia) for Metlah-kattah on Wednesday last.

Osprey, Com. Dowding, arrived at Mauritius on Oct. 16 from Madagascar, with the British Consul, for despatches and a conference with the Governor. The French Admiral has returned from the north; he stated that he was unable to move, having no instructions from the French Government. Guns and ammunition have been landed on the west coast by the steamer Normandy at a port overlooked by the French.

Reindeer made a satisfactory trial of her machinery at Keyham on Tuesday. When inspected by Rear-Admiral Brandreth, he expressed himself pleased with the general arrangements, and especially with the simplicity of the machinery, and the accessibility and ease with which all the working parts could be examined. The contractors are placing the same type of engines on board the Mariner and Racer, gun-vessels. On Wednesday the Reindeer steamed out of Devonport Harbour for the trial of her guns. Two rounds were fired from each gun at extreme elevation, and two rounds at the lowest degree of elevation. The trial was most satisfactory. It is expected she will shortly be commissioned.

Ruby, one of the "Gem" class of unarmoured screw corvettes, in the Chatham Steam Reserve, will be hastened forward in the Sheerness steam basin for the purpose of being immediately commissioned.

Scourge, at Devonport, which has been recently fitted as a torpedo instruction ship for officers, as well as for instruction in electric lighting, will be commissioned to-day as a tender to the Cambridge.

Sealark, Lieut.-Com. J. Ferris, and Liberty, Lieut.-Com. Target, were towed up Devonport Harbour on Monday, to lay up for the winter.

Serapis, Capt. Douglas, arrived at Bombay on Wednesday from England.

Tamar, Capt. Warren, got up steam at Devonport on Wednesday for the working of steam cranes and winches, while taking in ballast. She will be taken out of harbour to-day, for the purpose of making a brief trial outside Plymouth Breakwater, under the sole control of her own officers. If this is successful, she will have a three hours' official trial, conducted by the officers of the Steam Reserve. On her return into harbour the Tamar will be swung for the adjustment of her compasses. This will be completed on Monday, and at daylight on Tuesday she will leave for Australia, calling at Portsmouth. Great satisfaction is expressed by the officers of the ship at the order which has been given that their cabins are to be fitted on the same principle as those of military officers.

Temeraire, Capt. Domvile, before leaving Malta for Alexandria had a thorough overhaul and repair of hull, machinery, and masts and yards, together with additional torpedo fittings, and fittings for 4-in. guns. Lieut. Heugh, who had been an invalid at the Naval hospital, took passage in her to rejoin the Falcon.

Tourmaline, Capt. Boyle, arrived at Plymouth on Tuesday, after four years' absence. She was commissioned at Sheerness by Capt. Dennistoun, in Sept. 1880, and formed one of the Detached Squadron which circumnavigated the globe under Admirals Lord Clanwilliam and Sir F. Sullivan; afterwards she was engaged in the operations in Egypt. In Oct., 1882, Capt. Boyle joined, and she was definitely ordered to join the East Indies Fleet. She left Zanzibar on Aug. 6, and has had fair weather on her voyage home. She is said to have covered 72,000 miles during her commission. The Tourmaline will pay off at Sheerness, where she arrived yesterday.

Turquoise, Capt. Woodward, was at Zanzibar on the 16th, and was to visit Madagascar early this month.

Valorous, Capt. Hon. R. Hare, arrived at Plymouth from Ireland on Sunday.

Victoria and Albert, Royal yacht, Capt. J. R. T. Fullerton, made a preliminary trial of her engines on Tuesday in the Solent. During the extensive refit which she has undergone at Portsmouth, she has been provided with a completely new set of boilers, and been fitted for the first time with a steam starting-engine. Messrs. John Penn and Son, the original makers of the engines, have also supplied new cylinders. With this exception, the whole of the work has been executed by the factory department of Portsmouth Dockyard, which was represented on the trial by Mr. Corner. The weather was very boisterous during the run, a gale of wind blowing. The mean pressure of steam in the boilers amounted to 21 lb., and with 21½ revolutions of the engines 2,152 horse-power was developed, which was considered very satisfactory. On Wednesday the Victoria and Albert made an official trial of her machinery at Stokes Bay, traversing the measured mile twice at full speed at 15¼ knots. The yacht then went westward through the Needles and round the Isle of Wight, coming back to the starting-point some few minutes under four hours. At the conclusion of the six hours' run, the patent log registered 91½ miles, her indicated horse-power was 2,369, and her revolutions 22 to the minute.

Woodlark, Com. Anthony Kingscote, was recently at Malta, under orders to hold herself in readiness to proceed to the Persian Gulf.

Wye, Staff Com. Miller, arrived at Madeira on Wednesday last.

SQUADRON NEWS.

Mediterranean.—The Iris left Malta on Tuesday for Marseilles. The following vessels were at Suez on the 13th ult.:—Sphinx, Coquette, Caryfort, Albacore, Tyne, and Humber. Albacore, on being relieved by Dolphin, is to proceed to Alexandria. Dolphin expected to arrive at Suakim from Massowah. Condor and Cygnet were at Massowah on above date.

East Indies.—The Serapis arrived at Bombay on Oct. 29. The Euryalus will leave Aden for Bombay next week. The Arab returns shortly to Zeyla from Aden. The Ranger was to leave Aden for Bombay on Oct. 16 to be docked and refitted. The Briton is at Bombay undergoing repairs. The Dragon still remains in the Persian Gulf. The Osprey is at the Island of Madagascar. The Philomel has been ordered up from Muscat to Aden. The Decoy has gone to Berberah. The Commander-in-Chief leaves Aden for Bombay to-day.

Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa.—The Boadicea, bearing flag of Com.-in-Chief, was at Simon's Bay on the 8th ult. The Goshawk was at Simon's Bay on same date, and remains. The Opal, Frolic, and Stork were at St. Helena on Sept. 20, cruising; due at Cape Coast Castle on 20th inst. The Opal proceeds to Australia, viâ Tristran d'Acunha and the Cape when relieved by the Rapid; and the Stork will proceed to the South-east Coast of Africa on relief by the Watchful. The Alecto was at Lagos on Aug. 13; she was to convey H.M.'s Consul up the Niger in the middle of September. The Sylvia was on surveying service on the South-east Coast of Africa.

South-East Coast of America.—The Amethyst was at Maranham on Sept. 27; she was to proceed to Bermuda to be docked. The Ready was at the Falkland Islands on the 1st ult. The Wrangler was at Maranham on Sept. 27, proceeding to ports on coast of Brazil.

North America and West Indies.—The Bullfrog was at Montego Bay on the 9th ult., cruising round the island of Jamaica, and was to return to Port Royal on the 17th.

Pacific.—The Sappho was at Coquimbo on Aug. 28, and was expected at Valparaiso on Sept. 18. The Pelican was at Callao on Sept. 11, and remains.

William Henry McVittie, A.B. (rigger), of the Osborne; George P. Gillard, ropemaker, of the Britannia; J. Stapleton, leading stoker, of the Indus; F. W. Ball, captain of the quarter-deck, of the Cambridge; Henry Kemble, A.B., of the Duke of Wellington; Henry N. Twomey, William Henry Lucas, Thomas Perry, and Benjamin Pearce, boatmen, of the Coastguard, have been awarded the long-service and good-conduct medal.

The necessity of establishing telegraphic communication with the lighthouse on Tory Island was referred to by Mr. Lea in the House of Commons on Thursday, who asked the President of the Board of Trade a question on the subject. Mr. Chamberlain replied that Tory Island had upwards of 300 inhabitants, and was nearly 800 acres in extent. The question of telegraphic communication was one rather for the consideration of the Postmaster-General than for the lighthouse authorities.

The death of James B. McLernon, A.B., of H.M.S. Briton, who was killed at Tamanieb while endeavouring to save the life of the lieutenant of his ship, has been commemorated at Coleraine by the erection of a handsome brass mounted on a dove slab, executed by Mr. Gawthorp, of Long Acre, London.

London Amusements.

The close of the Health Exhibition will relieve managers from a competition that, during the summer at least, somewhat seriously affected their receipts.

The Lyceum, after being closed during the week for night rehearsals, will be reopened this (Saturday) evening with an elaborate revival of "Romeo and Juliet," in which Miss Mary Anderson will appear as Juliet.

On Tuesday "Our Boys" was repeated at the Strand Theatre for the 150th time. At Toole's Theatre the burlesque of "Our Babes" has now passed its 50th night.

An enormous audience attended the Military Concert given at Covent Garden Theatre in commemoration of the battle of Balaclava. On Monday evening the entire receipts of a special promenade concert were given by the lessee, Mr. W. F. Thomas, in aid of the Licensed Victuallers' School and the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum.

The Olympic stage is now occupied by a model of the Temple and City of Jerusalem, as they are supposed to have existed twenty-five centuries ago; and the Rev. J. T. Rupert delivers an explanatory lecture. The exhibition is not without a certain kind of interest, but it is quite out of place in a theatre.

The commencement of the winter season at the Haymarket is fixed for Saturday, Nov. 8, when "Diplomacy," produced at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Jan. 12, 1878, will be transferred to this stage.

Mr. J. L. Toole, prolonging his tour in the provinces, will not appear in London till Easter Monday, when he produces a comedy written by the late Mr. H. J. Byron.

At the Royalty the autumn season of French plays is being successfully continued, and the comedy of "Divorçons," by Sardou and Najac, has been added to the programme. The last performances are announced of Mdlle. Jane May.

Mr. Bronson Howard's American comedy of "Young Mrs. Winthrop" is in active rehearsal at the Court Theatre, and a special engagement has been made with Miss Lydia Foote.

At the Grand Theatre, Islington, Mr. George Darrell successfully made, on Monday night, his first appearance in England as the hero of his own play, called "The Sunny South," originally produced at the Opera House, Melbourne, in March last year.

The Avenue Theatre will be opened next week with a new drama by Mr. F. C. Burnand, entitled, "Just in Time." The prominent character is played by the popular comedian, Mr. John S. Clarke.

Morning performances are given this day (Saturday) at the Gaiety, Strand, Vaudeville, Globe, Opera Comique, the Prince's, Criterion, Toole's, the Savoy, and the Novelty Theatres.

Vice-Admiral Sir William M. Dowell, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief on the China station, was, on the 25th ult., about to leave Amoy for Shanghai, calling at Wenchow.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—THE GREAT NEED.—The blood is the life, and on its purity depends our health, if not our existence. These Pills thoroughly cleanse this vital fluid from all contaminations, and by that power strengthen and invigorate the whole system, healthily stimulate sluggish organs, repress over-excited action, and establish order of circulation and secretion throughout every part of the body. The balsamic nature of Holloway's Pills commends them to the favour of debilitated and nervous constitutions which they soon resuscitate. They dislodge all obstructions, both in the bowels and elsewhere, and are, on that account, much sought after for promoting regularity of action in young females and delicate persons who are naturally weak, or who from some cause have become so.

Courses for all Examinations now proceeding.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS. — LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA PREPARING for the MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath, whose pupils for some years past have continuously maintained a steady average of success, second to none. This year fifteen have been sent up, seven of whom have passed; four in March (one taking first place on the list), and three at the recent Examination. Very few pupils are taken, and there are two resident Military Instructors of high qualifications constantly at work, with a third in reserve in case of pressure. Thus very great individual attention is guaranteed, and the system of lecturing classes entirely avoided. Batcombe is a country village, near no town, but affording opportunity for shooting and other healthy amusements in moderation. References are permitted to the Earl of Harewood, Sir John Adye, G.C.B., General Elmhirst, C.B., General Thompson (late 7th Dragoon Guards), Colonel A. H. King, R.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, the Bishop of Bedford, and many others, all parents or near relatives of successful pupils.

SANDHURST and WOOLWICH.—(Candidates for the Final Examinations preferred.)—A FRENCH and ENGLISH UNIVERSITY MAN, late Modern Language Master in Haileybury, Wellington, and Winchester Colleges, prepares Twelve Pupils for the above. Idle or disorderly fellows particularly objected to. Local reference to Colonel H. P. Montgomery, late commanding Rifle Depôt; or to Lieutenant-Colonel C. T. Bunbury, late Rifle Brigade. Names of successful Pupils and other particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL, Wellington House, Winchester.

CONNAUGHT MILITARY COLLEGE,

Principal—SAMUEL H. WINTER.

The Pupils of this Establishment have been uniformly successful. In July, 1882, Mr. F. Close was SECOND on the Woolwich List, being FIRST in Mathematics; in July, 1883, Mr. G. Close was TENTH and Mr. R. F. Edwards TWELFTH, all at their first trial. Mr. Winter has prepared more than 200 Pupils for various Military Examinations.

MILITIA ARMY COMPETITIVE.—Captain HAYES, late R.A., PREPARES MILITIA SUBALTERNS for above Examination. During last four years he has passed more than half the number sent up.—Address, Junior Army and Navy Club, St. James's Street, S.W.

ARMY.—LINE and MILITIA.

IMPORTANT to STUDENTS.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS.

Lieutenant-Colonel G. M. CARDEW (passed second from Staff College) PREPARES SIX PUPILS for MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION. Also Officers for Promotion, &c.—14 Observatory Avenue, Kensington. In July, five passed out of six; in September, three passed out of four.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS and GENERAL EDUCATION.—AVRANCHES.—A GENTLEMAN, for many years successfully engaged in preparing Candidates for the Military Competitive Examination and Universities, wishes to RECEIVE PUPILS. Great facilities for acquiring the French language. Terms moderate. Highest references to Parents and Guardians of former Pupils, and to Clergymen and Country Gentlemen.—Apply to Captain CHAWNER, Bois-Guerin, Val-St.-Père, Avranches.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS.—Mr. J. WINDER, M.A., Cranworth House, Eastbourne, Sussex, PREPARES SEVEN PUPILS for WOOLWICH and SANDHURST. Special Masters for French, German, and Science. In 1880, of FOUR Candidates for Woolwich, ALL of whom passed, one was 6th and another 29th. In 1883, of THREE Candidates for Sandhurst, TWO were successful.

KING EDWARD VI.'s SCHOOL, BERKHAMSTED, HERTS, 28 miles from Euston.—Twenty-seven School Scholarships. Four Exhibitions from the School. Laboratory, heated Swimming Bath, Fives Courts, &c. — Address, HEAD MASTER.

MILITIA CANDIDATES for the LINE.—TUITION in MILITARY SUBJECTS for the COMPETITIVE ARMY EXAMINATION.

Lieutenant-Colonel FITZROY WILSON, late Rifle Brigade, a Graduate of the Staff College, and afterwards Garrison Instructor of the Eastern District, offers the above. Careful individual attention. A Class now at work for the March Examination. References permitted to Colonel Aylmer, S. Cameron V.C., Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. (Intelligence Branch), War Office; and Colonel C. W. Robinson, Rifle Brigade, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., Aldershot.

For prospectus, containing terms, testimonials and references, address, East Bergholt, Colchester.

SOUTH COAST. — PREPARATORY SCHOOL.—Mr. H. N. TRAVERS RECEIVES a LIMITED NUMBER of Gentlemen's Sons to PREPARE them for the Public Schools. Well-appointed house, facing the sea. Indian and delicate children receive every care. Reasonable terms. References to Noblemen and others.—Address, Pennington House, Bognor.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE ONLY.—Captain H. D. EVANS, late R.A., PREPARES FOUR PUPILS (limit five) for the above

SUCCESSES.

In the last four Examinations, Captain Evans has passed seven officers, and only three (two still reading) have failed. In addition, three officers passed the Literary, one being first on list.—Address, Trenant Park, Duloe, R.S.O., Cornwall.

HINDUSTANI TAUGHT, Cito, Tuto, Jucunde. Officers prepared for Examinations. Correct Idiom guaranteed.—PUNDIT, 7 Beechholme Road, Clapton.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

The undersigned PREPARES a LIMITED NUMBER of PUPILS (Five) for the above. Successes in March, 1883,—two, one taking the second place (first try); in September, 1883—two, Fowle, 25 (first try); Moir, 27. At the March Examination, 1884, one pupil competed, A. H. Robinson, passing 1st for Cavalry, with 2,018 marks, after four months' work.

Officers prepared for the Promotion Examination. Terms moderate.—Apply, Captain H. C. KING, 13 Blomfield Street, Westbourne Terrace, W.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL.—Earl of DEVON.
HEAD MASTER.—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll. Camb. (appointed, 1875.)
TWELVE RESIDENT MASTERS.—First-Class Honour Men are at the Head of each Department.

The New Buildings lately built accommodate 200 boys, to which number from its present limit of 150 it is proposed to increase the School. The advantages offered are—

1. A large staff of Masters, of undoubted calibre and experience, so that the teaching is careful and thorough.
2. Small Classes so that all can be taught properly.
3. Supervision in study to prevent idleness as far as possible.
4. Complete subdivision into Classical and Modern Sides, Non-Latin Divisions, Junior and Preparatory Schools; so that boys can take up any branch of education, scientific or otherwise, and be thoroughly taught in it.
5. Large airy class-rooms where teaching is carried on at the least pressure to master and boy.
6. Excellent situation and playing fields, large swimming-bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, &c., with all kinds of appliances for keeping boys employed and so out of mischief.
7. A system of Scholarships, entrance and others, open to all.
8. A regular succession of annual public Examinations, so that parents can judge for themselves how their sons stand in comparison with those from other schools.
9. Comfortable and well-arranged accommodation, &c., in the houses, &c.
10. Opportunity for that friendly intercourse between Masters and Boys in out-of-door games, which is so conducive to the good tone of a school.
11. The Head Master has had great experience in dealing with delicate boys, and makes special arrangement for those who desire school life and yet require careful watching.
12. Army Candidates trained without the aid of a Crammer, if entered in fair time.
13. The Preparatory School is specially provided for in a separate House, with Fives' Courts of its own, &c.

The School offers SPECIAL TERMS to the Sons of Clergy, Officers, Professional Men, &c., and the fact that Six Entrance Scholarships have been won since 1882 at Winchester and Marlborough bears testimony to its excellence in the Preparatory School, while the List of other Honours is no less satisfactory.

ARMY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.—SIX MILITIA OFFICERS are carefully PREPARED by two experienced Retired Officers, at WIDEY COTTAGE, Plymouth. Established 1879. Over 50 per cent. of those who have gone up from here have passed into the Army.—For particulars, apply to Major LETTS, as above.

A. J. Windebank, Esq., Chanda House, Fratton Street, Portsmouth, December 22, 1883:—"Watch, chain, and ring to hand. I am very much pleased with their appearance, the watch especially looking a very strong, handsome one, and equal to many I have seen at double the money."

Mr. H. A. Illingworth, 82 Queen Street, Batley, March 7, 1884:—"After four years' trial of one of your 25s. watches, I now desire to express my thanks for the same. During all the time I have had it I have not paid one halfpenny for repairs. It is as good to-day as ever. When I have shown it to my friends, they have valued it at double and frequently at treble the money. To those who wish to possess a cheap, good, everyday watch, I especially recommend the above."

BIG GAME RIFLES.

·360, ·400, ·450, ·500, & ·577, Double Express, £25.

From A. H. Macartney, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. Shubrick, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

IN our remarks on the Report of the Committee on the Commissariat and Transport services in the Egyptian campaign of 1882, we referred to the difficulty of considering its bearing, without entering upon the second part of the inquiry, viz., "What changes, if any, are required to secure increased efficiency in these services?" For many instances of failure are boldly denied to be such by the War Office, which supports the defence by declaring that the tardiness, the insufficiency, or the inapplicability which is complained of was intentional and defensible on grounds of economy or expediency. This line of argument was taken throughout the evidence of General Sir John Adye. It was, perhaps, natural that the officer responsible as Surveyor-General for the preparations for the war, should, as Chief of the Staff, declare the preparations made by himself in another character had been complete. Men are apt to put up with hardships brought about by their own acts when they would strongly resent the same inconveniences if caused by others. The easy and graceful way in which Sir John Adye made light of bad flour and the want of lamps, by declaring that he preferred biscuits to bread, and an empty bottle to a candlestick, is an illustration of this natural law. And as with these, so with other failures; the want of clothing, of labour, of wharves, of railway gear, and vehicles, all chargeable to the parsimony or ignorance of the Surveyor-General's Department. The declaration of the head of the office under accusation that these things were not required is simply worthless; it flies into the air when weighed against the opinion of the most insignificant witness who gave unprejudiced testimony to the difficulties and hardships experienced on the spot. There is another defence which, though more specious, is equally worthless — "How could it be helped?" It is the story of the woman who, when upbraided for not returning her neighbour's kettle, first said it was worn out, then that she had returned it, and lastly that she had never had it. If we look at the defence of the Supply Department on the points under inquiry, it bears a strong resemblance to the replies of that shifty old woman. Let us begin this week by taking the flour as an instance. What is the first excuse? "It wasn't my fault, it was Commissary-General Watt who inspected it;" a point-blank denial was given to that. Then it was Commissary-General Morris; unfortunately, it turned out that he was not there. "It does not matter, then," says Sir John, "I like biscuits better than bread." "Why, then, did you put the country to the expense of sending out (bad) flour and all the impedimenta of steam bakeries?" "It couldn't be helped; it was the climate; or, at all events, it was the broker's fault." But the real question at issue is, — Who was responsible for the failure?—nay, who is responsible?—for the inquiry still remains to be answered, if the safety of the Army is to be secured for the future. First, what was this failure? In Appendix No. 2, page 490, we find the following telegram from Chief of the Staff, Ismailia, to War Minister, London, dated August 31, 1882:—"Flour per Osprey utterly unfit for use; it was apparently never good. It is now heated and very bad; loss may be taken at 200,000 lb. weight." The reply to this telegram, which is the following paper of the same Appendix, is from War Secretary, London, to Chief of Staff, Ismailia, September 1:—"Flour in Osprey of brand specially selected for keeping quality, and independent dock officials went over it in detail and certified as to its condition before shipment. The bulk samples have been to-day examined and are in perfect condition." In Appendix 26 will be found a letter from the Chief of the Staff, dated September 8 (and what makes the appearance of this letter in Appendix 26 remarkable is the fact that when the direction of the Committee that the whole correspondence relating to this flour should be put in was given, this damning letter was omitted by Mr. Brand in handing in the papers included in Appendix 2, and was only drawn after repeated application at the end of the Committee's session), which repeats the telegram of August 31, acknowledges the reply of September 1, and adds "the cargo ex Empusa has now been landed, and is found to be in little or no better condition than that ex Osprey. The flour from these two ships is utterly destroyed; the greater proportion of it has arrived in hard solid blocks, the whole contents of the sack being, in many cases, an unbroken lump. The appearance of these consignments would certainly lead to the belief that the whole of the flour had suffered in its shipment from the United States to England, had I not the assurance that it was examined in detail prior to reshipment. The main cargo of the Whitley is over the flour. A single sack has been got at, and though it is not caked it is lumpy, and being, apparently, flour of the same kind as that in the other ships, though, perhaps, a little staler, I fear that the bulk will be found to be as bad." This letter is signed, "John Adye, Chief of the Staff," the witness who before the Committee replied to question 3,069, "It (the bread) appeared to be bad and heavy, but I do not think it was unwholesome." After this, we suppose, without further reference to the reports of the Boards of Surveys (in the appendices) which condemned these consignments, and under which the flour was sold at a nominal price for conversion into starch (answer No. 280), it may be taken for granted that this flour at least was a failure. Now, what is the history of its purchase? Commissary-General Watt (Appendix 31) says:—"I urged that flour should be supplied from Marseilles and Trieste, which descriptions I had proved, especially the latter, to keep fairly well at Gibraltar; and I most emphatically affirm that I never did concur, nor would have concurred, in a dependence on American flour alone. I think that there could not be a better illustration of the inconvenience and unfairness of the present distribution of duties than the fact that because the Commissary-General at head-quarters is supposed to have given an opinion in favour of the quality of a few ounces of flour in a blue paper, of which he heard nothing further, and had no further concern, that any responsibility should be thrown upon him because two cargoes of flour, supposed to have corresponded in quality with the sample, arrived at their destination in bad condition. Directly I heard of the complaint, I urged Mr. Lawson to telegraph that a sack of the flour should be sent home, which advice was unfortunately not followed." There is in this memorandum of Mr. Watt's another curious paragraph:—"When the complaint came from Egypt, Mr. Lawson sent for the sample, showed it me, and said that Commissary-General Morris had approved it. I immediately wrote to Commissary-General Morris on the subject." What this officer said is to be found in reply to question No. 857,—"Did you know before you left for Egypt that American flour had been selected for that service?—No, I did not. I did not know what kind it was. You knew nothing about it?—No." But we have positive confirmation of the denial by these Commissariat officers that they passed the samples of flour, in Mr. Lawson's reply, 8,250, that of the only four samples ever taken to the War Office two were selected, and in Appendix 2 where we see that of these two, after being approved by those officials, one was rejected by the broker, and that flour of four other brands was sent out by him (see Appendix 2, Nos. 2, 5, and 15). This flour thus bought without Government inspection was supplied without Government inspection, packed in sacks instead of in barrels, as for Naval use. No test of moisture was attempted (reply of Mr. Lawson, 8,252), though the smallest experience would have taught its necessity. And when this flour arrived in Egypt, and the report of its condition was received in the War Office, what steps were taken? We see what was said to the Chief of the Staff, but did this telegram represent a true state of facts? In the face of Commissary-General Watt's opinion, was this flour selected for its keeping quality? Does the certificate at p. 491, that "1,632 bags of flour were delivered in good condition to Keen's craft," substantiate the statement that dock officials went over it in detail? We think not. But the most serious error is in the assertion that "the bulk samples have been this day (September 1) examined;" whilst in No. 16 of the same Appendix we find the broker's memorandum that, on the 7th of that month, they had learnt through the Times that the flour was bad. The bulk samples which were in his possession had certainly not been examined then. More than this, in Mr. Lawson's cross-examination by Dr. Cameron, there appears the following (7,099):—"Were they (the samples) analysed or investigated when you got the complaints?—We desired to do so, and to get the bulk samples; but they had been laying about" (the witness shirks the correct word "lying") "quite open and exposed to the dust, and the War Department chemist said they were not fair samples,—they were not big enough samples to test." And again, in his answer to 7,744 and following numbers, Mr. Lawson admits that he never saw the bulk samples, and that they were never examined by any one but the broker, and the broker had certainly not examined them when the letter was written. Who, we ask, is responsible for this telegram to Egypt, intended, no doubt, to stop any further inquiry?—inquiry which must have brought out the manner in which the purchase was made—inquiry which, if the sample sack had been telegraphed for, as Mr. Watt advised, would perhaps have proved the surmise of the Chief of the Staff to be true,—that the flour was never good, but was damaged prior to its shipment from England, and not a sixpence of the loss thus occasioned to the public has ever been recovered (7,776), nor, so far as we can judge from the defence, has any one been blamed for a transaction which, even if it stood alone as a solitary proof of failure—to call it nothing worse—ought to condemn the organisation under which it took place and under which it has escaped punishment. Escaped punishment, did we say? The directors of the Supply Department are Companions of the Bath!

MR. W. H. SMITH has contributed to the controversy—or shall we say the discussion?—respecting the state of the Navy, a paper to the present number of the National Review, which is entitled to the respect due to the published opinions of an ex-Secretary of State, who sat at the head of the Board at Whitehall. It is a new thing for Ministers of State to contribute articles to newspapers and magazines over their own signatures, —that is, it is only within the last decade or so that it has become almost a recognised practice. But the clandestine correspondence and illicit intercourse of statesmen with the Press commenced many years ago, and was for a long time continued under circumstances of difficulty, and not without a certain sense of guilt on both sides. Mr. Smith brought to the charge of his department a clear intellect, habits of business, and power of work which went far to enable him to discharge his normal duties with success; and if his administration of the Navy was not marked by any great innovation or startling coup de terre, it was eminently safe and responsible. On him as the First Lord of a Conservative administration laid a heavy responsibility, for he was bound to observe the most rigid economy in order to meet the invidious invective and jealous scrutiny of political opponents, who attribute a love of wicked waste to the followers of Lord Beaconsfield, and, at the same time, he had to make up for the effects of negligence, parsimonious, or ill-judged administration on the part of his predecessors. The bold and active policy of the Government of which he was a member called for the development of the best qualities in our officers, and rendered it desirable to have an efficient Fleet and Army. But we do not think that there has been any very great change recently to authorise any First Lord belonging to a past administration to attack his successors with want of diligence, and for neglecting the true interests of the service. In the historical sketch of the conditions under which the Navy fought before the introduction of steam and armour, Mr. Smith seems to us to have somewhat exaggerated the manual skill and dexterity for which the British sailor was famed, when he says they handled the ships better and fought them with greater skill than their enemies. It is a fact which any student can ascertain for himself, by turning to the pages of the histories which record our battles with the Dutch, the Spaniards, the French, and the Americans, that we did not on all occasions exhibit more skill in handling our ships; and there are several remarkable illustrations of the ability displayed by our adversaries in successfully manœuvring for the weather-gauge. Nevertheless, in the outcome, —although our ships were often improved on models taken from the French, and were inferior to the American-built vessels in which we had such serious engagements in the last war,—the result gave no maritime supremacy. Mr. Smith recalls the proud, if somewhat windy, boast of Mr. Childers in 1874, just ten years ago, that we could at twenty-four hours' notice hold our own without an ally against the three principal Maritime Powers with any ally in the Channel, the Mediterranean, and on the ocean highways, to which he added prophecy that in six months we should have gained complete command of the sea, and have ruined the commerce of all of our opponents. Very different from the tone of this triumphant vaunt was the accent of Sir Thomas Brassey when he confessed his faith to be that we could not prevent a large portion of our trade from finding safety under neutral flags in time of war, because the country would not approve in time of peace of the construction of a sufficient number of competent ships to protect our commerce all over the world. It may be questioned whether Mr. Smith is quite wise in placing on his high authority, under the eyes of our possible enemies, such a clear statement of the present position of our forces at sea, as he has set forth in the National Review. Without at all deprecating the alarm which has been created in respect to our defences, or casting a drop of cold water on the warm and enthusiastic impulses which have led the country to expect a large accession of ships and men to our Navy, we may ask what is the combination which might be effected to give us trouble in the Mediterranean or elsewhere? It is always expressed, rather than understood, that from France would come the initiative for the action of two or three fleets against the Navy of Great Britain; but at the present moment, France has apparently quite enough to do in China and at Madagascar, and in the Mediterranean, and there does not seem any possibility of a propitious moment for the employment of her forces in a war with England, should she be so minded, likely for a long time to come. A union with the Fleet of Germany would, we take it, be an impossibility. Nor is there any evidence of such a unity of interests and sentiments as would lead to the combination of the Fleet of Italy with that of France. It does not seem very probable that Russia, in its present state of partial development, would trust its Navy, in combination with that of its old enemy, to a struggle for the empire of the seas, which might lead to the restoration of the clause of the Treaty of Paris from which she emancipated herself by the renunciation of 1870. But the unlikely and the unforeseen are to be guarded against, and there is quite enough of danger in the facts disclosed by Mr. Smith, in the articles and speeches with which the Press has been flooded, and in the common knowledge and acknowledgment of officers of the service, and of Naval authorities, past and present, to make the Government at once appease the alarm and anxiety which exists by setting to work diligently and immediately to place the Navy on a basis of solid security, and to give the Empire assurance of its safety by full provision of ships and men to meet all reasonable contingencies, and probable, if not possible, eventualities. Lord Northbrook is expected to-night at the Admiralty. In addition to the duties devolving upon him as High Commissioner for Egypt, he will find a great mass of weighty business ready for his investigation in connection with the Navy. The news from the Nile respecting the small boats shows that they are carried with ease from one part of the river to the other; but we do not find any trace of their being used as row-boats, pure and simple, hitherto; and if the quantity of transport-power wasted in towing them up, in railway-carriage, &c., be taken into account, we think it will be found that the objections we urged against the use of these boats on such a river as the Nile, where any quantity of native sail-boats are available, were valid. Should they even be got up to Khartoum, which we doubt very much, they will, however, be useful in enabling the garrison and Egyptians to scuttle down the river. The difficulty which is looming in South Africa every day will not certainly be diminished if Sir C. Warren is sent out without an adequate force to insist upon the Ultimatum of the Queen's Government being accepted. The preparations which are spoken of indicate an increase to the present meagre establishment at the Cape and Natal of four battalions; but as yet we do not observe any enthusiastic movement in the Cape to support the action of the Colonial Office, which, under the ill-omened administration of Lord Kimberley, laid the foundation of many troubles. One great want is a powerful and efficient frontier police, which shall be numerous enough to afford protection to all the people living within the British line of boundary, to prevent marauders crossing it from the other side, and to punish cattle-stealing, theft, and illegal irruption. But before such a force can be established, it will be necessary to place the relations of all the States—British, Protected, and Boer—on a well-understood basis, which shall be maintained at all hazards. The Boers, unfortunately, are exceedingly ignorant. Their manner of life, as the pioneers of the European immigration in South Africa, have made them regardless of the rights of others, especially those whose skin differs in colour from their own; and their recent successes have given them an exaggerated idea of their own power. But they must, if necessary, be taught that Great Britain and its Colonies have rights and duties in South Africa as well as the Dutchmen of the Orange River Free State, or of the South African Republic. Whether, however, it would be wise to erect a number of small chiefs into quasi-protected potentates, each of whom might exclaim, "Civis Romanus sum!" and invoke British protection when about to be punished for any indulgence in predatory habits, may well be doubted. It is certain to be a costly policy to somebody, if thoroughly carried out.

MR. H. O. Arnold-Forster may or may not be an authority upon Naval matters; but in his article, "The People of England versus the Naval Officials," in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, he certainly has put what would be a very strong case indeed against those servants of the public. He says, in effect, that they have left the country and all which it inherits at the mercy of foreign Powers—as it is at this moment,—that they have brought us to a condition of doubtful superiority to one Power; that, being the trustees of a great Colonial Empire, they have refused to take the ordinary precautions for its defence; and that, having the finest matériel in the world, they have failed to provide the adequate personnel for manning the Fleet. But with all our desire to see an efficient Navy, and our readiness to admit that it is not sufficient, we must say, Mr. Forster does not appear to us to put the saddle on the right horse, when he rides it to death, and that he has made a mistake in the animal which he has selected for punishment. Who are the Naval Officials? Well, there is the First Lord of the Admiralty, and there is a Board of officers and of civilians employed under him arranging the affairs of the Navy. Is it those who are meant, one and all? But the First Lord is alone responsible to Parliament, and, therefore, it seems that, in common justice to those who are under him, no charge should be made against them for neglect of duty, unless it can be conclusively proved that they have not represented to their chief the deficiencies in their several departments, or that they have not shown the ability in administration in their several ways which should have ensured us properly-constructed ships, and guns, and men required in time of peace and war. What have the Naval officials to do—if by the word we mean the Lords of the Admiralty and the heads of Departments at Whitehall—with the armaments of our ports and coaling stations? It may be that they have been from time to time urging in the strongest way the necessity of doing the things which they are accused of neglecting, but which they had not the power of performing! They can only "represent"—they cannot spend sixpence! Under the present system, the First Lord of the Admiralty is now, as he has been for several generations past, the one responsible man, the "one" Naval official who is answerable before the country for the condition of the Navy. What Mr. W. H. Smith or Lord Northbrook may say or may write in regard to the impediments they had or will have to encounter in compelling the Treasury, by the pressure of Cabinet Councils, to place the Navy in a state beyond any doubt or cavil, not merely of present equality but of assured predominancy in years to come, no matter how fast our rivals may build or how largely they may spend, may or may not be accepted as explanations for defects—nothing more. But, in fact, it is the country that is to blame in the end, as it is the first to suffer. Will the country—that is, the House of Commons—support any Chancellor of the Exchequer or any Lord of the Treasury in resisting the demand of the responsible Minister of Marine, when he asks for money for the Fleet, unless it is clearly and incontestably evident that he is asking for monstrous and utterly exaggerated estimates? In order to show that the Minister has not failed in his duty, if the Navy be in a bad way, it must be in evidence that all those on whose opinion he depends for assistance and stimulation were quite content with matters as they were, as they are, and as they are likely to be. But when Mr. Campbell-Bannerman or Sir Thomas Brassey, in or out of their places, make, in their subordinate capacity, reassuring statements, one must attribute to them not, indeed, the cackle of irresponsible frivolity, but the sense of speaking in an official manner without incurring the enormous burdens which devolve upon the man who alone can answer, and is bound to answer, to the Queen and to the Empire for the condition of the Fleet. Whether it is right that so much power and so much responsibility should be left to any one man—he almost necessarily a civilian—is a matter to be deeply weighed by those who are charged with considerations affecting the administration of the great departments of State. But if the two great parties will insist upon competition in paring down the estimates, and if Liberals and Conservatives alike make it a crime on the part of their adversaries to add to the national charges, no matter on what grounds, the only appeal against such a vicious procedure must be to the good-sense and patriotism of the country at the elections, which shall receive the assurances of contending candidates that they are ready to cut down the national charges with the cry,—"Is our Navy sufficiently strong to guarantee the integrity of our Empire? Is our Army sufficiently well organised to meet in every direction the strain which Empire imposes upon us?"

AN important addition to the Royal Navy has been made by the launch of the unarmoured corvette Pylades at Sheerness. This war-vessel will be the most powerful of her class at present constructed, both in armament and speed, and it must be satisfactory, now that the condition of the Navy is occupying so much attention, for the Admiralty to be enabled to assert that within a few weeks two most valuable war-ships have been launched. The Rodney and the Pylades represent distinct types of Naval architecture, each being urgently needed to augment the strength of the Navy, and bring it up to the required standard. The Pylades, although designated an unarmoured cruiser, is efficiently protected, and is a vessel of an especially valuable class, the numbers of which will, it may be anticipated, rapidly increase. A protected ship is now understood to be one in which a strong steel deck sheltering the vitals from shells and machine-gun fire is carried from stem to stern, defending the magazines, boilers, steam pipes, steering gear, and other vulnerable parts. All the latest improvements of shipbuilding science, including the electric machinery for discharging the spar-torpedo, will be fitted to the new vessel, which, when ready for sea, will be as compact and complete a cruiser as there is afloat, "to give security to our commerce and protect the Empire in the event of war." While the necessity of constructing first-class armour-clad ships has been admitted, fast cruisers, properly built and armed, have a very wide field of usefulness, and ought not to be placed in a secondary rank of importance, therefore the Pylades is a most desirable addition to the British Navy. Not only are vessels of this class valuable for destroying an enemy's privateers, and crippling his commerce, but they would be of the greatest possible utility in augmenting the strength of our Naval forces on distant stations suddenly menaced. The Pylades combines good sailing qualities with a high rate of speed under steam, and possesses special facilities for the storage of fuel, which will enable her to make long voyages without calling at coaling-stations. The range of the new vessel's guns will be equal to any afloat, and this fact justifies the supposition that, should she ever be destined to engage an ironclad, the lesser ship, carrying a greater number of guns, might seriously damage the large armour-clad, and perhaps cripple her altogether. Taking into consideration the possibility of events arising which it is hoped will never occur, it is certain that vessels of the class represented by the Pylades and the Caroline, launched at Sheerness about two years since, contribute to supply a pressing requirement. While England will continue to construct first-class ironclads, notwithstanding their acknowledged drawbacks and their great individual cost, a modern fleet cannot be composed of ironclads alone; on the contrary, there is no doubt that the most efficient and powerful combination will be obtained by the association with the ironclads of numerous swift, small vessels. A large increase in the numbers of the protected-cruiser type is at once required; and on this point there is unanimity of opinion. The Navy, it is admitted, must be strengthened by the construction of these vessels, none of which, however, would be of great size or considerable cost, as compared with an ironclad even of the second-class. More vessels of the Pylades type should be laid down, and pushed forward as rapidly as possible, good designs being available; and, as we have stated, no difference of opinion exists as to their necessity. At present, we possess few protected or partially protected vessels, and there are but few in hand. Referring to the strong steel decks of protected ships, it is surprising that the efficiency of this defence has not been practically tested. Experiments might be made with advantage, and when we remember the trial some years since of Captain Cowper Coles's turrets on board the Royal Sovereign, the easy practicability of testing the merits of the steel deck becomes apparent. The Bellerophon fired at one of the turrets of the Royal Sovereign, the result being that, although much disabled, it revolved, and an important question that had arisen was satisfactorily settled. Unarmoured cruisers are of comparatively recent date, the destructive career of the Alabama having led to the design of the Wampanoag class of swift, heavily unarmoured vessels, a number of which were laid down in 1863. These vessels, unlike the new corvette Pylades, ran great risks from shell-fire, their vitals having no shelter except that obtained by placing them below the water-line. They were essentially commerce destroyers, capable of engaging any unarmoured ships, their speed enabling them to avoid action with armoured ships. Although some authorities considered that these cruisers might venture to engage armoured ships at long range, the balance of opinion was antagonistic to this view. The introduction of the class above-named led to the construction of the Inconstant and the swift corvettes Volage and Active. Ten years since a number of "the swift, unarmoured cruiser class," having speeds of from fifteen to seventeen knots per hour, and displacements of from 3,000 to 5,000 tons, were added to the Royal Navy. There are now, in good condition, the Inconstant, Shah, Raleigh, Boadicea, Bacchante, Euryalus, Rover, Active, and Volage, all of which have proved "entirely successful, while their prototypes of the Wampanoag class have either proved signal failures, or been left to rot upon the stocks." Other nations quickly constructed swift unarmoured cruisers, but before the latest examples of this class were far advanced, the wisdom of building vessels destitute of protection was challenged, the result being that competing designs were submitted for vessels of moderate size, high speed, and powerful armaments, in which protection was afforded against shell-fire to the vital parts of the ships. The Russian naval authorities took the first practical steps in this direction. The necessity for protecting the vitals of a war-ship, even if her armaments were left unprotected, had been prominently brought forward before the Admiralty Committee on Designs for Ships of War in 1871, Admirals Eliot and Ryder having strongly advocated the use of the "protective deck," instead of thick side-armour. The Comus class of corvettes in the Royal Navy, launched in 1878, are the first examples of the "partially protected" class. They proved very successful in the distant foreign services for which they were designed; but they were not intended, nor are they adapted, as swift cruisers. The Leander class was especially designed for that service. This type of war vessel has formed the basis of the design for the partially protected cruisers Chicago, Boston, and Atalanta, now completing for the United States Navy. The Chicago is an enlarged Leander, with the same protection and more powerful armament. The present expenditure upon ships of moderate size and of high speed is exceedingly small; and it has been forcibly urged that, "instead of devoting to the construction of swift cruisers so small a fraction of the sums assigned to armour-clad construction, approximately equal expenditure appears to be needed,—at least for the present. Within three years, and at an expenditure not exceeding that to which we stand committed for ironclads in proportion, we might be in possession of a fleet of fifty or sixty swift cruisers, well protected, well armed, and capable of detached service in all parts of the world, or with fleets." The present time is very favourable for shipbuilding, and there is no fear of this class of vessel becoming rapidly obsolete. The addition of the Pylades to the strength of the Navy is most welcome, and there can be no question as to the wisdom of constructing vessels possessing high speed, moderate size, great handiness, protection of the vitals, and power to act as rams.

THE recent and almost annually recurring alarm as to the prepared, or rather unprepared, state of our first and principal line of defence, after apparently attracting for the moment serious attention from at least some portion of the community, seems to be passing away with hardly the usual nine days' interest, so meagrely allotted in these times of high pressure to the most absorbing topics. For about that period the daily and weekly Press has teemed with a crop of letters from all sorts of self-constituted authorities,—some well qualified to write, some far otherwise. We have had a sprinkle of speeches, a few leading articles, and now the subject—surely an increasingly important and engrossing one to everybody, high and low, rich and poor—appears about to be relegated to its former obscurity in specialist circles, and the country, only half-aroused from its normal state of apathy, allowed to relapse into a perilous condition of seeming security and content. Is it to be always so? Until some day we learn from our morning papers that, all unprepared, we have been hurried into a European war (an eventuality which the nation seems to consider can never arise again), with probably some combination of foes formed against us possessing an overwhelming superiority upon the seas,—not such an improbable matter as many believe,—our interests in every quarter of the globe jeopardised, the food supplies upon which our very existence depends in peril of being cut off, with contingent starvation staring us in the face, and many of the most vulnerable points in our armour practically defenceless. And all for what reasons? Simply the almost incredible, but none the less criminal, desire of our rulers, through mistaken notions of economy, to shrink from an increased expenditure, acknowledged on all sides to be necessary, added to the utterly unwise indifference displayed by the public upon a matter of such supreme national moment. How easily such a deplorable disaster may occur and a nation suffer from want of enlightenment, whilst the few well-intentioned guides, persistently struggling to attract attention and secure readiness, may be shouted down by interested parties, has been shown times out of mind in history; and it is notorious that only within the last few years the crushing defeat and irreparable loss sustained by one of the greatest of Continental Powers was in no small measure due to such causes. At such a moment, it is not only the right, but the duty, of everyone competent to express an opinion on the subject, to place before the public his views; and, while deprecating anything in the shape of a panic, to prevent in every way such a reaction occurring as may delay the imperatively needed expenditure, and prevent that thorough and exhaustive examination which should take place. It is not, however, by writing disparaging accounts of our own Navy, or by drawing comparisons between the fighting strength of that and those of foreign Powers, that the public mind must be prepared for the increased demand upon the public purse; for by a different system of arranging the same materials, almost any deductions may be drawn, and any policy adversely criticised or satisfactorily defended. Neither is it a question of who has been to blame hitherto. That, at all events, it is not the fault of our Naval officers is well known, for they have over and over again—to their credit, be it said, very often against their own interests—brought the matter prominently forward; but on the contrary, by constantly reiterating the numerous points wherein our line of defence is weak, and by showing how the present appropriations are all too little to maintain the existing Fleet in the best possible state of efficiency, and to allow for building more, the Government will be, at the same time that it is compelled more or less willingly to give way, strengthened, and supplied with the materials from which to justify its conduct in so doing. We believe that it will be universally conceded that if we are not stronger at sea than any conceivable combination of enemies are likely to prove, then, at any cost whatever, it is the duty of those who are responsible that we should speedily be made so. Yet the fact cannot be hidden that at this moment not only is the Navy unequal to such a test, but the defences of our coaling and naval stations abroad, and the means of protection to our many harbours and seaports at home, are also admittedly inadequate and inefficient. In the case of the Navy, this is not so much because it has not progressed faster or so fast as others, but because the changes brought about by modern science, while assisting our means of offence and defence, have rapidly rendered comparatively obsolete much that had but recently been done. No sooner have we apparently attained a limit to the weight of guns and thickness of armour—sacrificing, maybe, speed, handiness, or some other advantage for the sake of gaining in a different direction—than a further development or some new invention renders fresh combinations essential. It is noteworthy that although the controversy has ranged over almost every conceivable topic allied to the matter, no one has yet ventured to find fault with the personnel of the Naval service; it seems to be taken as a matter of fact that this is in all respects as it should be, and it is a truth in which the public may find consolation, that at no previous time in our history has it been of a higher standard. Some small signs of insubordination, no doubt, appear infrequently among the men, and discontent is not altogether vanished from the quarter-deck, but such are mostly attributable to local or ephemeral causes; and when the time comes, officers and blue-jackets will, if allowed, show the same spirit as their predecessors did in Nelson's day. How Almack and Houston Stewart died with their men around the Gatlings at Tamai is proof enough of that. The universal panacea for all the ills this nation is prone to—a Royal Commission or Committee of Inquiry—is naturally the recommendation of all those persons interested in shelving the question; but judging by previous results, diseases treated with this remedy either cure themselves by lapse of time, or become so complicated with other disorders as to make the need a chronic one. Still, a Committee can do no harm if it is not allowed to take the place of other and more absolutely pressing necessities; but it must be a thoroughly competent one, adequate to deal with the wide-spreading subjects this inquiry should embrace; no party or departmental considerations should be allowed to burke a full and exhaustive examination of facts, for if treated from an impartial and purely national standpoint, there can be no doubt that large and generous additions will be made, and that without delay, to our Naval expenditure. In any case, however, too much invaluable time has already been wasted. Our most crying wants must and can be supplied at once; the ships already in hand must be pushed rapidly to completion, swift protected cruisers, specially adapted for convoying the present mercantile marine or for chasing from the seas possible Alabamas designed to prey upon our commerce, must be laid down and hastened forward; and, above all, our torpedo flotilla must be augmented by sea-going craft, equipped with all the most modern appliances engineering ability can invent or contrive, capable of defending our comparatively unwieldy ironclads, by engaging the similar boats built or building by several of our possible foes, and for preventing the blockade or bombardment of our almost defenceless harbours and coaling stations. Furthermore, it is for the country to look to it in the elections supposed to be near at hand that, in the deliberations of Parliament, there shall be no lack of careful and independent specialists experienced in all the details necessary to give due weight to their statements, who will keep awake an active public interest by constantly advocating efficiency in those Imperial and national defences whereby our greatness has been attained, and must be upheld.

Vice-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, Commander-in-Chief of the Channel Squadron, will haul down his flag on December 3; and in all probability the Minotaur will be paid off before the end of the year.

The Channel Squadron will return to Gibraltar from Madeira in about a fortnight, when, it is stated by a correspondent, the Neptune and Sultan are to try the effect of their guns at extreme elevation on two batteries situated high up on the seaward face of the rock of Gibraltar. These batteries are armed with obsolete smooth-bore ordnance, but if the fire from the ships proves to be comparatively harmless, as expected, more modern guns will be provided for them. The batteries, built on ledges hewn out of the solid rock, are scarcely perceptible from the sea, and it is probable that the smoke of the guns would be the only target they would afford to a hostile fleet. The object of the experiment is to decide this question, and the result will be interesting.

Vice-Admiral Corbett, the new Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, has appointed Lieutenant Graham to be his Flag Lieutenant, and Mr. Risk, Paymaster, to be his Secretary.

A novel series of charts, illustrating the relative size, strength, and fighting-power of the war-ships of the principal nations of the world, is being prepared by the United States Bureau of Naval Intelligence. The method shows at a glance the fundamental facts in regard to each vessel, and conveys to an ordinary observer a better idea of the relative strength and value of war-ships than any chart or illustration yet introduced. These charts are prepared as a part of the Naval display at the New Orleans Exposition.

The position of Naval Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, which will become vacant on the 1st prox., on the completion by Sir W. Houston Stewart of his three years term of office, will, it is stated, be conferred on Admiral Augustus Phillimore, who has just attained the rank of full admiral. Admiral Phillimore entered the service more than half a century ago, and during a long and most worthy career in the Royal Navy, has done good service to his country.

Captain Burrowes, of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, who served with the Royal Marine Battalion in the Egyptian War of 1882, has been appointed Adjutant of the Royal Marine Battalion at Suakim, vice Major Poë, selected for the command of the Royal Marine detachment of the Camel Corps.

The fallacy of Mr. Lynall Thomas's contention in the Times, that because the ranges of all Naval guns are virtually equalised, therefore "should two hostile vessels, both unarmoured, but one carrying a 100-ton gun, and the other a six-ton gun only, encounter each other at sea, and—directly there was a possibility of hitting—begin to fire at each other, the ship armed with the smaller gun would stand as good a chance of sinking or blowing up her opponent as the latter would have of doing the same to her, lies in the fact that it is quite unlikely that any one would place 100-ton guns on board unprotected vessels, and that the true subject of the discussion is, given guns of the same calibre on board each vessel, which is likely to smash the other soonest—the unarmoured man-of-war or the protected merchantman? Mr. Thomas appears to have overlooked this question altogether.

Captain Bosanquet, commanding H.M.S. Cambridge, gunnery-vessel at Devonport, has been appointed a Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, vice Captain Rowley, who has this week attained the rank of Rear-Admiral. Captain Bosanquet, who commanded her Majesty's ship Northumberland in the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, has seen much active service in the Crimea and off the Chinese coast; for his services in the operations against piratical vessels in the neighbourhood of Chusan, in 1873, he being awarded the gold medal from the Government of China and promoted.

If there is any truth in the statement that telegraphic instructions have been forwarded to the Governor of Hong Kong, directing him to refuse permission to French ships-of-war either to refit or to ship articles which are contraband of war, within the limits of that colony, it is evidence of the determination of the Government to take active measures for protection of British interests in that quarter.

Admiral Sir W. Houston Stewart made some important remarks at Devonport recently upon the defence of England. With reference to the possibility of "throwing an adequate armed force across the Channel, and being able to maintain it there after it was landed," the gallant Admiral is of opinion that with the facilities now afforded by steam such a proceeding was quite possible, until the Channel was efficiently patrolled by ships of war, the ports on the opposite coast carefully watched, and those on the English coast strongly defended. He maintains that there should be a well-trained and reliable military force assembled on various strategical points of England, able to communicate readily with one another, and for purposes of concentration. Admiral Stewart stated that he was confident there were, in the bureaux of the great Military Powers of Europe, plans for a possible invasion of England—that carefully-considered estimates of our means of opposing it had been prepared, and that these were ready for reference should war break out. Being forewarned, we should be forearmed, but we are not—as yet.

The discussion on the condition of the Navy will take place immediately after the Franchise Bill has been sent to the House of Lords.

The Report of the Admiralty Committee on Shipbuilding, over which the Earl of Ravensworth presided, will shortly be issued. The Committee suggest that a very large saving might be effected if the construction of new vessels for the public service was pressed on, with only rare interruptions, after all the plans and designs have been carefully completed, in accordance with recent improvements in armaments, &c., instead of costly ships being left on the stocks for four or five years, subject to almost constant alterations. It will also be proposed in the Committee's Report that, whilst the public dockyards are utilised as fully as possible for repairs, the work of constructing new vessels should more frequently be entrusted to private enterprise, partly in order that shipbuilding firms may become better trained for assisting to meet any sudden emergency in Naval matters.

The Admiralty have given instructions for the immediate laying down of a large armour-plated vessel at Chatham Dockyard. The work is to be commenced as soon as the material can be prepared. The new ship will be constructed to carry the heaviest guns manufactured.

We congratulate the Neptune's designers that their vessel should have successfully stood the severe test to which she was subjected on the trip to Gibraltar; but we expect their satisfaction must have been somewhat damped from the description given by various spectators of the trial. This is what one says:—"Anxious eyes were watching the Neptune, as she has never before been subjected to such a severe trial as this. But she stood the test well, and I am sure that all on board of her, and in the Squadron generally, were pleased to see her emerge from the ordeal apparently intact. To call such a structure a sea-boat is highly absurd; so nobody was surprised to see her decks being flooded and her hull like a half-tide rock, up which the huge waves rushed and burst on her decks; and as she rose after a heavy ducking the water was running off her in a hundred cataracts, and those of her crew who could be seen moving about were wading waist-deep in water." And another writes:—"Tons of water poured over her deck, and, finding no means of exit till the flying bulwarks were washed away, flooded the Captain's and officers' quarters. About a dozen men were injured through losing their foothold, two seriously." Altogether it was made sufficiently manifest that the Neptune as a cruising ironclad is a failure, although, as the Independencia, she may have been good enough for the Brazilians.

The statement made by Sir T. Brassey last Monday respecting the steering-gear of the Agamemnon and Ajax class forms a very unsatisfactory termination to the first stage of a question which bid fair to awaken an animated controversy.

From a correspondent at Constantinople we hear that the dockyard authorities have at last completed one of the two gunboats launched about three years ago, and intended for service in the Persian Gulf. Strenuous efforts are also being made to get the ironclad frigate Hamidieh ready, as she is to be launched shortly, the building shed she now occupies being required for another vessel ordered to be laid down by the Sultan.

The Earl of Northbrook and Captain Beaumont, R.N., his lordship's Private Secretary, arrived at the Admiralty on Monday, on their return from Egypt. The First Lord of the Admiralty, who is slightly indisposed after hard work and a long journey, will on an early day make a statement regarding the Naval policy of the Government.

Corroboration of the existence of distrust as to the efficiency of the Navy comes from unexpected quarters. Speaking to the Amalgamated Engineers at Woolwich, last Saturday, Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., said that, recognising the necessity of strengthening our Naval power for the defence of commerce, he hoped if the Government intended to build the required ships, some of the orders might be given to the Northern shipbuilding yards to assist in relieving the distress prevailing there. We hope so too.

Rear-Admiral Baird, the new Commander-in-Chief on the Pacific station, took over the command on Tuesday, at Victoria, British Columbia, in succession to Rear-Admiral Algernon M'L. Lyons, who has been promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral.

In the correspondence between the Foreign Office and France with regard to the blockade of part of Formosa, Lord Granville has, we understand, maintained the view that a blockade enforced against the ships of neutral Powers must be regarded as a declaration of war. In the event of full papers being produced, it will probably be found that the Government have given to the Admiral commanding on the China station instructions which are based upon this decision.

Vice-Admiral Commerell, Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indies station, left Halifax in the Northampton last Tuesday for Bermuda.

The Paluma, which was commissioned last week, has been lent to the Admiralty for three years by the Queensland Government, on the understanding that their coast survey is completed. She is a kind of improved Trent, and looks a good sea boat. At first it was intended that she should be convoyed across the Bay, but the vessel that was to have accompanied her not being ready, she will leave shortly in charge of Lieutenant Richards, of the surveying service, who is to be congratulated on his neat little command. Her sister-ship, the Gayundah, at present fitting at Newcastle, will also be ready shortly.

We learn that Captain Ley, Queen's Harbourmaster at Chatham, has obtained an extension of his term of service until 1886, and are glad to know that there is no truth in the rumours that ill-health would oblige him to resign shortly.

It is significant that three of the most influential of the magazines should contain in their November numbers articles on the inefficient condition of the Navy. That by Mr. Smith, in the National Review, we have already reviewed; Sir Edward Reed takes up the parable in the columns of the Contemporary, and, discussing the subject from an entirely different standpoint, ventilates at greater length the views he has already formulated in the Times. Mr. Arnold-Forster, in the Nineteenth Century, deprecates the complacent optimism of Sir Thomas Brassey and other members of the Government, and enlarges upon the undoubted fact that Parliament must vote immediately a large sum of money to provide additions to our Navy, our fortifications, and our torpedo equipment. All three writers arrive practically at the same conclusion—"that the Navy is inadequate for the duties it is called upon to perform."

Commander Rainier, who was a member of the War-Office Committee on Machine-Guns in 1880-81, and Secretary to the Committee on Torpedo Instruction this year, has been appointed to the command of the Kingfisher, which is to be recommissioned for a further term of service, although she only recently returned from the Pacific station.

Captain Clayton, who served in the Sidon in the Black Sea during the Russian War in 1854-55, and in the China War in 1857-61, has been appointed to the command of H.M.S. Diamond, which is to be recommissioned on the Australian station.

Slowly, but not the less surely, the numerous claims of that admirable and distinguished body, the Royal Marines, appear to be meeting the recognition they deserve; should the hope expressed by Lord Wolseley, and referred to by Lord Northbrook in his speech at Cairo to the men selected for service with the Camel Corps, be really fulfilled, we may expect the Millennium shortly.

When the Inflexible made her first appearance in the Mediterranean there were loud outcries about her bad steering, but after a time the officers of the watches found out the way of dodging her into good behaviour and straightness of purpose, and it is hoped and expected that the same result will attend the establishment of better acquaintance with her peculiarities in the case of the Agamemnon. But it was miserable economy—most wasteful of vices—which led to the shortening of the Ajax and Agamemnon, and to the defective steering of which, and very properly, we hear so much. The Colossus will, it is expected, steer to perfection on account of the length which was denied to her sisters in the builder's hands. "Oh, Economy! what profligate expenditure is your child!"

"Torpedo Boats: What we have and what we ought to have," is the title of an article in the Pall Mall Gazette of Thursday. Having hit the right nail on the head our vivacious contemporary evidently intends to drive it home, and we can only repeat "more power to your arm." The writer begins by describing an interview with a disgusted naval officer who, although he will not, for obvious reasons, write to a newspaper, has no objection to stating the following five facts as sufficient reason for worrying about our want of torpedo boats:—

> 1. Actual experiment has proved that on an ordinary night these boats can approach unperceived to within a thousand yards of the ship attacked, though the most powerful electric lights be kept bearing on their line of approach. 2. From the time the torpedo boats are first seen till they can discharge their Whitehead torpedoes with absolute certainty of hitting is on an average about 36 seconds. 3. During this 36 seconds the guns of the attacked ship fire at random, as owing to the darkness the sights cannot be effectively used, and the distance alters 100 yards every six seconds. 4. A foreign experiment has proved that on the torpedo hitting it makes a hole about 70 square feet in the bottom of such a powerful ironclad as the Hercules. 5. The most powerful pumps mounted in any ironclad will only keep out the water which comes in through an 18 inch hole in the bottom of the ship. Yet with all that we have fewer boats than France.

Afterwards, following closely on the lines of our leading article on the same subject last week, he classifies torpedo-boats and gives a statement of the number we possess in each class. Drawing a sufficiently startling comparison between what we are doing in the direction of practising our men with these weapons and the constant and increasing attention given to their exercise by all foreign Naval Powers, he points out how the Fleet in our Southern ports are practically undefended against such a torpedo attack as France could readily launch against us to-morrow, and concludes by advocating large additions immediately in every type of craft. The article then goes on to say, while not disputing that the highest available talent is employed at Whitehall in designing English ships of war, the talent by reason of red tape and tradition is not allowed to have its way, that it really matters little to the Admiralty designers whether they design good or indifferent, the result being that talent does not always rest content to serve Government, as instanced in the cases of Sir E. Reed and Mr. White.

There is not the smallest pretence or foundation for the statements which a correspondent signing himself "R.M.L.I." has directed attention, and it would be quite safe to contradict off-hand any statement of the sort proceeding from the source which he indicates. Lord John Hay, during the whole term of his command, has followed his instructions with the most scrupulous exactness.

It is strange, but it is true! The news comes on Saturday last that Khartoum and Gordon have been taken, but there is doubt about it. There are Lord Hartington and the Duke of Cambridge at one end of the wire, and Lord Wolseley at the other, and no step—even as far as the telegraph-office—is taken to ascertain from Lord Wolseley whether the fact of Gordon's capture is known to him or not; and for three days the country is torn by doubt and suspense,—the clubs full of talk, society agitated, and politicians distracted. Now, it must be plain enough that any news from Khartoum which could reach the Khedive must have gone through the telegraph-wires in Nubia, which are in the hands of the British authorities, or through Suakim, where there are British officers in charge also. It was stated in one great daily paper that the Khedive had telegraphed the intelligence to the Queen and to the Prince of Wales; and—as there is nothing like a good detail in a lie—it was added that the Khedive had repeated the dose when asked for confirmation. The press, without taking the trouble to send as far as Marlborough House, discoursed on Monday most acutely and logically on the subject, assuming that the Khedive has sent "repeated telegrams" to the Queen and the Prince of Wales! The articles would have been profitable reading had the text been all right; but it could scarcely have gratified the editors to read their dismal lucubrations on Tuesday morning. The taste "for swallowing flies" may prove fatal even to "the great Globe itself," for it seems "as if increase of appetite doth grow with what it feeds on."

General J. A. Ewart, C.B., will be placed on the Retired List on the 30th inst., when he will have completed five years' unemployed.

Lieutenant-General Brialmont's interesting pamphlet[*] is a just and generous tribute to one of the greatest scientific soldiers the world has ever seen. Todleben never led an army in the field, but he defended Sebastopol gloriously against the armies of France, England, Turkey, and Piedmont—the Allied Fleets as well—and he broke down the defence and forced the surrender of Osman Pasha at Plevna. The son of the Riga négociant found that there was in Russia a career open to his talents, and that no Muscovite prejudice against the German race could retard his progress towards distinction and nobility. From 1848 to 1850 Todleben was winning his way slowly step after step in the wars of the Caucasus, and in 1853 he was officer of the trenches at Silistria, and was ready on the night of August 20 to deliver the assault, which he always held must have been successful, when Paskevitch gave orders for the siege to be raised and for the army to cross the Danube. Todleben was two months afterwards sent to Sebastopol by Prince Gortchakoff to help Prince Menchikoff to put the place in a state of defence; but the latter snubbed him, and gave no heed to his representations till the landing of the Allies and the battle of the Alma awoke him to the unpleasant fact that Sebastopol needed defence. Korniloff, Nakhimoff, and Istomine, who were charged with the task of holding the town, trusted entirely to Todleben. And how he justified the trust is matter for more than Russian history. The grand feature of the defence was, no doubt, the hardy and sagacious measure devised by Todleben of lodging his covering parties of infantry in small works in advance of the line of defences, the development of which was the creation of the Selenquisk and Volhynia Redoubts, and of the Kamschatka Lunette. It was not that counter-approaches were new in sieges, but that the way in which Todleben pushed infantry, armed with smooth-bores, up towards trenches and musketry-pits occupied by infantry with rifles, and threw-up regular works under cover of their fire, was very bold and novel. Probably, if Todleben had not been wounded and obliged to relinquish the active direction of the works, the assault of September 8 would have failed. As it was, of the 12 attacks which were delivered, only one succeeded, and 24,500 Russians repulsed 40,000 of the Allies on all points except the Malakhoff. The Allies on that day lost 10,067 men, and the Russians lost 12,913. And when Todleben visited England he was received with the utmost consideration and attention, although, in the frank simplicity of his nature, he permitted himself to be exploité by an adventurous inhabitant of Montpelier Square, where he was persuaded to take up his quarters. It is a curious illustration of the sourde obstination of foreign critics, and of their desire to ignore the merits of us, insular people, in war, as far as can be done by writing, to find a man like Brialmont, who wrote a history of the Duke of Wellington, speaking of the bombardment of October 17 as if our artillery fire failed, simply because the fifty-three French guns were reduced to silence, whereas the English guns silenced the Russian guns opposed to them! The fame of the defence will never die. General Brialmont says he only knows one original conception of Todleben—that of a coast battery, which he communicated to him in 1865, after he had visited Portsmouth and Plymouth; but the great engineer had that practical genius for war which makes the best of means to an end, and never did he display his gifts more brilliantly than at Plevna, where he saved his own troops and destroyed the army of the enemy. It is not much to the credit of our Press that so remarkable a man should have died without any lengthened accounts of his work. There were no obituary notices such as would be accorded to the demise of a ridiculous city knight or of an eminent pill-maker, to record the death on July 1, near Frankfort-on-Main, of one of the purest and noblest men who adorned the century. But newspaper eulogies are not needed to do justice to such a man.

"Le règne du pantouffle est passé," says the Globe. Certainly it must be, for the "Roi Pantouffle" is unknown to us. Perhaps our contemporary did know Pantouffle was a Queen, and was too polite to use the proper gender.

Another anniversary of a famous battle—the thirtieth of the great "Guy Fawkes day" at Inkerman—has come and gone. The Guards draped their colours with laurel, and there were no doubt due celebrations, private and public, of the anniversary wherever survivors congregate. It is, indeed, a day to be remembered for ever. The part played by the British Army was worthy of their best traditions, —so great and glorious that it is not necessary for us to deny their share of the credit to our Allies. Indeed, if we do, the world will not; all history is not written in English, and Mr. Kinglake is not the only accepted historian of the war. Every regiment engaged on November 5, 1854—perhaps with one exception—has as good a right as the Guards to deck its colours with laurel. The violent phrase applied by some French esprit moqueur to the Crimean medal—"médaille de sauvetage"—was unfortunate, but Mr. Kinglake is obliged to admit that the Guards' colours were saved by "the much be-damned Sixth of the Line (p. 285), who did good loyal service which will be long remembered in England." We doubt that very much, though the Duke of Cambridge, whom the historian describes as "brushing his way past" the Russians, will probably not forget the moment when he saw the colours of the Grenadier Guards borne safely back from the terrible contest around and in the Sandbag Battery. It was the Zouaves and the Algerine battalion who later on took the battery from the Russians with frightful slaughter, and hunted the Selingherisk battalions clean off the battle-field, who enabled our men to retreat. But we are not going to fight the battle over again. "The diligent men of Berlin," whom Mr. Kinglake derides—his volume was written in 1875—will probably be believed and followed in the criticism that Simonoff's mistake, and the conglomeration of 40,000 men on Mount Inkerman, was fatal to the Russians; and there will be a conviction to the end of time that there was something like a surprise on the morning, although our historian argues against the supposition.

The Mudir of Dongola must be a pattern of politeness. He has already showed himself to be a man of great courage, resource, and intelligence. When he returned thanks for the honour which had been conferred upon him by the presentation of the insignia of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, he must have felt a little wonder at what it all meant, for, as a devout Mussulman, he certainly would have been little inclined to attach any consideration to the Saint of the Copts; and as to St. Michael, it is no disparagement to the Mudir's general information to suppose that he never had heard of the Saint at all in the particular connection in which he was associated with St. George and the illustrious Order of which he had received the badge. Although the Osmanieh and Medjidie have to some extent familiarised Orientals with the idea connected with Orders of Chivalry and decorations as marks of honour and distinction, their ideas are somewhat hazy in regard to them; and they would much rather, as a general rule, have a slice of land on promotion in the titled official world of their own people than any number of badges and any extent of coloured ribbon. It is well-known that when the Princes of India were decorated with gold or silver medals by the Prince of Wales, it was not easy to induce them to separate the consideration of the intrinsic value of the medal from the mark of consideration of the Sovereign with which it was supposed to be connected. It may be inferred that the Mudir did not altogether take the honour as equivalent to the disappointment he must have experienced in relinquishing the scheme on which he had set his heart to precede the English General and his host in delivering Gordon; and seeing what he has done there, seems every reason to think that, had he been provided with the means he so urgently pressed for early in the year, in arms and men, he would have anticipated our costly, and as yet uncertain, operations, and would have swept the banks of the Nile southwards so as to open communications with the beleaguered garrison of Khartoum. But distrust of his intentions and ignorance of his character, combined with the set purpose of depreciation in regard to natives which is the policy of the European correspondents in Egypt, has sufficed to frustrate his scheme and to confine his energies to the work he had so triumphantly achieved of cleaning out of the Mudirieh every trace of disaffection, and of establishing order and the rule of the Khedive throughout the length and breadth of the territory under his control. It is much to be wondered at, indeed, that he acquiesced so placidly in the decree of the Khedive, which handed over the authority he had vindicated so well to a stranger and an infidel. First, he had to submit to co-operate with Sir Herbert Stewart, as his subordinate. Now, he is necessarily subservient to Lord Wolseley. He knows well that whatever credit may be due to his influence and authority will be absorbed by the great stranger. In another place will be found an excellent pen-and-ink sketch from the correspondent of the Morning Post of this remarkable man, the integrity and force of whose character impressed itself upon us at the time he was assailed by persistent calumnies in the Press. So good a judge of character as Lord Wolseley will speedily conciliate a man like the Mudir, and he has already shown by his honest and thorough co-operation with Sir Herbert Stewart that he can subordinate personal feelings, and even ambition, to the desire to do his duty and to promote the cause of the master he serves.

Major J. Berryman, V.C., late Quartermaster 17th Lancers, has been granted a Good-Service Pension of £50 per annum.

The death, at Dongola, of Colonel Colborne, who was acting as correspondent for the Daily News, which is announced this week, cannot have caused much surprise to his friends, however much they must regret the loss of an amiable and accomplished gentleman, for Colonel Colborne was no longer young, and his constitution had been tried by a long residence in the East, following a career of active service from the time of the Crimea, and several attacks of severe illness in Egypt and in the Soudan, where he was in the Khedive's service up to the time of Hicks Pasha's command at Khartoum. He had to come to Cairo, where he was for some months; and it may be remembered that he wrote to explain how it was he had been unable to return to his post after the destruction of Hicks's column, in answer to some remarks upon the composition of the Soudan Staff, and the absence of several officers from the scene of duty. Colonel Colborne was an excellent draughtsman, and was possessed of considerable knowledge of Eastern races, languages, &c., and in private life was very estimable.[*]

Nothing exasperates a patriotic Celt—Scot, or Erse—so much as the calm assumption and absorption by the great British Blunderbore of all the individualities of famous people as "English." In the case of criminals British appetite is discriminating, and the O'Mulligan at the police-court is sure to figure as "a ruffianly-looking Irishman," and the Dumbiedikes before the sessions as an "ill-favoured Scotchman." When Lord Dufferin was named as Viceroy of India, the Irish papers poured out the ink of affliction over the wrong done to the country of his birth by the London journals, which never alluded to the fact that he was an Irishman any more than they gave to the distressful country the credit of having produced the "only General." And now the Times, in a leading article on Mr. J. Thomson's lecture at the Royal Geographical Society on Monday last, coolly appropriates one of the most intensely Scotch of Scotchmen as an "Englishman," and sends a flash of indignation through the country north of the Tweed, north and south, east and west. In fact, so thoroughly Scotch is Mr. Thomson that it was with some difficulty his English audience followed his discourse, in consequence of the mode of his speech and accent in the delivering of his lecture; but in self-reliance, perseverance, and courage he has excelled so greatly, that it is not wonderful that he should be claimed as national and imperial property.

The authorities at Bermuda must want something to do if we are to credit a statement in the last number of Truth. Our contemporary says:—

> "Military discipline is all very well in its way, but a case which occurred the other day in Bermuda seems to me to have a very strong resemblance to Oriental tyranny. Some time ago a paragraph appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette commenting upon the very disorderly fashion in which a certain party of engineers had been marched on board ship. There is no reason to doubt that the remarks of the writer were perfectly accurate and justifiable, but the powers that be in Bermuda suspected that the paragraph had been written by one of the officers stationed in the island, and a terrible fuss ensued. It is scarcely credible, but every officer in Bermuda was compelled to certify on his honour 'as an officer and a gentleman' that he had not written the obnoxious paragraph! It is positively amazing that any military governor should take so outrageous a step, and it is even more suprising that the officers themselves should have condescended to take any notice of so insolent a demand."

We may state, for the information of the Bermuda authorities, that the information did not reach us from any military officer. It was, nevertheless, perfectly true; and in the interests of the service we are glad to find that attention has been drawn to the conduct of the "authority" in question.

There is an idea in the public mind that censure is implied in fact of a recall, whereas it may be the very highest compliment that can be paid to an officer. Lord Wolseley has been much annoyed at the announcement in the Times a few weeks ago that orders had been sent from London for his return, although the report was accompanied with the most flattering conjectures on the part of the leading journal, that the Government must be in need of the best advice close at hand, and that they thought Lord Wolseley's place in Egypt could be filled by a general officer whose services and reputation, however great and approved, did not command equal confidence in the country. Lord Wolseley called on the correspondent of the Times in Egypt to furnish him with the name of the person who gave him the intelligence which was telegraphed to London, and it seemed likely there would be no correspondent of the Times at the Head-quarters of the Army at what is called the front till the secret was revealed. But recent telegrams from Wada Halfa show that there was some one so far on his way towards head-quarters this week.

The number of Inkerman "heroes" is rapidly diminishing. The Duke Field-Marshal is the only surviving Divisional General. Collingwood Dickson, who "covered himself with glory," flourishes; so does Sir F. Haines; and among the Generals are to-day Taylor, Hardinge, Somerset, Macdonell, Street, Maitland, Smyth, Stephenson, Whitmore, Shipley, Bright, Willis, Glyn, Donovan, Radcliffe, Seymour, Higginson, Hume, Adams, Torrens, Sargent, Macdonald, Ross, Vialls, P. Fielding, Hardy, Newdegate, Abinger, M. Walker, Daniell, W. Roberts, Boldero, Earle, R. Ross, Morant, Dunne, Gipps, Rowlands, Bowles, Chippendall, Dalyell, Kent, &c. It is almost forgotten* what a bloody battle it was, and how it decided the fate of the Allies, and "nailed" them to the plateau till 1856.

The St. James's Gazette has made a patriotic use of information which has been placed within its reach, of the great perils to our Indian Empire which very small changes of policy and rapid developments of purpose may produce, militarily speaking, instantaneously; but, for all that, the St. James's Gazette is very much execrated in what are called the higher official circles for alluding to the subject at all. At the India Office they are angry and alarmed at the consequences; in Downing Street they are furious, not with the men who have allowed the towering fabric of ruin to rear itself over our Empire, but with the watchmen who called aloud in the darkness and warned the garrison of the danger.

The intense selfishness of spirit manifested in the framing of Lord Wolseley's instructions is worthy of a parish vestry. It is regrettable that the abandonment of the garrisons and subjects of the Khedive in any part of the Soudan should be accepted and vindicated as a worthy and defensible measure.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.

1. Preliminary Examinations for admission to the Royal Military College will be held in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, on Feb. 4 and 5, and on March 11 and 12, 1885, under the Regulations issued with G.O. 116 of 1884.

2. Gentlemen who propose to be candidates will be permitted to present themselves for the Preliminary Examination on either, but not on both, of these occasions. They must apply, in their own handwriting, direct to the Secretary of the Civil Service Commissioners, on the form hereto annexed, which must be returned to the office of the Commission, so as to be received not later than Jan. 15 for the February Examination, and Feb. 19 for the March Examination. No evidence of age or moral character is required.

3. It must be understood that candidates will not be admitted to the "Further" Examination in July unless they send to the Military Secretary, on or before May 15, the papers required by paragraph 16 of the Regulations.

4. No candidate (not being a University candidate) will be allowed to attend the "Further" unless he has passed the "Preliminary" Examination, or has produced to the Civil Service Commissioners a certificate as laid down in paragraph 15 of the Regulations.

5. Candidates claiming, under paragraph 15 of the Regulations, to be exempted from the Preliminary Examination in all subjects except geometrical drawing, or in all except geometrical drawing and mathematics, may present themselves for examination in the subjects only.

6. Officers of Militia who propose to be candidates for commissions in the Army may be admitted to these preliminary examinations on the same conditions as candidates for admission to the Royal Military College. Those who pass will be exempted from the preliminary part of the Special Examination of Militia candidates. Candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy may also be admitted on the same conditions for examination in dictation, geography, and modern language. Those who pass will, when they attend the Preliminary Examination for the Royal Military Academy, be exempted from examination in those subjects.

7. A fee of £1 will be required from every candidate admitted to an examination.

8. This "Preliminary" Examination is separate from the "Further" Examination, and no marks can be given in the one for work done in the other.

Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.,
October 31, 1884.

⁂ The order for admission to the Preliminary Examination will be posted to the address given on the form of application, on Jan. 28 for the February examination, and on March 4 for the March examination. The order will contain instructions as to the mode in which the fee of £1 is to be paid.

N.B.—In consequence of a communication from the War Office, it is the intention of the Commissioners to raise gradually the standard of qualification in modern languages.

MERCHANT STEAMERS IN WAR TIME.

An interesting correspondence on the use of our merchant steamers as an auxiliary Naval force in time of war is being carried on in the columns of the Pall Mall Gazette. Mr. D. H. Macfarlane, M.P., opened the ball by suggesting a system of convoy for the protection of our commerce in war time; he supposes that from 40 to 50 merchant steamers are at anchor in the Downs, bound for Port Said, and believes that a couple of swift cruisers would provide adequate protection for the trip under all ordinary circumstances. Mr. Thos. Sutherland, chairman of the P. and O. Company, fears that the scheme looks better on paper than it would in practice, and opines that the greater part of our trade would be transferred to foreign and neutral flags in consequence of the enormous premiums of insurance. He affirms that if "a Naval war breaks out, and the English Navy is not strong enough to keep its enemies in port, or thrash them if they come out, we must bid a long farewell to our greatness as a ship-owning nation." Capt. Colomb also writes ridiculing Mr. Macfarlane's scheme, and advocates a Naval Intelligence Department, chiefly composed of practical commercial men, with an Admiral at its head, to consider the real question of protection by convoy. He concludes by maintaining that "steam sea strategy" (whatever that may mean) provides greater security for our commerce than in the old days, provided we do three things:—"1. Spend on our Navy in the same proportion as to our sea-trade now as our fathers did for long years after Trafalgar. 2. Adequately protect our coaling-stations and great mercantile sea-ports. 3. Tear up the 'Treaty of Paris' the moment war is declared, and as a united Empire do our duty." Admiral Vesey Hamilton, agreeing with Capt. Colomb and Mr. Sutherland, gives instances from the American Civil War to prove how useless it is to reckon on our merchant-ships being able to contend successfully with an enemy's men-of-war; and he points out how European Alabamas without coal depôts could do but little against our commerce, if unsupported by ironclads, and that we could put three, if not more, on the ocean highways for every one our antagonists could furnish.

A telegram dated Calcutta, Nov. 6, says:—"The opposition to the Zhob Valley expedition appears to have entirely collapsed. Several of the chiefs have surrendered to the British, and Shah Jehan's son-in-law has been captured. Shah Jehan himself has fled, and has, it is believed, taken refuge among the Ghilzais."

The Army.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capt. Bellwood has been compelled to resign the adjutancy of the Nottinghamshire Yeomanry Cavalry on account of ill-health.

5th Dragoon Guards. The Seaforth Barracks, at Liverpool, recently completed, have been occupied by a detachment of the regiment.

1st (Royal) Dragoons. Major James, Scots Greys, having assumed his duties as D.A.A. and Q.M.G. at head-quarters, Ireland, Capt. Tomkinson has been appointed Acting Brigade-Major of Cavalry in Ireland.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Brevet Major James has taken up the duties of his new appointment as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General in Ireland, vice Major Cooper, transferred to Lord Dufferin's Staff.

3rd Hussars. The regiment suffers a great loss in the retirement of Col. Vincent, whose five years' tenure of the command expired on Tuesday. Col. Vincent exchanged as major from the 7th Dragoon Guards, and during his term of command has been indefatigable in his exertions to maintain the efficiency of the regiment, which he leaves in a very satisfactory condition.

6th Inniskilling Dragoons. The regiment is expected to be ordered to Bechuanaland with Sir C. Warren's expedition. The Natal Witness says:—"As regards the testimony borne by Sir Leicester Smyth to the service of the Inniskilling Dragoons, and particularly to the services of their commanding officer, Col. Curtis, there can be no question, if civilians may be permitted to say so, that they have been in every way deserved. Col. Curtis, as the commander of the forces in the Reserve, and as in charge of the military position there, has been placed in a position of the greatest delicacy and responsibility, and has discharged his delicate and responsible duties in a manner which might be regarded as reflecting the highest credit on him, were it not that no true soldier takes credit to himself for performing his duty. This colony and South Africa at large owe much at the present juncture to the presence in command of her Majesty's troops of so careful and prudent an officer as Sir Leicester Smyth and to the able seconding he has received from Col. Curtis."

10th Hussars. The South-Eastern Gazette says:—"Ex-Serjt. Cramp, of the 10th Hussars, has been on a short visit to Canterbury, his appearance causing no little interest among his military associates. Serjt. Cramp was with Major Slade when that gallant officer was killed in Egypt. How the serjeant has escaped with his life is a mystery to all the medical men who have seen him; in fact, his death was officially announced. Serjt. Cramp was sent out with an officer in charge of a company of scouts on the day when the 19th Hussars were so cut up. A detachment was sent to the relief of the 19th, and the scouts were passed. A short distance from him was an Arab chief. He took no notice of this man, who, however, came up behind the serjeant and, with a double-edged sword, levelled a blow at him. The cut extended right across the head, and completely severed the skull from the left eye to the back of the head, and, being a straight one, took off the upper part of the ear and cut through one of the main arteries. Serjt. Cramp fell from his horse, and as the Arab was making a charge at him, he threw his carbine at him. This the Arab seized, and rode off. The remarkable thing is that, although Serjt. Cramp's skull was completely laid open, he never lost consciousness, and when taken to the hospital was enabled to explain to the medical staff his feelings, and to give his commanding officer a 'last message' for his friends With a view to stopping the flow of blood, his throat was cut and the arteries gathered up and tied. Marvellous to say, he recovered, and with the exception of having lost all feeling on the left side of his face, he expresses himself to be fair in health, but of course totally unfit for any kind of work."

11th Hussars. Particulars received at Debbeh state that of Col. Stewart's party 17 persons were killed. On the first day they landed armed, and they were well received, and a sheep was given to them. On the second day they landed armed only with revolvers. They were then attacked. When the women on board saw this, they flung their valuables into the Nile. On seeing the natives approaching they killed three with Remingtons. The women were cut to pieces. The cannon was too heavy to transport.

12th Lancers. Sir C. Goring, Bart., formerly a lieut. in the regiment, died at Highdean, Essex, on the 3rd inst.

13th Hussars. The head-quarters and service troops embark at Bombay on Tuesday next in H.M.S. Serapis, en route to the Cape.

15th Hussars. The Standard says:—"Col. Luck, who commanded the 15th Hussars in the Boer Campaign of 1881, has, on his arrival in India, assumed the command of the Scinde Brigade of the Bombay Army, vice Brig.-Gen. Oldershaw. Col. Luck is about to raise an additional regiment of Scinde Horse."

19th Hussars. A telegram dated Assouan, Nov. 6, says:—"The 19th Hussars arrived here this afternoon."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Gen. P. V. England, col.-comdt., died at Dover on the 6th inst., aged 96 years. He entered the Army, May 10, 1805; became lieut., June 1, 1806; capt., March 11, 1817; brevet major, Jan. 10, 1837; lieut.-col., Aug. 17, 1843; col., Feb. 17, 1854; major-gen., Aug. 9, 1858; lieut.-gen., April 5, 1866; and gen., March 29, 1873. He was appointed col.-comdt., Feb. 27, 1866. He served with the expeditions to the Weser in 1805-6, to the Cape and South America in 1806-7; campaign of 1813 in the Peninsula, including the battle of Vittoria and siege of San Sebastian (medal with two clasps).

The following officers of the regiment are still living who took part in the battle of Inkerman thirty years ago:—Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge; Gens. Sir R. Dacres, Sir C. Dickson, Sir D. Wood, Sir J. W. Fitzmayer, Sir C. D'Aguilar, Sir J. Adye, and J. Turner; Lieut.-Gens. Sir M. A. S. Biddulph, Sir E. Hamley, Hon.

* Russian losses, 10,729 killed, wounded, and prisoners (256 officers), out of 40,000, total = 11,959; English lost 30 officers killed, 91 wounded, 597 men killed, 1,760 wounded, out of 7,464, total = 2,573; French lost 13 officers and 130 men killed, and 36 officers and 750 men wounded, total = 1,039.

E. T. Gage, and Hon. D. M. Fraser; Major-Gens. H. P. Yates, J. F. Pennycuick, and G. le M. Tupper; Cols. G. C. Henry, W. G. Andrewes, A. H. King, E. Markham, H. J. Alderson, W. Stirling, and P. E. Hill; Capt. R. S. Sutherland; Lieut. E. Dixon; Rdgmrs. W. Johnston and J. Drummond; Qrmrs. S. Brown and J. Land.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. Sir C. Warren was entertained at dinner on Wednesday night, at the Cannon-Street Hotel, by the South-African Trade section of the London Chamber of Commerce. Mr. D. P. Blaine, the chairman of the section, presided, and in the speeches of the influential gentlemen present there was a tone of entire confidence in the tact and talent of the officer who has been appointed to a most difficult command, and whose modest reply showed how deeply he felt the trust reposed in him.

Major R. Calrow died at Mussoorie, E.I., on the 6th ult. The deceased joined the Army, May 3, 1864; and became major, May 3, 1884.

The Times says:—"There are at the present time 12 officers and about 150 Royal Engineers from Chatham undergoing a term of instruction in submarine mining at Portsmouth under the superintendence of Major Bucknill. The school has been now wholly removed to Fort Blockhouse, at the harbour mouth; Fort Monckton, where the submarine miners were formerly located, having been given up for the accommodation of the Militia during their annual training, it being considered that the time was too long to keep the men under canvas outside the walls of Blockhouse Fort. A number of temporary buildings have been erected for the storing of mines and other gear used in the operations round the coast, but as it is expected that the school at Chatham, where the work of laying down and taking up mines has to be performed in a muddy river and under great disadvantages, will eventually be transferred bodily to Portsmouth, further developments are under consideration. It is proposed to construct a pier in Stokes Bay, a splendid water area for the purposes of the special training and remotely situated, together with all the necessary accessories suitable for the establishment of a national school of submarine mining."

Orders have been received at Chatham directing the 7th Compy. to embark for South Africa on the 12th inst. The company will go out under the command of Capt. Bagot. The 7th is a field-service company, and will take out its field waggons, &c.

Scots Guards. Lieut. Bowen was found dead in his bed at his lodgings in St. James's Street on Saturday morning last from a gunshot wound, a verdict of temporary insanity being returned by the coroner's jury. He entered the regiment in July, 1881, and was rather of a reserved disposition, but had attached friends in the battalion.

1st, or Royal Scots. Orders having been sent to the 1st Batn. at Barbadoes to embark on board H.M.S. Orontes for the Cape of Good Hope, drafts from the depôt of the regiment at Glencorse and from the 2nd Batn. at Edinburgh have been despatched to Gibraltar, where the Orontes will call for them on her way to the Cape.

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. The 1st Batn., which was under orders to proceed to Chakrata, is, it is understood, likely to be moved to Ferozepore. Major J. Woodward, late of the regiment, died at Folkestone on the 31st ult., aged 74 years.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). Capt. Grattan, 1st Batn., has joined the pay office of the 2nd Batn. King's Own Borderers on probation, as a candidate for an appointment in the Pay Department.

9th Norfolk Regiment. Major D. Dickinson died at Morar, East Indies, of cholera, on the 2nd inst., aged 40 years. The deceased was the son of the late Rev. D. Dickinson, rector of Banbridge, county Devon. He joined the Army Dec. 19, 1862; became lieut., March 27, 1866; capt., Feb. 16, 1878, and major, Jan. 18, 1882.

19th Yorkshire Regiment. Major Levin, 2nd Batn., has been noted at the Horse Guards for appointment as an adjutant in the Auxiliary Forces on a vacancy occurring. Capt. Franklyn is a candidate for the Pay Department.

22nd Cheshire Regiment. The Morning Post says:—"Lieut.-Col. Molyneux, Brigade-Major, 3rd Infantry Brigade, at Aldershot, has been appointed Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. on the Staff of Col. Sir Charles Warren, K.C.M.G., R.E., and will at once proceed to the Cape.

28th Gloucestershire Regiment. The Liverpool Courier says:—"The regiment has left Portsmouth for York, Bradford, and Tynemouth. This corps arrived home five years ago from Singapore, with 850 men, none of whom had less than two years' service. Of this fine body of men, but 49 (including musicians) are now serving in the battalion, and the total strength is about 450 to 500, mostly young soldiers. Yorkshire is considered a good recruiting-ground, and perhaps the historic fame of 'The Slashers' will cause the ranks to be filled up. The 28th was the first regiment that embarked at Liverpool for the Russian war in 1854."

30th East Lancashire Regiment. Another change is likely to be made in the Indian reliefs. The 30th were down for a third year at Meean Meer, a very unusual thing of late years. It was, however, represented that this was a great hardship; and as the medical authorities reported very strongly against their remaining longer in the station, they are now expected to be about to change places with the Northumberland Fusiliers, who were to have moved from Chakrata to Ferozepore. The Northumberland Fusiliers will, therefore, go to Meean Meer, and the 30th move to Ferozepore. This also makes it probable that the Connaught Rangers will go to Jullundur. A correspondent writes from India:—"The 1st East Lancashire, who are about to leave Meean Meer for Ferozepore on account of the sickness in the regiment, are no worse than any other regiment which has marched out of the Lahore Cantonment after a two years' stay. They ought to have done well, as they spent the first three hot weathers of their present tour in the hills, and marched straight to Meean Meer. It is pretty certain the Northumberland Fusiliers, who follow them, will be just as sickly two years hence as the 2nd Liverpool Regt. were when they relieved them. The unhealthy season is from the end of the rains to the new year, and only those who have experienced it know what the men suffer during those months from constant attacks of fever and ague. It is almost a certainty that any regiment sent there will be quite useless till it has been moved to a new station; and it is wonderful that the authorities care to waste that very expensive article, the British soldier, in such a reckless way."

34th Border Regiment. Major P. Walker, D.A.A.G. for Musketry in India, died in the Red Sea, on the 18th ult., on board ss. Merton Hall, whilst on passage home. Major Walker entered the Army, July 3, 1860; became lieut., Nov. 20, 1862; capt., May 11, 1872; and major, July 1, 1881. He was appointed to the Staff in India, March 23, 1880.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. Major Goring, late capt., has succeeded to a baronetcy by the death of his uncle. Major Goring is the capt. and hon. major of the 4th Batn. Royal Sussex Regt.

37th Hampshire Regiment. Capt. Bethune, havinh attained the prescribed age, will be retired from the 16tg inst.

39th Dorsetshire Regiment. The regiment is looking forward to orders for the Cape.

40th South Lancashire Regiment will arrive at Aden next week from India.

43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Major Wilson is about to retire on pension.

44th Essex Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies will embark at Aden next week, en route to England.

46th Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. The regiment will leave Wady Halfa for the front next week.

47th Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. Major Cooper, who has been appointed A.D.C. to Lord Dufferin, the new Viceroy of India, leaves England on Wednesday next with the other Staff officers.

48th Northamptonshire Regiment. Vanity Fair says:—"That splendid old regiment, the 48th, after much hard work in Ireland, was congratulating itself upon going to the Isle of Wight, one of the best at all times, but in winter the very best quarters in England. An unbelieving officer, however, prophesied—'You're not Highlanders, and you won't get to Wight.' And he was right, for a Highland regiment has been ordered to Parkhurst, and the 48th relegated to less desirable quarters. Court fancy is clearly for kilts and trews."

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut. Lee, R.M.L.I., has embarked in the Pembroke, to relieve Lieut. Field, proceeded en route to join the Nelson, on the Australian station.

The under-mentioned officers of the R.M.L.I. have been granted leave of absence:—Major Clements, two months, on medical certificate; Capt. Robyns, one month; Col.-Comdt. Blanckley, two months; Capt. and Adjt. Quill, three weeks; Major Peake and Capt. and Adjt. Denny, six weeks; and Capt. and Adjt. Wright, two months.

Lieut. Swanton, R.M.L.I., has been directed to proceed to the Royal Marine Depôt, Walmer, for duty.

Col. 2nd-Comdt. Jones, R.M.L.I., has assumed command of the Plymouth Division, vice Col.-Comdt. Blanckley, proceeded on leave of absence.

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. During their recent short stay at Peshawur the Duke and Duchess of Connaught were shown the silver centre-piece presented to the regiment by the Duke's grandfather, the Duke of Kent. This handsome piece of plate was given to the corps for their steadiness in suppressing a mutiny of two regiments at Gibraltar during the Duke's command there, and bears the following inscription:—"The gift of H.R.H. Edward Duke of Kent to Lieut.-Col. Andrew Ross and Officers of the 54th Regiment as a testimony of the high sense his Royal Highness entertains of the steady discipline and distinguished good conduct displayed by them and their regiment on the night of December 24, 1802." We understand that Col. Newbolt and the officers of the regiment are about to present the Duke and Duchess with an illustrated copy of the records of the regiment as a reminiscence of their visit to Peshawur. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Gossett, who has been acting for Major Stewart, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. at head-quarters in India, is going to Kussowlie to act for Col. Dalrymple, who is coming home on leave.

56th Essex Regiment will proceed up the Nile next week.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. The head-quarters, 3rd Batn., stationed in Cyprus, have moved down from Troödos Camp to their winter-quarters at Polymedea. Lieut. Kennedy, 3rd Batn., has returned to Egypt to take over the duties of adjt. to the half-battalion stationed there, vice Lieut. Beaumont, who has proceeded up the Nile in charge of the signallers accompanying the Expedition. Lieut. Pretyman, 4th Batn., died at Ferozepore on the 1st ult., aged 22 years, from the accidental discharge of his gun.

62nd Wiltshire Regiment. Capt. Hill has left England for Gibraltar, to take up the appointment of Superintendent of Gymnasia at that station.

63rd Manchester Regiment. The death is announced of Col. W. Leckie, Lieut.-Col. on the Retired Full Pay List. He served with the 39th Regt. at the siege and fall of Sebastopol in 1855, and at the attacks on June 18 and Sept. 8 (medal, with clasp, Brevet of Major, Knight of the Legion of Honour, and Turkish medal). He joined the Army Nov. 10, 1843; became lieut., April 16, 1845; capt., April 2, 1852; major, June 6, 1856; lieut.-col., Jan. 1, 1868; and col., Sept. 1, 1875.

71st Highland Light Infantry. Lieut. Balfour, who has been appointed an aide-de-camp to Lord Dufferin, Viceroy of India, will embark for Calcutta on Wednesday next.

74th Highland Light Infantry. A handsome stained-glass window has been erected in the Melksham Parish Church, in memory of the late Capt. Lopes, who died on Dec. 10, 1882, at Cairo, from fever contracted during the Egyptian Campaign.

75th Gordon Highlanders, 760 strong, left Cairo on Wednesday night, on their way up the Nile.

83rd Royal Irish Rifles. Capt. Thorburn, having attained the prescribed age, is about to be retired.

88th Connaught Rangers. It is reported in India that the regiment will probably proceed to Jullundur. Lieut.-Col. Dalrymple is coming home from India on leave.

96th Manchester Regiment. There has been, we hear with regret, another shooting case reported in India. Three men broke out of barracks some time ago with their rifles and ammunition. They luckily only succeeded in killing one native, in spite of firing a considerable number of rounds.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. Assist.-Commissary-Gen. Beale has embarked for service in Egypt. Assist.-Commissary-Gen. Powell died three days after leaving Singapore, whence he had been invalided. The loss of this officer will be much felt by a large number of his brother officers; a kinder-hearted and better friend never existed. No. 13 Company arrived under the command of Capt. Pearse, D.A.C.G., at Aldershot from Shorncliffe, on Wednesday. Capt. Grant, D.A.C.G., is under orders to proceed to Bechuanaland with a detachment of Commissariat supply men. No. 10 Company, under the command of Capt. Clayton, D.A.C.G., is about to embark for service in South Africa. Qrmr. Musgrave has been posted to No. 10 Company. Capt. Burrell, D.A.C.G., is under orders to proceed to Bechuanaland.

MILITIA.

The following is a list in the order of merit, and with the total number of marks obtained, of the Lieutenants of Militia recommended for commissions in the Regular Army who are reported as having passed the qualifying examination held by the Civil Service Commissioners in October, 1884:—Denis M. Bower, 3,647 marks; Alexander Murray, 3,452; Randal C. E. S. Smyth, 3,368; Herbert A. Moore, 3,207; Douglas Herbert, 3,167; Hon. Henry W. Trefusis, 2,993; Berkeley J. T. Levett, 2,990; William Owen, 2,788; Henry W. Oliver, 2,603; Cecil G. Doran, 2,492; Mervyn H. Nunn, 2,447; Hon. Ronald F. Greville, 2,380; Benjamin P. S. Rooke, 2,302; Arthur L. H. Buchanan, 2,179; Robert M. Poore, 2,028; John G. Parker, 2,012; Edward L. Sullivan, 1,948; Charles C. L. Gower, 1,932; Frederick H. Peterson, 1,662; and Thomas M. Kirkwood, 1,658. In addition to the above, the following candidate passed a qualifying examination in geometrical drawing: John W. S. Burns.

THE TROOPING SEASON.

The following are the movements of her Majesty's Indian troopships for the season of 1884-85:—

The Malabar will arrive at Bombay on Oct. 11 with drafts, and will sail for England on Oct. 22, with time-expired men.

The Crocodile will arrive on Oct. 21 with T and U Batys., No. 1 Baty. E. Division, and No. 1 Baty. James Russell McCoy, the principal inhabitant of Pitcairn's Island, having been lately interviewed by the skipper of a Norwegian barque, intimated that the islanders were very much in want of some newspapers. Many Naval officers have cause to remember with pleasurable feelings their visits to this little out-of-the-way spot, and surely some one of the ships of the Pacific might make a trip over there and supply their deficiency.

The Flying Squadron of the German Imperial Navy, consisting of the steam corvettes Bismarck, 16 guns, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Edward Knoir; Gneisenau, 16 guns; Olga, 10 guns; and the Ariadne, eight guns, from Wilhelmshaven, last from Dover, put into Plymouth Sound on Monday morning, when the customary salutes were exchanged. The Squadron left Plymouth on Thursday for Madeira, en route for Angra Pequena, on the West Coast of Africa, to formally take over the new German possessions there.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

GENERAL OFFICER.—All persons holding commissions from the Queen are entitled to the privilege, and as officers of the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers hold such commissions, their right cannot be questioned. It seems to be forgotten sometimes that it was to prevent all such misunderstandings, and the annoyances arising therefrom, that the Queen's commission was granted to officers of the Auxiliary Forces.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1884.

ON the principle of "audi alteram partem," we publish a letter from a correspondent signing himself "N.," on the subject of examinations for Army Medical Officers. Our correspondent does not distinguish between the examination for Surgeons before promotion to the rank of Surgeon-Major—i.e., officers ranking as Captain for the rank of Major—and that for senior Surgeons-Major for the rank of Brigade-Surgeon, the analogy being officers ranking as Lieutenant-Colonels of five or six years' standing for the rank of full Colonel. As regards the first, the junior Medical Officers have, as a body, quite accepted the new rules as fit and proper, though there are a few blots in this part of the scheme—really a revival of an old rule—that lead us to think the official who drew it up was wanting in practical knowledge. Take the case of India. In the Bengal Presidency, there are but two Medical Schools, Calcutta and Lahore; and should a Surgeon be quartered in India when he should be examined—i.e., between his fifth and tenth years of service—he must procure his certificate of operative surgery from one of these schools. For this purpose he may have to travel many hundreds of miles, and be put to great expense, as the Government of India will certainly not recognise the Army Circular as giving an officer a claim to travel at the public expense. Again, at Lahore the Professor of Surgery was quite lately a junior Surgeon of the Indian Medical Department; so that we would have the Surgeon of the Indian Medical Department, perhaps junior to the candidate, giving a certificate of operative surgery to a Surgeon of the Medical Staff, while Sir A. Home, Surgeon-General of her Majesty's Forces in India, all the Deputy-Surgeons-General, all the Brigade-Surgeons and senior Surgeons-Major of the Medical Staff, were unable to confer one. Yet a further instance. Fellows of the Royal Colleges of Physicians are excused the examinations in medicine and surgery. Was it not known to Whitehall Yard that Fellows of the Colleges of Physicians are elected, and pass no examination, while degrees, only obtained after examination of Doctors of Medicine of London, Cambridge, Dublin, &c., are not qualifications? Leaving out these blots, the examination for Surgeons is a good and proper test, and, so far, we are entirely with our correspondent. In the case of Surgeons-Major of over twenty years' service, men ranking with Lieutenant-Colonels, some of them for six years and over, there is no analogy for such an examination, either in our or in any other Army that we are aware of; and the age of the senior Surgeons-Major ought to exempt them from such a test. On looking over the official Army List, we find that the first twenty Surgeons-Major for promotion average over 50 years of age, one being 54, one 53, one 52, two 51, and four 50. Surely examinations applied to such "elderly victims," as they are styled by the ex-President of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, in his able letter to the Lancet on this subject, are ridiculous. Our correspondent lays much stress on the statement (we do not agree with him in calling it a fact) "that, as a rule, they are not equal to those in civil practice." Now, this is taking for granted a view of the case that is fairly open to objection. No doubt Army Surgeons are not, and could not possibly be, equal to the leading surgeons and physicians of our great towns,—men who take up special lines of work, and have enormous practice and experience in them. But we think it will be found that, as a rule, Army Surgeons are quite equal, if not superior, to the main body of the profession, i.e., the general practitioners. It cannot possibly be expected that Army Surgeons can ever develop into Fergussons or Listers; but take them as they stand, they are a well-educated body of officers, and quite fit for the work the State demands of them. It must be borne in mind that an Army Surgeon is, so to speak, a "Jack-of-all-trades." One day he may have to treat severe cases of injury, gun-shot wounds, &c.; the next, he may have to cope with an outbreak of scarlatina; next, to detect a case of malingering; the day after, to look after a case of midwifery, and so on. All this time he has many military duties to carry on, recruiting, sanitary inspections, invaliding, inspecting prisoners, charge of stores, medicines, &c.,—in fact, his work is spread over all the various branches of the medical and military professions combined,—one year attending cholera cases in India, the next on active service in Egypt, and then looking after a station hospital at home. How far, we ask, will set examinations ensure a better class of Army Surgeons? After a certain period in a man's career, examinations are useless, and the knowledge of disease, only acquired after many years of practical work, is far more valuable than the ability to answer set questions. We have only to look into civil life to prove this. Can any one doubt that if a competitive examination were held to-morrow in London for the post, we shall say, of surgeon to one of the hospitals, and if Sir Joseph Lister, one of the greatest surgeons of the day, were pitted against a young man who had just passed his fellowship, the man fresh from his school would succeed? But, we ask, would that young man have the confidence of his patients in the way the experienced surgeon would? If Army Medical Officers are really behind the times, there are many ways of improving their practical knowledge that are far better than examinations. Are Medical Officers ever treated as officers of the Royal Engineers are, i.e., taken or sent round to see the latest professional improvements of the day? Are they in any way encouraged to work at their profession? Is leave granted to them for this purpose? When questions like these can be answered in the affirmative, it will be time to blame Army Surgeons if they are not on a level with the rest of the profession. As matters now stand, it is really praiseworthy on the part of Medical Officers of the Army that they are as good as they are; and it certainly is not likely to raise them in the opinion of the Army at large, to find the authorities instituting examinations for old officers. The proposed examinations for senior Surgeons-Major are, moreover, a direct reflection on the administration of the department from the Director-General downwards, as they declare that all the reports, inspections, &c., which have been sent in and held on them for the past twenty-five years are not worth the paper they are written on.

We understand that General H. L. Gardiner, on the Retired List, one of her Majesty's Equerries, will become a Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery by the death of General P. V. England.

Another strong draft of the Medical Staff Corps left England on Wednesday for Egypt. This detachment will bring the strength of the Medical Staff Corps in that country up to about 700 men, nearly one-third of the total strength of the corps. Although recruits have been joining this corps pretty freely of late, it is certain that if sudden and urgent demands were made for further strong drafts for service, extraordinary measures would have to be taken to find men, as the Medical Staff Corps, which is scattered all over the world, has a strength of only 2,230 of all ranks.

The news from the Nile justifies the opposition which for a long time we gave to the little boats built in this country. The Canadians say that they are not strong enough, that the construction is faulty, and that the keels are quite out of place. All the testimony of the correspondents on the spot points to the correctness of the view which we maintained from the first, that native boats and native labour were best suited to enable the Expedition to move. But certainly the dahabeahs (?) and nuggars depend upon the wind, and though at this time of the year the direction of that important factor is constantly southward, and so far favourable enabling sailing-boats to contend with the current of the Nile, it seems to have failed on several occasions recently. For the small boats which have been sent out, the Canadian steersmen no doubt are admirably suited; but all the heavy work, or at least most of it, appears to be done by the natives at the rapids. "Without their aid the soldiers could never have hauled the boats up. The cargoes were taken out at the foot of the Cataract, and portaged to the upper end by Egyptian soldiers." So says the Standard. If, indeed, the work further south be like that at Semneh, it is to be feared the Expedition will make but slow progress. The patrons of the Suakim and Berber route may exult or point without dissatisfaction at the difficulties of which they read in the progress of the Expedition to Berber, but they do not at all consider how long it would have taken to make a railway from Suakim—supposing it could be made at all in the present state of the country—or how a force of 8,000 men, with perhaps as many camp followers carrying provisions, could have been conveyed across the waterless desert to Berber. From that point, any difficulties on the way to Khartoum would be common to an expedition from Suakim, and to an expedition from Dongola. At Semneh there is a series of cataracts, as they are erroneously called. The drawings in the Illustrated London News—whose clever artist, Mr. Melton Prior, is, we regret to hear, suffering from an accident—give a very good idea, if a somewhat exaggerated one, of the general character of these narrow passes, where the slope of the ground falls rapidly, and the course of the river is impeded by barriers of rocks as the river falls. The cascades so formed become more accentuated, so to speak. The current is always strong, and the strain upon hawsers and tackle and the strength of the crews and towing apparatus excessive. It is a curious fact that the country between Berber and Dongola is almost closed to European knowledge. Our great travellers have struck across the desert from Korosko or from Berber on their way to Khartoum, and the upper stretches of the Nile between the Third and Sixth Cataracts are little known, except to natives; but by this time the Intelligence officers attached to Lord Wolseley will, no doubt, have collected plenty of information in regard to the route, and by the time the troops have been concentrated from Wady Halfa to Dongola, Lord Wolseley will have prepared his plan of advance.

A very large number of Cavalry and Infantry officers have volunteered their services for the corps of mounted riflemen in Bechuanaland. Although volunteers were only called for on Wednesday, the whole of the names have already been forwarded to headquarters.

Captain B. Pim long ago made his épreuves as an Arctic navigator, and has done many things since, including the projection of a service newspaper, which did not go very far, and an appearance in Parliament; but we do not think he ever did anything to entitle his opinion to be accepted as of much value on such a subject as the success of the Panama Canal. But the correspondent of a London paper thinks otherwise, and favours the world with three of Captain Pim's conclusions adverse to the scheme:—1. He thinks the sea-level canal cannot be completed for any reasonable sum, or within a reasonable time. He does not favour us with any definition of the meaning of the adjective, and so we cannot judge what he means. 2. The yellow-fever is endemic and deadly. But if so, the canal cannot be made, as there will be no workmen. 3. The State of Panama would secede from Columbia under French protection. Why not? Especially if the Canal cannot be made, and if yellow-fever kills all the people! It is astonishing what nonsense people talk, report, and telegraph. Pronounce your opinion, never give your reasons for it, Captain B. Pim.

What does it signify? The Indian Establishment is only, or will be only, 600 men short. It is quite true that the best "opinions" are of opinion that the Establishment is at least 15,000 short when it is full.

The apprehensions we expressed from the very beginning that Admiral Hewett's mission to Abyssinia was a mistake in all its incidents, and that the introduction of the robber bands of Ras Alula into the Soudan, under the pretence of liberating the Egyptian garrisons, was little, if anything, short of a crime, will, we fear, be thoroughly justified. At Kassala there is every possibility of a conflict between the Abyssinians and the garrison of the place, although Mason Pasha, an exceedingly able and active officer, may be relied upon to do all in his power to effect the peaceful solution of any difficulties connected with the execution of the ill-omened treaty with the Negus (?).

The Aldershot Reappropriation Board—Lieutenant-Colonel Sartorius, V.C., D.A.Q.M.G., president—assembled during the week to report upon a proposal to reappropriate certain huts in the camps as shooting galleries. It is the intention to provide a shooting gallery for each battalion of Infantry at the Camp before the commencement of the next annual course of musketry.

"The most perfect security for peace," said one of Mr. Richard's disciples the other day, "is not to be prepared for war." It certainly is a reason for not going to war, but it is no security against being attacked—rather the other way.

The Valise Equipment Committee have at length arrived at something definite, and there are now prospects of an early termination of the long series of experiments with infantry valise equipment. Four hundred sets of a modified equipment (the latest form of the 1884 pattern) have been sent to Aldershot for trial, and will be at once issued to the 1st Battalions of the 17th and 62nd Regiments. In this equipment, which has been manufactured at Woolwich, certain defects which existed in the earlier experimental issues have been remedied. On ordinary occasions in peace, it is proposed to place in the valise merely such articles of the kit as may be wanted at the time, the residue being carried for the men in the kit-bags, &c.

The adjective "our" seems to be ill-treated and misapplied very often. We read and hear of "our" being applied to the Queen's Army and the Queen's Navy by people who have nothing to do with either, whilst Mr. Bright assumes royal style, and speaks of all the people of England as if he were Sovereign. "He is," he says, "afraid that the temper of our people may be more severely tried."

There have been of late days very "liberal" principles displayed in the use of "cockades," which, originally French, were adopted in England after the time of the Stuarts, and were borne by Military officers and soldiers—subsequently by Naval officers—and their servants. The Pretender's followers carried cockades in their caps. The button, parti-coloured, in the caps of Russian, Austrian, and German officers indicate their service, as the cockades did of old, and Ambassadors' and Ministers' servants wear cockades of the national colours. Lords-Lieutenant and Deputy-Lieutenants in this country have given cockades to their domestics; but no persons save officers of the Army and Navy have a right to give cockades to their valetaille in this country.

It is interesting to know that the General and his Staff at Dongola take camel exercise kindly, attend church parade, and do all that they ought to do; but it is obvious we are a long way "out of the hunt" as regards the conduct of the Expedition as yet. The preposterous report that Lord Wolseley had opened negotiations or made offers to the Mahdi did not need contradiction; but we think Lord Wolseley would be very glad to open communications with that eminent person of another kind if he could. The reports of the difficulties above Dongola are not at all comforting.

Are we not making a little too much fuss over the Cataract operations, portages, &c., on the Nile, and the getting over of the steamers and boats? Long, long ago, these ignorant Egyptians, Arabs, &c., got steamers up to Khartoum, where Baker and Gordon found them; and we never heard in those days of a steamer having been lost as the Gizeh was the other day. In Mehemet Ali's time, and since, armies were marched to Khartoum, and the river was covered with boats; but the natives had no illustrated papers to depict their feats, and no special correspondents to chronicle the names of bimbashis and others.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 3, 1884.

In addition to the promotions which took place on the Active and Retired Lists of Flag Officers on the 30th ult., as notified in the London Gazette of 31st ult., Vice-Admiral T. Miller has been promoted to be Admiral on the Retired List, to stand on such list next after Retired Admiral V. A. Massingberd (Oct. 30).

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 5, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of July 21, 1876, the under-mentioned officer, having attained fifteen years' seniority as Commander, has been authorised to assume the rank and title of Retired Capt. :—J. C. Best (Nov. 2).

APPOINTMENTS.

Captain—Francis S. Clayton, to the Diamond.

Staff Commanders—John E. Chapple, to the Warspite; Thomas J. H. Rapson, to the Pembroke; William W. Hutton, to the Ajax.

Lieutenants—Robert S. D. Cumming, to the Falcon; Rowland E. Berkeley, to the Agamemnon; Charles E. Madden, to the Assistance; Harry F. J. Wyatt, to the Repulse; Augustus L. K. Knapton, to the Hercules; Peter O. Cazalet, to the Mutine; Walter O. Thurburn, to the Racer.

Midshipman—Archibald Shaw Stewart, to the Temeraire.

Chaplain—Rev. C. E. Painter, to the Dreadnought.

Chief Engineers—Dennis Mahoney, to the Penelope, for the Coastguard at Walmer; William E. Beale, to the Rambler.

Surgeon—Percy W. Bassett-Smith, to the Rambler.

Paymaster—Henry Dawson, to the Rambler.

Assistant-Paymaster—Herbert N. Dymott, to the Penelope.

Gunners—Benjamin Cook, to the Cordelia; Thomas Patter, to the Cyclops.

COASTGUARD.

Chief Boatman—Mortimer Sullivan, Thorney, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Port Ballintrae, vice George Baling, removed to St. Mary's.

Commissioned Boatman—Henry Rounsfell, Hayling Island, to be chief boatman, St. Catherine's Point, vice Flynn, promoted.

Agamemnon, Capt. Long, arrived at Plymouth Sound on Wednesday from Spithead. During the passage round a six hours' full-speed trial of her machinery took place. Her draught of water was, forward 20 ft. 1 in., aft 23 ft. 10 in.; revolutions, 80; indicated horse-power, 5,000; speed, 13·2 knots. Some experiments were also made in order to prove her powers of turning about, but the sea was so heavy during the greater part of the run round that only approximate results could be obtained. The Agamemnon encountered very severe weather on the passage, and shipped several large and heavy seas, so much so that there were at times from 4 ft. to 5 ft. of water on her decks, and heavy cases and lashed spars were washed about like so many pieces of cork. The quantity of water shipped was so great as to cause considerable discomfort to the officers of the ward-room mess, as well as to the men in other parts of the ship. The steering apparatus of the Agamemnon remains unaltered, nothing having been done to either the rudder or the steering-gear. Since she left Devonport the position of her compass has been changed, and before she left Spithead her after water-ballast tanks were filled, in order to deepen her stern in the water, so as to offer means for the better action of the rudder. The officers of the Agamemnon regard her as a very good sea boat, but she is apt to make very heavy plunges in a sea, and it will be readily understood that a plunge in a high sea of 8,510 tons is not a pleasant experience for those on board of her. She steamed up the harbour at Devonport, where she will make good defects and complete the work that was left undone when she left Devonport some weeks since. She is expected to sail on Tuesday next.

Alecto, Lieut.-Com. Harston, was by latest advices employed in the river Niger, and would return to Cape Coast Castle about Oct. 15, to meet the senior officer. Mr. Richard Daly, gunner of this ship, has returned to England, invalided.

Crocodile, Capt. Carr, left Bombay on Saturday morning for Portsmouth.

Enchantress, Staff-Com. Vine, which has for some years past been used as the yacht of the Lords of the Admiralty, has performed her last voyage in that capacity, and in April next she will be succeeded by the Alacrity, steel twin-screw despatch vessel, now building by Palmer's Shipbuilding Company, Jarrow. It is not yet known to what purpose the Enchantress will be put, but it is understood that she will be used as a despatch vessel.

Falcon, Com. Pringle, has left Malta for Suakim.

Flamingo, Com. Custance, which recently returned to England after several years' absence on the North American and West Indies station, is ordered to be paid off at Devonport to-day.

Flirt, Com. Craigie, has been ordered to proceed from Fernando Po to the southern portion of the West Coast of Africa, to inquire into the recent proceedings of German men-of-war in that quarter. Having performed this duty she will proceed to St. Helena to grant leave to her crew, returning to Cape Coast Castle in January next.

Forward, Lieut.-Com. Furlonger, has lately returned to Cape Coast Castle from the vicinity of the Cameroons, where she was sent by the senior officer to enter into treaties with chiefs of various nations, and annex certain territory upon which the Germans were supposed to have designs. This annexation is, of course, subject to the approval of the Home Government. The Forward left Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 12 for Elmina, to embark the Governor of the Gold Coast Colony, and convey him to Accra. There has been a considerable amount of sickness on board this vessel, owing to her having been almost constantly employed in the African rivers during the four months she has been on the coast. Up to the present nearly a third of her ship's company have been invalided.

Frolic, Com. Parr, was expected to return to Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 20 from Ascension.

Goshawk, Lieut.-Com. Moore, was expected to return to Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 20 from Ascension.

Griffon, Com. Davies, has received orders to return home from the North American and West Indies station. She was recommissioned at Bermuda in March, 1881.

Inflexible, Capt. Seymour, arrived at Smyrna on Saturday.

Invincible, Capt. Buckle, has arrived at Malta from Alexandria.

Iris, Capt. Rice, arrived at Malta on Tuesday from Marseilles.

Kingfisher was undocked at Sheerness on Monday to undergo a series of trials of her machinery on the measured mile, Maplin Sands, preparatory to being commissioned to reinforce the British Fleet in the East Indies.

Lily, Com. Gibson, arrived at Madeira yesterday, and will sail to-day for Bermuda.

Malabar, Capt. Harris, arrived at Suez on Monday, and left for England on Wednesday.

Opal, Capt. Brooke, was expected to return to Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 20 from Ascension with the rest of the cruising squadron. On the arrival of the Rapid at Cape Coast Castle, this vessel is under orders to proceed to Sydney, to relieve the Espiègle on the Australian station.

Philomel, Com. Lang, has captured a dhow with 150 slaves on board, which will be brought to Aden.

Racer, which was launched at Devonport a few months since, is progressing rapidly for active service. The engines are nearly all in place, while the riggers of the dockyard are working arduously to have everything ready aloft in the course of a month.

Reindeer is to be prepared with all despatch for service on the China station. She is expected to be ready in about 10 days.

Rifleman, Com. Mayow, was paid off at Sheerness on Tuesday.

Seahorse, Staff Capt. Hosken, special service steamer, will be attached to the Channel Squadron, in place of the Starling.

Starling, Com. Sanders, was under orders to leave Sheerness yesterday for the Red Sea, to join the fleet, under the command of Comdre. Molyneux.

Stork, Lieut.-Com. Blennerhasset, was expected to return to Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 20 from Ascension. On arrival at Cape Coast Castle, this vessel has been directed to proceed to Monte Video, to relieve the Wrangler on the South-East Coast of America station.

Tamar, Capt. Warren, made a three hours' full-speed trial of her engines on Monday in the Channel, the results being considered eminently satisfactory. The mean speed attained was 13·4 knots, and mean indicated horse-power 2,917, as against 2,845 at the contractors' trial. The boilers gave a good supply of steam, all the bearings worked quite cool, and there was no priming. The Tamar left on Tuesday for Portsmouth. On leaving that port she will have 950 tons of coal on board. Her speed is to be 10½ knots, and her consumption of coals will be at the rate of 30 tons a day, so that should the weather prove anything like favourable she will have on board coals enough to carry her to the Cape of Good Hope, where she may be expected to arrive about Dec. 10. The Tamar left Portsmouth on Wednesday for the Australian station with relief crews for the Nelson, Diamond, and Lark. The programme laid down for the ship on her voyage is as follows:—Arrive at Madeira on the 12th inst., leaving same day and arriving at St. Vincent on the 16th inst.; leave St. Vincent on the 18th inst., and reach Simon's Bay on Dec. 6; depart from Simon's Bay on Dec. 13, and arrive at King George's Sound on the last day of the present year. King George's Sound will be left on Jan. 2, 1885, and Sydney reached on the 9th of that month. On her return home with the crews of the Nelson and Diamond, the Tamar is to take a different route. She will leave Sydney on Jan. 23, arrive at King George's Sound on the 31st of the same month; leave that that place on Feb. 1, and arrive at Diego Garcia on the 14th. This port will be left on Feb. 16, and Aden reached on the 26th. The ship is timed to leave Aden on Feb. 28, to arrive at Suez on March 5, to leave the next day and arrive at Port Said on the 8th, leave the same day, and reach Malta on the 12th. This island will be left on March 15, and Portsmouth reached on the 24th of that month. During the trip—out viâ the Cape, home viâ the Canal—the Tamar will cover a distance of 24,312 miles, equal to the circuit of the globe.

Temeraire, Capt. Domville, arrived at Larnaca on Saturday from Port Said.

Tourmaline, Capt. Boyle, late senior officer's ship on the coast of Madagascar, passed a very satisfactory inspection at Sheerness Harbour on Monday, at the hands of Flag Capt. James A. Poland. Major Triscott inspected the Royal Marines.

Triumph, at Portsmouth, is to have numerous alterations made in the Admiral's apartments. The recommendation that this ship should be fitted with torpedo net defence booms having been approved, directions have been given for the work to be proceeded with forthwith. Her officers and crew will be appointed in January, when she will leave for the Pacific to relieve the Swiftsure.

Victoria and Albert, Royal yacht, Capt. Fullerton, will, on completion, be subjected to a series of runs. It is rumoured that she will probably soon proceed as far as Gibraltar to embark the Duke and Duchess of Connaught on their return from India. Should this rumour prove correct, the work of decoration will be proceeded with immediately after the repairs have been executed.

Watchful, Lieut.-Com. Goodrich, arrived at Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 8 from England, and proceeded the following day to Elmina to coal, returning to Cape Coast Castle on Oct 11, where she would await the arrival of the senior officer in the Opal.

LAUNCH OF THE PYLADES.

The unarmoured corvette Pylades was successfully launched from the building-slip at Sheerness Dockyard on Wednesday, in the presence of numerous spectators. This vessel is an important addition to the list of unarmoured cruisers in the British Navy. Among those present at the ceremony were:—W. H. Smith, M.P.; Rear-Admiral Watson, Superintendent of Chatham Dockyard; Capt. Codrington, Superintendent of Sheerness Dockyard; Capt. Lord Kerr, of the Medway Steam Reserve; Capt. Poland, of the Duncan; Capt. Boyle, of the Tourmaline; Col. Hunt, R.M.; Col. Berthon, R.A.; Col. Le Mesurier, R.E.; Col. D. Cameron, R.A.; and the principal officers of the dockyard, port, and garrison. The religious ceremony was conducted by the Rev. H. W. Millett, R.N. The vessel was christened at 1 o'clock by Mrs. Codrington, and a few minutes afterwards that lady cut the cord, and the vessel immediately left the slip, amid enthusiastic cheers. The 1st Kent Artillery Volunteer band was in attendance and played "Rule Britannia" as the Pylades entered the water. The wind was blowing down the harbour with considerable force at the time of the launch, and the ship ran some risk of dashing against the walls at the entrance of the dock, but she was fortunately secured at the earliest possible moment by the powerful steamers Locust and Sheerness and towed into the steam basin in safety. The Pylades carries 14 guns, and is built upon precisely similar lines to the Caroline, which was launched at Sheerness about two years ago, and is now lying in the steam basin fully equipped and ready for sea. She is constructed square to the load water-line, and has a steel deck fitted between the fore bulkhead of the boiler-room and the after bulkhead of the engine-room, composed of two thicknesses of ⅝ in. steel plates. The engine hatch is protected with water-proof steel shutters and the boiler hatch and ladder by shot-proof gratings. Her magazines are also well protected. The Pylades will be mounted with 14 5-in. breech-loading guns, with the Vavasseur sliding carriages, which will be so arranged as to give the ship an all-round fire. She will also carry a strong equipment of Gardner and Nordenfelt magazine guns, the latter to be mounted in conning towers. The Pylades will be fitted with all the latest improvements in shipbuilding, including the electric machinery for discharging the spar torpedo. Her dimensions are as follows:—Length between perpendiculars, 200 ft.; extreme breadth, 38 ft.; mean breadth, 37 ft.; draught of water forward, 12 ft. 9 in.; aft, 15 ft. 9 in.; displacement in tons, 1,420. The cost of building the hull of the Pylades is estimated at £51,015, of which £21,351 is for materials and £29,664 is for labour. Her masts and rigging are estimated to cost a further sum of £1,560. The Admiralty have arranged with Messrs. Laird Brothers, of Birkenhead, to supply and fit the engines and machinery at a cost of £16,500. Her engines will be of 1,000 horse-power, and in this respect she will be more powerful than any of her sister ships. She will be manned by a crew of 151 men, and will, it is believed, combine good sailing qualities with a high rate of speed under steam. She possesses great facilities for the storage of coal, and will thus be able to make long voyages without calling at coaling-stations.

J. H. Ogle, leading stoker, of the Hecla; H. Spraggs, naval schoolmaster, of the Lion; J. Sweetlove, engine-room artificer, of the Temeraire; J. W. Dowty, ship's steward, 3rd class, of the Myrmidon; T. Cobbledick, chief boatman-in-charge, B. Pearce, T. Perry, and W. H. Lucas, boatmen, of the Coastguard; O. G. Bush, colour-serjeant, 20th Company, and W. Hoeek, corporal, 28th Company, of the R.M.L.I.; T. Beer, serjeant, 13th Company, and T. Saltmer, gunner, 16th Company, R.M.A., have been awarded the medal for long service and good-conduct.

A school for instruction in submarine mining and torpedo warfare generally is to be established on a very extensive scale at Gosport. It was currently reported two years since that Blockhouse Fort, at the entrance to Portsmouth Harbour, was about to become the head-quarters for submarine torpedo instruction. Considerable opposition to the proposal and some strong influence brought to bear against the suggested alteration had the effect, for a time at least, of overthrowing the plan. Fort Monckton and Gillkicker Fort, on the edge of Stokes Bay Beach, will in a short time be devoted to a complete school for torpedo instruction.

A number of the men employed at Devonport Dockyard are to receive an increased pay. The cases of the others who have sent in applications are under consideration, and it is believed that the majority of the men in the dockyard will shortly be included in the list of those to whom the advanced pay has been made. The announcement already made has occasioned great satisfaction.

The Coastguard cruiser Seamew grounded on Scorby Sands, near Yarmouth, on Thursday morning. The Gorleston volunteer lifeboat Refuge went to her assistance, and after some time she was floated off and brought to anchor in Yarmouth Roads.

An augmentation on an extensive scale of the Royal Marines was announced on Saturday, and it is stated that it is proposed to immediately open up recruiting stations throughout the country, and raise between 3,000 and 4,000 additional men, the standard to be 5 ft. 5½ in. in height, and breast measurement 33 in. It is understood that there will be some modification in the uniform and accoutrements of the Light Infantry.

According to the World, an amusing incident occurred at the commissioning of the Dreadnought. She is so shaped that a careful examination of the funnels is necessary for an outsider to tell which is her bow and which her stern. On her pendant being hoisted at 9 o'clock on the morning of commissioning, it was discovered that the signal department had not yet correctly taken their bearings, and that the white ensign was flying at the bows, while the Union Jack fluttered gaily aft.

EXAMINATIONS FOR ARMY SURGEONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The good which must accrue to the Army Medical Department from the examinations which the recent Circulars on this subject advocate, does not seem to have been recognised by a large number of Army doctors; and yet nobody, probably, is better able to judge of the utility of this measure than the doctors themselves. The reason for this, however, is not difficult to find. No man who feels his pay and promotion assured to him will hail with delight a regulation which makes his advancement depend upon his passing an examination, and which entails an amount of reading and study he otherwise would avoid. Those, however, who are not in the profession are able to look at this matter in a more impartial manner, and they naturally rejoice at a measure which must in time raise the efficiency of the Army Medical Department. To realise this fully, it is necessary to remember that many men enter the service as doctors, not from love of the profession, or because they feel an interest in the work they have selected to undertake, but simply as a means of obtaining a livelihood, and because they know that they will always have a fixed income assured to them, and will not, like the civil practitioner, be obliged to work hard and study a good deal in after-life, so as to keep pace with the improvements of the day, and make the profession a paying one. It is not to be expected that men will work when they know that there is no necessity for them to do so. The bad Army surgeon receives the same pay as the good one, and gets his promotion just as soon; thus there is no incentive to work, nothing to induce him, once he has entered the Army, to make a study of his profession. The natural consequence of this is, that although there are instances where Army doctors have devoted themselves to their profession and become eminent medical men, as a rule they are not equal to those in civil practice; in other words, they are not as efficient as they should be. The fact that examinations are now looked upon as necessary is an admission of the truth of this statement. Now, there are several causes which contribute towards this. Soldiers when they enlist are passed "sound" into the service; they remain but a few years in the ranks. Some of the worst forms of disease, such as long-standing chronic cases, seldom, therefore, come under the Army doctor's care. A soldier, also, if he becomes seriously ill, so as to be rendered unfit for military service, is brought before a medical board and invalided; thus he is treated by the Army surgeon but for a short time. These circumstances are against the Army practitioner, for he fails to gain the amount of experience he otherwise would, and the consequence is that less confidence is placed in him than in the ordinary medical man. There is no profession where constant reading and study are more necessary, and any regulation that tends to insure this being done must commend itself to those who have the welfare of the Army at heart. The advisability, therefore, of obliging Army surgeons to undergo an examination before they are promoted—that is to say, of obliging them to study their profession—can hardly be over-estimated. Examinations were introduced into the Army some years ago, so that our combatant officers, by acquiring a greater knowledge of military subjects, should become more highly efficient. Surely it is as necessary that our medical officers should also be as efficient as possible. The question as to what that examination should be is one that must be settled by the medical profession; but it stands to reason that if the regulations oblige Army doctors to study more, the Army will in time possess a better-read and more highly efficient medical staff.—I am, &c.,

At a well-attended meeting on October 21, the president (Mr. R. Coward) of the Malta Branch of the Ship Constructive Association officially opened the reading-rooms of the society, the objects of which are stated to be to watch over the interests of the trade in her Majesty's dockyard, and to advance socially and intellectually the condition of its members.

We strongly advise, not only all Naval officers, but every one to obtain, read, and thoroughly digest the facts contained in the extra Pall Mall Gazette of next week. Besides "The Truth About the Navy," a great mass of information not easily to be obtained will be published therein.

The Saone has sailed for Kelung with the war material lately asked for by Admiral Courbet.

Vice-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh has consented to become a patron of the Waghorn Memorial Fund, and has subscribed towards the cost of the statue intended to be erected at Chatham. The committee have decided to let the memorial take the form of a bronze statue representing Lieut. Waghorn—the pioneer of the Overland Route—in naval uniform. The statue, which will be on a granite pedestal, is to be erected on an eminence overlooking the town of Chatham and the Medway.

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions in Sixteen Languages.—How to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

Summary of Events.

OCTOBER 29.—Lieut. Rogatcheff and Lieut. Stromberg (Navy), nihilists, hanged in Schlüsselberg prison.

OCTOBER 30.—Rumours of bad news from Soudan circulate in Alexandria. Two steam launches wrecked.

NOVEMBER 1.—Lord Wolseley arrived at Dongola.

NOVEMBER 2.—Telegram arrived, announcing fall of Khartoum, but report afterwards denied. Major Dorward and 50 men of the Royal Engineers left Sarrat for Dah. Lord Northbrook arrived in London from Egypt. Three companies of the Guards arrived at Wady Halfa under Lieut.-Col. Rowley.

NOVEMBER 3.—Decision arrived at by the Government to send a military force with Sir C. Warren to Bechuanaland. Gen. L. Nugent died at Southsea, aged 68.

NOVEMBER 4.—Two sections of the Guards' Division of Camel Corps left Wady Halfa on their way up the Nile. Last of Mounted Infantry left Wady Halfa for Dongola. Lord Wolseley invested the Mudir of Dongola with insignia of G.C.M.G.

NOVEMBER 5.—Official contradiction of the report that Lord Wolseley was negotiating terms of peace with the Mahdi. The 75th left Cairo to join the Nile Expedition. Col. Sir C. Warren entertained at dinner by the London Chamber of Commerce, prior to his departure for South Africa. A strong draft of Army Medical Staff left Aldershot for Egypt.

NOVEMBER 6.—Review at Dongola by Lord Wolseley. 19th Hussars arrived at Assouan.

At the Washington Prime Meridian Conference, which closed on Saturday last, protocols were approved, which will be made the basis of an international convention, fixing Greenwich as the prime meridian.

Monday was the anniversary of the bombardment of Acre, in Syria, by the British fleet under Sir R. Stopford, which took place on Nov. 3, 1840. The great magazine blew up, and the town was afterwards surrendered to the English, who only lost 22 killed and 42 wounded. The Egyptians lost about 2,000, and 3,000 prisoners.

The World says:—"The Admiralty have decided to substantially augment the number of torpedo-boats attached to the Navy, and when Lord Northbrook reappears in the Upper House, he will, I understand, also announce that as First Lord he is fully alive to the imperative importance of maintaining our maritime supremacy; that he is prepared to make important recommendations at the proper time; but that he has no personal objection to the appointment of a Royal Commission to confidentially inquire into our relative Naval strength, if Parliament desire that reassuring step to be taken."

At the Eight Examinations held under the present regulations, the FIRST PLACE has been taken FIVE TIMES.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS. — LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA PREPARING for the MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath, whose pupils for some years past have continuously maintained a steady average of success, second to none. This year fifteen have been sent up, seven of whom have passed; four in March (one taking first place on the list), and three at the recent Examination. Very few pupils are taken, and there are two resident Military Instructors of high qualifications constantly at work, with a third in reserve in case of pressure. Thus very great individual attention is guaranteed, and the system of lecturing classes entirely avoided. Batcombe is a country village, near no town, but affording opportunity for shooting and other healthy amusements in moderation. References are permitted to the Earl of Harewood, Sir John Adye, G.C.B., General Elmhirst, C.B., General Thompson (late 7th Dragoon Guards), Colonel A. H. King, R.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, the Bishop of Bedford, and many others, all parents or near relatives of successful pupils.

MILITIA CANDIDATES for the LINE.—TUITION in MILITARY SUBJECTS for the COMPETITIVE ARMY EXAMINATION.

Lieutenant-Colonel FITZROY WILSON, late Rifle Brigade, a Graduate of the Staff College, and afterwards Garrison Instructor of the Eastern District, offers the above. Careful individual attention. A Class now at work for the March Examination. References permitted to Colonel Aylmer, S. Cameron V.C., Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. (Intelligence Branch), War Office; and Colonel C. W. Robinson, Rifle Brigade, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., Aldershot.

For prospectus, containing terms, testimonials, and references, address, East Bergholt, Colchester.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.—MILITIA OFFICERS are prepared in all the subjects for the above Examinations by Lieut.-Colonel N. STEEVENS (late 20th and 88th Regiments and Staff), and Colonel F. J. HUTCHISON (late 64th Regiment, seven years Garrison Instructor at Devonport, and for several months Acting Professor of Fortification at the Staff College).—For further particulars, apply to Lieut.-Colonel STEEVENS, 1 Wolseley Terrace, Cheltenham.

ARMY (PRELIMINARY, FURTHER, and COMPETITIVE) LITERARY EXAMINATIONS.—The Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A. (Cantab.), late Scholar of his College, &c., offers an unusual combination of advantages. A few Pupils only received. All work is done by individual teaching. No lectures to Classes, but a resident Tutor to every three Pupils, and each Tutor first-rate in his own subjects. For fourteen years, up to and including the last Sandhurst Competition, a steady average of successes, second to none, has been maintained. No town is near, but there are plenty of country amusements, and a liberal establishment is kept. The highest references can be given to noblemen, officers high in the service, and other parents of successful Pupils.—Address, Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath.

HINDUSTANI TAUGHT, Cito, Tuto, Jucunde. Officers prepared for Examinations. Correct Idiom guaranteed.—PUNDIT, 7 Beechholme Road, Clapton.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign resident and daily GOVERNESSES (finishing Senior Junior nursery), Lady Professors, Chaperons, Companions, Invalid Attendants, Lady Housekeepers, Matrons; Schools recommended. Madame Aubert's Governess List, by post, 3½d.—166 Regent Street, W.

NEWTON COLLEGE, S. DEVON.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL.—Earl of DEVON.
HEAD MASTER.—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll. Camb. (appointed, 1875.)
TWELVE RESIDENT MASTERS.—First-Class Honour Men are at the Head of each Department.

The New Buildings lately built accommodate 200 boys, to which number from its present limit of 150 it is proposed to increase the School. The advantages offered are—

1. A large staff of Masters, of undoubted calibre and experience, so that the teaching is careful and thorough.
2. Small Classes so that all can be taught properly.
3. Supervision in study to prevent idleness as far as possible.
4. Complete subdivision into Classical and Modern Sides, Non-Latin Divisions, Junior and Preparatory Schools; so that boys can take up any branch of education, scientific or otherwise, and be thoroughly taught in it.
5. Large airy class-rooms where teaching is carried on at the least pressure to master and boy.
6. Excellent situation and playing fields, large swimming-bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, &c., with all kinds of appliances for keeping boys employed and so out of mischief.
7. A system of Scholarships, entrance and others, open to all.
8. A regular succession of annual public Examinations, so that parents can judge for themselves how their sons stand in comparison with those from other schools.
9. Comfortable and well-arranged accommodation, &c., in the houses, &c.
10. Opportunity for that friendly intercourse between Masters and Boys in out-of-door games, which is so conducive to the good tone of a school.
11. The Head Master has had great experience in dealing with delicate boys, and makes special arrangement for those who desire school life and yet require careful watching.
12. Army Candidates trained without the aid of a Crammer, if entered in fair time.
13. The Preparatory School is specially provided for in a separate House, with Fives' Courts of its own, &c.

The School offers SPECIAL TERMS to the Sons of Clergy, Officers, Professional Men, &c., and the fact that Six Entrance Scholarships have been won since 1882 at Winchester and Marlborough bears testimony to its excellence in the Preparatory School, while the List of other Honours is no less satisfactory.

ARMY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.—SIX MILITIA OFFICERS are carefully PREPARED by two experienced Retired Officers, at WIDEY COTTAGE, Plymouth. Established 1879. Over 50 per cent. of those who have gone up from here have passed into the Army.—For particulars, apply to Major LETTS, as above.

HINDUSTANEE TAUGHT by a RETIRED OFFICER, Bengal Staff Corps. Has passed High Proficiency Examinations in both Hindi and Urdu at Calcutta.—Address, Captain HAYES, Junior Army and Navy Club, St. James's Street, S.W.

A HAPPY HOME, with motherly care, OFFERED to INDIAN CHILDREN or OTHERS, by the Widow of a Naval Officer, living in a large House in a central and good part of Torquay, to be educated with her only child, a girl of ten, under a superior Governess. The locality recommended by the Medical Men. Terms on application.—Address, "Mrs. R.," 9 Belgrave Terrace, Belgrave Road, Torquay.

LEFT-OFF CLOTHES, Old Uniforms, Epaulettes, Books, Jewellery, Miscellaneous Property, &c. Mr. J. Norton, 5 Wych Street, Strand, continues giving the highest price in the trade for the above. The utmost value remitted by Post-Office order the same day for all Parcels forwarded.

All letters punctually attended to.

N.B.—Mr. Norton has always on hand a large stock of present Regulation Uniforms, equal to new, at very low prices.

Trade Mark—"BLOOD MIXTURE."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—PREVISION.—As autumn treads on winter, slender, delicate, and pale-faced youths become listless, languid, and debilitated unless an alterative, combined with some tonic, be administered to quicken their enfeebled organs. This precise requirement is supplied in these noted Pills, which can and will accomplish all that is wanted, provided the printed instructions surrounding them meet with scrupulous attention. Holloway's Pills are especially adapted to supply the medical wants of youth, because his medicine acts gently, though surely, as a purifier, regulator, alterative, tonic, and mild aperient. A very few doses of these Pills will convince any discouraged invalid that his cure lies in his own hands, and a little perseverance only is demanded for its completion.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the Times, July 13th, 1864.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

From SYMES and CO., Simla:

Dear Sir,—We congratulate you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, his Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. Of all Chemists, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d.

From A. H. Macartney, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. Shubrick, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No. 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

THE KHARTOUM EXPEDITION.

The special correspondent of the Standard at Ambigol, writing on Wednesday, says:—"The Canadian voyageurs have greatly modified their first views as to the difficulty of the task of navigating the Nile at this season of the year, and admit that the passage at Bahr-el-Hajar is a very serious and arduous undertaking, and very much harder than anything they expected to meet with. They think that it is hardly likely that the main body of troops can get up even thus far without serious accidents. The Royal Engineers all go through a course of rowing at Chatham, while the soldier of the Line knows nothing whatever about boating. If, therefore, the former have had such immense difficulty in bringing up their boats, how vastly greater will be the task of men unable to handle an oar? Moreover, the pioneer boats only carry 6,600 lb., and the Canadians say that they are far too deeply laden for safety in such rapids, while the boats with the troops will carry 8,000 lb. The Canadians are of opinion that the difficulty and danger will be best met by the Army advancing in parties of 10 boats at a time; there will then be sufficient voyageurs to man the boats and to bring them up through the difficult places. If more than 10 boats were to come up at a time there would be grave risks of collision, as the stream often catches them and sweeps them across the river with great velocity, and a clear stream is necessary for safety. The Engineers say that the work coming up has been terrible. It began every day with daylight, and ended only when it became too dark to see what they were doing, and they were frequently breast deep in water. A ration of rum at night, when work is over, would go a long way to cheer them after their toil, but at present none is issued, and as the men regard this as the one luxury of their life of continued toil, it is, I think, a mistake that they should be deprived of it. There is, however, little or no grumbling; the men work most cheerfully and zealously, and the one pervading idea is to push forward. Therefore, there are more jokes than growls over their severe work and privation. In slack water the boats sail well, but their sails are insignificant in size in comparison to those carried by the native craft, and are but of little use where the current runs strong. The public must expect to hear of many serious mishaps before the Expedition arrives at its destination, and should understand that, although there may be no great risk from the action of the enemy, the men comprising it do run a considerable hazard of death by drowning, to say nothing of the effects of such tremendous work in such a climate. After having had experience in eight campaigns with British troops, I must pronounce this to be by far the most arduous undertaking that I have accompanied. The boats are now about to commence the ascent of Ambigol Cataract. This is a very difficult undertaking, especially as the height of the river alters every day, and a line found comparatively easy one day may be impracticable on that following."

A telegram dated Cairo, Nov. 6, says:—"Reports from native sources, which are credited in official quarters, have been received to the effect that a body of 4,000 occupy the road which leads to Dongola and to Obeid. An Egyptian officer is in command. A concentration of forces is also reported to the south of Merawee."

A telegram to the Times, dated Wady Halfa, Nov. 4, says:—"There was a considerable movement of troops yesterday and to-day between Assouan and Arras. The Expedition may now be said to be fairly under way. Yesterday two sections of the Guards of the Camel Corps left Assouan with the camels of four sections, marching up the west bank of the river. With them started also the Camel Bearer Corps and the Egyptian camel battery, which had served in the Suakim campaign. Three sections of Guards and other details from other regiments arrived here last night. The last of the Mounted Infantry Regt. left to-day for Dongola. The Staffordshire Regt. are to march out to-night to Germaie station beyond the Cataracts. They will be met there by the detachments already at Germaie and Sarras. On Thursday the entire regiment will embark in whale-boats, and start for Dongola. The experiments made with the whale-boats have been thoroughly successful. Capt. Alleyne telegraphs from Dal, where he arrived yesterday with six boats manned entirely by Canadians and Iroquois, that they passed the Cataracts without difficulty, each boat carrying 2½ tons, including the crew. The Engineers, who started in boats on the 2nd, have not yet been heard of. Thursday will be the first occasion of any number of boats starting fully manned and laden. It is hoped that the Yarrow, Lord Wolseley's steamer, will be launched at Semneh three weeks hence."

The Times' correspondent at Alexandria, telegraphing on Nov. 3, says:—"From careful inquiries made, I learn that the rumour of the fall of Khartoum originated from the following source. I give it for what it is worth. A French merchant, formerly French Consul at Khartoum, had learned from his messengers, lately arrived from Khartoum, that Gen. Gordon, from want of provisions, was forced to make a sortie, and got to Berber. Only Col. Stewart was able to push on north. Gen. Gordon returned, but when near Shendy learned that Khartoum had been handed over to the rebels during his absence. He could neither advance nor retire from this position, and was there killed. They also state that Col. Stewart was wounded in two places before the steamer struck a rock."

Three companies of the Guards have arrived at Wady Halfa with the following officers:—Lieut.-Col. C. R. Rowley, commanding; Capt. Sir W. Gordon-Cumming, and Lieuts. Count Gleichen, the Hon. H. Amherst, Vesey J. Dawson, and Baden Powell.

A telegram from Dongola, dated Nov. 3, says:—"Lord Wolseley is at work arranging for the advance. He expects that all his troops will be at Wady Halfa by the end of November and a large number of them as far as Debbeh. He thinks that the forward movement will suffer no hitch, as the whale-boats suit admirably. He has received a telegram from Col. Alene, who left Sarras on Oct. 30 with the first six whale-boats fully equipped with men and stores. The boats were sailed and towed from Wady Halfa for Sarras, where the stores were embarked. At Senneh the boats were partly unloaded; and, with that exception, they were towed and sailed, loaded, through all the Cataracts between Sarras and Dal. They used sails and oars in the smooth parts of the river."

A Dongola telegram to the Daily Telegraph, dated Nov. 2, states:—"The Mahdi is in a position on the hills which is practically inaccessible. Water is scarce with him, and the Prophet is surrounded by a crowd of dervishes and thousands of warriors. The Mahdi has instructed his people to save Gordon alive, as he desires to hold him as a hostage for Arabi Pasha's release. The rebels are massing near Gambar Wells, and advancing on the road surveyed from Dongola to Debbeh."

The Morning Post says:—"The Mahdi is reported to have been lately at Khartoum, and to have summoned Gen. Gordon to surrender. The reply of the General was that he would hold Khartoum against the Mahdi for 12 years. After receiving this answer it is stated that the Mahdi retired southwards for the distance of a day's journey."

The Standard says:—"Major Dorward, with 50 men of the Royal Engineers, who left Sarras on Sunday for Dal in five boats, will be the first to attempt the navigation. With their soldier crews and fully weighted, they have been able to make fifteen miles in four hours. The boats built by Messrs. Yarrow have nearly all arrived at Semneh. The length of portage at Semneh is about 700 yards, but the whalers kept the water throughout. The length of portage at the Greater Gate is 500 yards; 35 men will be wanted to carry each boat. The road is fair enough, but the sand is heavy. Col. Trotter's battalion passed through Semneh on Saturday, the men marching. Boats will be passed from Dal to Kaider for the present. Major Hammill superintends at Semneh."

A sham fight took place on Wednesday at Dongola, between the Mounted Infantry and the Royal Sussex Regt., in the presence of Lord Wolseley, as a test of the camels. They stood it well.

One of the great difficulties hitherto in connection with transport has been the want of coal supplies, which have been very limited, through some misunderstanding on the part of the contractors. Now, however, large supplies have arrived at Assouan, and four coaling-stations have been established between Wady Halfa and Philæ.

The special correspondent of the Standard at El Oordeh writes on Oct. 5:—"I may say at once that the Naval authorities who have penetrated thus far are not so sanguine as are the members of Lord Wolseley's Staff as to the adaptability of Red River boats to Nile rapid navigation. English sailors are not in the habit of admitting that anything which is possible is impracticable; but the feeling of the authorities in question, I think, is, that they themselves would not like to be responsible for the success of the enterprise. All the more credit, then, to those who are, should they succeed. But a great deal has to be done beside the mere despatch of Lord Wolseley to the scene of operations. Our soldiers must endure much hard labour, pass many weary hours ere they may lay down their tow-ropes, and put aside their oars to grasp their rifles. At the points known as Semneh, Ambigol, and Saugur, our reis insisted on the soldiers disembarking, as he would not be responsible for safely sailing them up those Cataracts. But then, including these direct obstacles, for at least 80 miles besides, the Nile may almost be described as a mighty mountain torrent strewed with innumerable islets, studded with rocks, and seething with whirlpools, against which it would seem impossible for small boats to either sail or row; while to tow them ought to prove almost as difficult, for the banks on one side are a series of rugged and sometimes precipitous rocks, with little or no foothold; on the other, they are of fine shifting sand, that yield at every step, and into which the men, as they toil wearily onwards, will sink knee-deep. Nevertheless, it must be chronicled that Col. Alleyne, who preceded us as far as Dal, at the end of the Batu-el-Hajar, inspecting the river, declared again, as after his examination of the Second Cataract, that he saw nothing in them that would stop the Expedition."

Lord Wolseley, accompanied by his staff and a mounted escort, proceeded on Tuesday to the residence of the Mudir of Dongola, where a body of native troops was drawn up. The Mudir met Lord Wolseley on the verandah, and, after salutations, called upon the Iman to offer prayers, to which the assembled crowd made responses in loud tones. When the prayers were over, Lord Wolseley, on behalf of the Queen, invested the Mudir with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. The people evinced great delight, and the Mudir himself said that the honour conferred upon him was too exalted, and was unmerited. A firman of the Khedive was publicly read enjoining obedience to Lord Wolseley.

An advanced camp is about to be formed at Ambukol, whither Sir Herbert Stewart and a party of Mounted Infantry proceed.

The special correspondent of the Standard mentions the difficulty which Major Dorward, with a pioneer expedition of five boats, has had in ascending the Cataracts at Semneh. The wind failed them, and the men had to tow the boats up the Cataract. For the greater portion of the distance, about 12 miles in all, the work was of a most difficult and exhausting description, the current being in some places exceedingly strong, while the banks are rough and broken. One rudder was carried away in the passage of the rapids, and a small hole was knocked in another boat, but as the crews were men of the Royal Engineers they were able to repair damages promptly. The correspondent adds:—"The Canadian voyageurs say that the boats which have been built for the Expedition are not nearly strong enough in their construction for the work for which they are intended. They are of opinion also that it was a great mistake building them with keels. They pronounce the navigation of the Nile as not particularly dangerous, but as being exceptionally laborious and trying. The Nile is falling rapidly. During yesterday and to-day it has fallen 2 ft. This has greatly altered the aspect of the river. It has greatly decreased the volume and force of the stream in the rapids, and has much facilitated their ascent. Upon the other hand, in places where the river before ran quietly and smoothly, it now rushes in broken water over shallows, and has thus increased the number of rapids indefinitely. Two new and formidable cataracts have made their appearance during the last two days between this place and Sarras. The men are loud in their praises of the work and skill of the Canadians, and indeed without their direction, coolness, and skill it would be altogether impossible to get the boats up the Nile. Should any of them attempt to make the passage without one of these professional boatmen at the helm, a disaster will almost certainly take place."

The special correspondent of the Daily Chronicle with Lord Wolseley's expedition says that great fault is found with the way in which the the Nile boats and their fittings have arrived at Wady Halfa. He says:—"The masts, oars, boat-hooks, punting-poles, sails, and so on were all numbered on leaving the builders, with the number of the boat to which they belonged. Somehow or somewhere they have been taken out, and then pitchforked, as it were, into the boats anyhow; and if a particular boat has the punting-poles or a pair of oars belonging to her, she is sure to have the rest of the gear belonging to some other boat or boats. If the boat-gear were interchangeable, this would matter little or nothing; but as the gear of one builder will fit none of the boats of another builder, the consequence is that the already overworked soldiers here have, with each successive consignment, to turn out under the hottest dry sun in the world, and sort by numbers every article of equipment, often at the end of their job finding a heap of gear belonging to some boats not up yet, and some boats without any gear at all to speak of. This is making work with a vengeance!"

The stern-wheel steamer which it will be remembered was lately constructed by Messrs. Yarrow and Co., of Poplar, for the Government, to take part in the Nile Expedition, and which was shipped on board the Cameo, leaving London on the 8th ult., has been put together at Alexandria, and was successfully launched on the 6th inst., having occupied fourteen days for re-erection in Egypt.

Surg.-Major Jennings left Cairo to take over the medical charge of Assiout, on Oct. 23, from Surg. Stewart, who proceeds to Wady Halfa.

Surg. Turner will be in medical charge of the 19th Hussars, and Surg. Faunce will be in medical charge of 1st Baty. 1st Brig., R.A.

Major Webster will accompany the 19th Hussars, and take over the duties of District Pymr. at Assiout.

Capt. Wood, R.E., left Cairo on Oct. 23 for the purpose of inspecting the telegraph office at Assiout.

Diary of an officer at Assouan:—Wednesday, Oct. 15, 1884.—This day's postal-boat brought Col. Bonham, Grenadier Guards, signal officer to Camel Corps; Major Hutton, King's Royal Rifles, who is going up to take command of the Mounted Infantry; Major Boyle, King's Royal Rifles, in charge of boats; Surg.-Major Wattling, and Surgs. Galway and Parke, A.M.D. Col. Butler, with Major Martin, R.A., embarked for Halfa to make arrangements there for getting the whalers (Nile boats) up the Cataract. The barges, containing the Yarrow steamer, left Shellal to-day for Halfa, towed by two steamers. Thursday, Oct. 16.—Lieut. Lord Avonmore's 37th Regt. detachment of boats were successfully got up the Cataracts. Friday, Oct. 17.—The boats, under charge of Major Crofton I. Stafford, 38th Regt. (A.D.C. to Gen. Macdonald, commanding North British district), Lieut. the Hon. F. Colborne, Royal Irish Rifles (83rd), and Lieut. Sir George Arthur, 2nd Life Guards, were safely piloted up the Cataract this day. Lieut. Lord Avonmore started for Halfa with his whalers. Saturday, Oct. 18.—A.C.G.O. Pease returned from Halfa; he is going to make a stay of some time here. Sunday, Oct. 19.—Surg.-Major O'Donnell, A.M.D., left for Halfa. This day's post-boat brought Col. Webber, C.B., Royal Engineers, Director of Military Telegraphs, who remains here for the present; also Lieut.-Col. Gordon, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Lieut.-Col. Morris (?), and Major Dickson, the Royal Dragoons, with whalers. Capt. Verner, R.B. (who remains), Lieut. Marling, V.C., King's Royal Rifles (who left at once for Halfa to join the Mounted Infantry), Capt. Wintle, D.A.C.G.O. (who embarked for Halfa). Major Crofton, South Stafford Regt., and Major Rainsford, D.A.C.G., left during the day en route for Halfa. Monday, 20th.—The whalers, of which Lieut. Orde, Rifle Brigade, is in charge, arrived during the day. Tuesday, 21st.—The steamer with the Canadian boatmen arrived about 9.30 a.m. They were conveyed by two special trains to Shellal, and at once embarked, some on the Ferooz (the steam yacht that brought Lord Wolseley from Cairo), and some in the whalers, which she is towing; they started from Shellal about 5.30 p.m. More whalers arrived during the day; they form part of the lot consigned to the care of Major Dickson, 1st Royal Dragoons. Capt. Verner, Rifle Brigade, took over the duties of Staff officer at Shellal from Major Hunter, E.A. (Capt. Hunter, 4th King's Own Royal Lancaster Regt.), who proceeds to Halfa to take command of his regiment of blacks. Col. Henderson (60th Rifles) is commandant at Shellal.

The Morning Post correspondent at Wady Halfa says:—"The three camps, the Sussex Regt., Mounted Infantry, and the hospital, are now close together on the river bank just south of the town. The heat, though considerable indoors, is little felt in camp owing to the constant wind, and the ground on which the camps are pitched, having the remains of crops on them, are fairly free from the fearful dust which searches the town in tempests all day long. The thermometer in houses averages about 96 by day; at night, especially towards morning, a single blanket is an acceptable covering, in camp two blankets are not found too much. There are 35 men in hospital, but these continue to be the lightest of cases, scratches, whitlows, and so on. Probably were there necessity for the men being with their regiments, more than three-quarters of them could return to duty. The place may be said, therefore, to be most healthy. There was one death three days ago from enteric fever, a Sussex man, or rather from complications following enteric fever. He had been invalided to Alexandria after enteric fever, and had been sent back to duty at a time evidently when he was not fit for active service."

EGYPTIAN ITEMS.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. C. A. Stephenson and Major-Gen. Davis left Cairo on Oct. 28 on board of a dahabeah for a trip up the river, in order to have a few days' change of air and some shooting. Messrs. Cook and Son expect the whole of the 800 small boats to reach Wady Halfa before Nov. 15.

Mason Bey, the late Governor of Massowah, after handing over his charge to Col. Chermside, left for Aden in order to meet Sir William Hewett, and will proceed to Europe on leave of absence, and Surgs.-Major Hopkins, Kinahan, Harvey, Price, and Fishbourne, and Surgs. Greene, Boyd, and Pinching have left Cairo for Wady Halfa.

Major A. E. Turner, R.A., Capt. Kekewich, 1st East Kent Regt., deputy-assist.-adjts. and qrmrs.-gen., Lieuts. A. J. W. Allen, 2nd East Kent Regt., and W. C. Lang, 1st Seaforth Highlanders, staff capts., proceed to Wady Halfa immediately, Capt. F. C. Hamilton left Boolak Dacroor on Oct. 29 to rejoin the 1st Batn. Staffordshire Regt.

Capt. de la Poer Robinson has assumed the duties of paymaster of the Gordon Highlanders, and Major Small has been posted for duty in the district pay office.

The 5-1 Baty. Scottish Division, which has been garrisoning Fort Kom-el-Dik at Alexandria ever since the suppression of the Arabi rebellion, will shortly be transferred to Cairo, and will be relieved at Alexandria by the 6-1 Baty. Scottish Division.

The officers of the Canadian contingent are Col. Denison, in command, Col. Kennedy, paymaster, Capts. Aumond and Macrae, Surg.-Major Neilson, and Abbé Bouchard, chaplain, 15 foremen, and 367 men. The officers receive the pay and allowances of officers of their rank in the British Army, the foremen receive 75 dollars per month, and the men 40 dollars per month, with rations and clothing, so that they will cost about £4,000 a month. Among the Canadian contingent there are about 70 Indians, from the Irroquois, Saltaux, and Chauchnawaga tribes.

Major H. L. Smith-Dorrien and Capt. A. Crawford, of the Egyptian Army, have passed the colloquial examination in Arabic.

Col. Scott Moncrieff, Under-Secretary of State for Public Works, has left Egypt for London, on leave of absence. His duties will be performed by Major Ross and Mons. Barrois.

The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, in an article discussing the West African question, recommends that a German squadron should be kept stationed on that coast, "where people only respect the force which they see."

THE MUDIR OF DONGOLA.

We extract from the Morning Post the following interesting account of the Mudir of Dongola, dated October 6:—"The Mudir continues to afford the most loyal assistance to Sir Herbert Stewart. The energies of all here are directed to the question of supplies. The Beiram holiday is over, and barley, wheat, dhura, and dates are beginning to come in, and are still confidently promised by the Mudir in the large quantities wanted for the whole expedition. The dates are required for the native labourers, camel drivers, and the like. Sheep and cattle are provided in excess of present wants, and the depôts of them here and at Debbeh, which are being formed, will, if the Mudir is not mistaken, amply meet our demands. In the meantime, the troops here, nearly 1,000 men, are living on the fresh rations of the place, and their imported rations remain untouched. This rationing of 1,000 men for a considerable period would be alone, even did supplies in the future not come up to their promise, a great relief to the Commissariat Department. The efforts of the Mudir on our behalf deserve additional credit from the fact, of which I imagine there is little doubt, that he was animated by an ardent desire himself to relieve Gen. Gordon, himself to defeat the forces of the Mahdi and to prove by wide and signal action that if there was religious fervour and warlike aptitude in his enemy there were these forces too in him. When recalled after his successful fight at Corti, he felt keen disappointment, and for a time possibly was not anxious to facilitate preparations for the supersession and obliteration of his triumphs by the more brilliant bayonets of a British army. For a time, perhaps, he hoped that difficulties might be found so great for English soldiers that the work of extending his successes might still be left to the strength of his own unaided arm. He dreamt of British troops garrisoning Dongola while he directed an excellent entry into Berber, and thence a relief of Khartoum. But visions such as these have evaporated now, and he has accepted and aided the new order of campaign. It is not probable that Khartoum, after the rescue of Gen. Gordon, can ever, with any regard to humanity or prudence, be entrusted to the bloody fanaticism of a Mahdi or cast as a prey to the destructive strife of rival hordes of barbarians. When the hour arrives for such a settlement of the complication as the honour and wisdom of England will admit, it will most likely be found that the Mudir of Dongola is the one man, not an Englishman, to whom the good management of these embarrassing possessions can be most wisely entrusted. The man wherever he goes peacefully is looked upon by the people nearly as a saint, and when he moves as a warrior they troop from the villages to follow him as invincible. The fame of his humanity has surrounded him with a little halo of legend. There are stories of his buying a caged bird to set it free, and once, the Dongola tale goes, he bought a strange fish from a fisherman that had been caught uninjured in a net, and walking to the river with it in his own hand, returned it to the running water. His integrity is above the breath of suspicion in a country and among officials where integrity is the rarest virtue. His appearance is attractive. A rather short man, some 40 years of age, about 5 ft. 7 in., his stooping frame gives him an air of even less stature. His skin, though sallow, is little less dark than that of an Englishman, but his keen, large, black eyes, his black beard, and his hawk-like aquiline features proclaim him of another race. His eyes, set very deep in a large arch beneath his forehead, and the flesh drawn rather tightly over high cheek-bones into a somewhat hollow cheek, give him a certain appearance of asceticism which is in keeping with his character. His face in repose is very grave and thoughtful, but it lights up at a humorous thought, and his laugh is very pleasant. He is a Circassian, but strange; unlike his race, he never smokes. He seems to have acquired his great influence entirely without those famous instances of great severity which so often in Eastern countries are the foundation of power. He is a very able, brave, religious, strange man."

QUETTA.

A correspondent writes to us:—"The following information may interest your readers: Quetta for the last two months has been frightfully unhealthy, and at present, out of the total of about 900 European soldiers in the garrison, upwards of 180 are in hospital, besides which considerable numbers are obtaining out-relief, as the hospitals are crowded to overflowing. Of these 180 cases, eleven are typhoid and the remainder chiefly fever and liver. Deaths of late have been of startling recurrence, and everybody is showing signs of having suffered more or less from the trying climate of August and September. It is to be hoped that the change of air when the force marches on the 20th will have a good effect. The place is becoming rapidly built over, the fine new barracks for the British infantry are nearly ready for occupation, and barracks for the European Mountain Battery are to be commenced early in the spring. Thanks to the indefatigable energy of the Roman Catholic chaplain, an excellent chapel has been completed, but the members of the Church of England have still to hold their services under the trees of a mess-garden or in the Durbar Hall. A fine institute, containing a magnificent theatre, reading-rooms, &c., is rapidly approaching completion. The want of accommodation for married and single officers is still severely felt, and will be until the Government take the matter seriously in hand, and build a number of suitable houses to shelter their occupants from the heat of the summer and the snows and frosts of the winter months."

A telegram received from Aden announces the occupation of Tajurah by the French. Tajurah is a seaport town, consisting of 300 wooden huts, on the gulf which bears the same name, and which is an inlet of the Gulf of Aden. There is an anchorage adapted for large ships.

Considerable excitement has been caused by the arrival of the French man-of-war Souffren at Tangiers to support M. Ordega in his demands upon the Moorish Government, and in addition the Evénement announces that the Governor of Algeria has received orders from Paris at once to prepare three expeditionary columns, to be sent to Morocco.

Service Questions in Parliament.

Replying to Capt. Price, the Civil Lord of the Admiralty stated in the House of Commons on Monday that the Report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the operation of the present rules for counting junior service in the engineer and accountant branches in the Royal Navy would be presented to the Board forthwith.

Sir Thomas Brassey, interrogated by Sir J. Hay, said that the steering-power of the Agamemnon up to nine knots an hour was perfectly satisfactory. With a higher speed it was found difficult to steer her without the assistance of the screws. Similar difficulties had occurred with other ships, but they had been overcome. It was not proposed to make any alteration now, but if, on her arrival at Malta, the difficulty had not been overcome, orders would be given to increase the upper part of the rudder. The work would take about a fortnight, and would cost from £250 to £300. The case of the Ajax was similar to that of the Agamemnon.

The First Lord of the Treasury was asked, on Tuesday, by Mr. Labouchere, whether he was in a position to state on what occasion he proposed to make his promised statement with regard to any steps intended to be taken in order to secure the efficiency of the Navy and the security of our coaling stations abroad. Mr. Gladstone replied that when they were clear of the Franchise Bill, that would be the time to give the required information. Sir D. Currie gave notice that on the earliest available opportunity after the Franchise Bill had passed, he should call attention to the state of the Navy and the condition of our Eastern and colonial defences and coaling stations, and move a resolution.

In the course of a desultory conversation in the House of Commons on Wednesday, Sir John Hay remarked that he understood the Prime Minister had promised to state when opportunity would be given for bringing forward the question of the state of the Navy. Mr. Gladstone replied that what he had said was that he could not do so until it was seen what progress was made with the Franchise Bill. Lord Henry Lennox was glad that the attention of the Government had been awakened to the condition of the first line of our defence. Something must be done, and that quickly, to place our Navy and coaling-stations in a proper state. He was aware that the Prime Minister might make a retort upon him, and say that when he made an appeal last session, during the discussion of the Navy Estimates, only nine Members were present. That was all altered now. He was glad to say that the hon. Members for Perthshire and Northampton were among the recent conversions. For the latter hon. gentleman to appear among the converts was amusing, but gratifying to himself, as showing that the labours he had made for seven or eight years had borne fruit.

Earl Granville stated in the House of Lords on Thursday that the First Lord of the Admiralty was indisposed, therefore he asked the Earl of Carnarvon to postpone his motion as to the Colonial possessions and garrisons abroad. To this appeal Lord Carnarvon assented, and Viscount Sidmouth also postponed his question as to an inquiry into the strength and condition of the Naval forces.

On the question of the rearmament of the Navy, Lord E. Cecil inquired how many 18 and 43-ton guns of the new pattern breech-loader had been applied for by the Admiralty to rearm the Navy, and how many had been delivered. Sir T. Brassey said that 22 18-ton guns had been taken in estimates. Three have been delivered to the Navy for experimental purposes. Fifteen are ready at Woolwich, except that the sighting is not complete, pending a decision as to the brand of powder to be used. The remaining four are incomplete, but will be ready in time for the Impérieuse, for which ship they are intended. Of the 43-ton guns, 15 were taken in estimates. Ten have been actually delivered. Four are being proceeded with for the Collingwood, and will be ready in time. The remaining gun is a spare one, and is well advanced. In answer to Mr. W. H. Smith, the Civil Lord said he believed those guns were all steel. Sir Thomas Brassey, in reply to Admiral Sir J. Hay, said the distance between the two screw shafts of the Agamemnon and Ajax is 28 ft. The diameter of the screws is 17 ft.

Replying to a question of Sir H. D. Wolff, the Civil Lord stated that the report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the existing rules for counting junior time in the accountant and engineering branches of the Royal Navy will be submitted shortly, and the recommendations will be carefully considered before the commencement of the forthcoming financial year.

Yesterday, Sir Thomas Brassey, in reply to Mr. Macfarlane, said he had no objection to lay upon the table a return showing the original estimated cost of H.M.S. Agamemnon, of the actual cost of the vessel, and showing the amount expended in each year during her construction. In answer to Lord H. Lennox, the Civil Lord said the Collingwood had been fitted with 43-ton guns. There were five 63-ton guns and three 100-ton guns now under manufacture, but not yet sufficiently advanced for trial. The 43-ton breech-loading guns now in the service had been finished satisfactorily, except in the breech screw mechanism, which, after several modifications, was now being completed. The 43-ton guns of the Conqueror would be ready in four months, and those of the Colossus in five.

The Times says:—"The present regulation infantry great-coat having been reported by the Active Service Dress Committee to be too heavy and not waterproof, 100 experimental coats have been made by direction of the Committee, and these are now undergoing trial in several battalions."

The Times says:—"Officers of cavalry, artillery, and infantry have been ordered to practice field-sketching and reconnaissance during the winter months. That the work may be of practical utility and interest, it has been ordered that a specific object is invariably to form the subject of each reconnaissance, the scheme for which will be drawn up by the commanding officer."

THE SOUTH AFRICA DIFFICULTY.

Letters have been received at the principal military stations calling for volunteers of officers of Cavalry and Infantry regiments for the purpose of organising and temporarily serving with a corps of Mounted Riflemen to be raised in the Cape Colony for service in Bechuanaland. The officers selected "must be intelligent, active, of sound constitution, and good riders," and preference will be given to those who hold musketry certificates, if in other respects qualified. They will be granted 91 days' field allowance. The names of officers selected must be forwarded to the Horse Guards, as approved candidates will be required to embark immediately. Further instructions are to be issued as to dress and pay.

The Press Association has authority for stating that the effective force to accompany Sir Charles Warren on his special mission to Bechuanaland will not exceed 3,500 men. These will be drawn from the troops already in Natal and Cape Colony in addition to those already ordered out from home and other stations. Including camp followers the force will number close on 4,000. Sir Charles Warren has appointed Lieut. Haynes, R.E., his aide-de-camp, and Mr. Ralph Williams, intelligence officer, and we hear Col. Walker will probably be his Adjutant-General. A number of gentlemen volunteers will accompany Sir Charles and his Staff from London, probably in the Grantully Castle.

The Durban correspondent of the Standard writes:—'The President of the Transvaal has communicated to the Volksraad the receipt of a telegram, the contents of which lead him to hope that he will be able to co-operate with the Cape Government in effecting a peaceful settlement of the question of Bechuanaland. It is reported that the Dragoons have been ordered from this Colony into Bechuanaland. There is no truth in the report that Dinizulu has been repudiated by part of the Usutus."

ADMIRAL HEWETT AT ZANZIBAR.

On Aug. 31 the Euryalus anchored in Zanzibar Harbour. The Sultan was at Shueny, and directed that his palace at Shigwany should be placed at the disposal of the Admiral. On the return of the Sultan the official reception was conducted with much ceremony. The Admiral and officers, with a sprinkling of the English residents, walked to the palace through a double line of Arab soldiers, and were received by a guard of honour, 1,400 strong, under the command of Gen. Matthews, formerly a lieutenant in the Royal Navy, with presented arms, while the band played "God Save the Queen." A salute of 15 guns was then fired from the shore, and promptly returned by the Euryalus. The Admiral and officers, &c., were met at the top of the stairs by the Sultan, and they proceeded to the state reception-room; the Sultan took a seat at the head of the hall, having on his left the British officers, and on his right a number of the Arab noblesse. The Admiral and Consul sat nearest the Sultan, who carried on a conversation with them through an interpreter. Arab grandees handed round sherbet; coffee was served in delicate china cups with holders of gold, next attar of roses. Thereupon the Sultan walked to the head of the stairs, where the visitors shook hands with him and took their departure. On the arrival of Sir John Kirk from the mainland on Sept. 12, a State dinner in European style was given. The room, which was decorated with flowers, palm-branches, and other tropical plants, looked most attractive and the table shone with lighted wax candles of different colours, set on silver candelabra. Handsome bouquets of flowers and elegant cut-glass decanters and goblets, three of the latter containing sherbet of as many flavours, were placed before each guest. No wines were served. A Portuguese band played overtures and selections from operas during the banquet alternately with a native band, which entertained the company with Arab airs. The guests witnessed a magnificent display of fireworks, coffee being served at intervals, but no cigars, as the Zanzibar Arabs do not smoke. After another distribution of attar of roses, the Sultan accompanied his guests to the head of the stairs, where he took leave of them, shaking each cordially by the hand as he wished him "Good-night." Admiral Hewett, after spending 12 days at the Shigwany Palace, situated about seven miles from the town, and commanding a delightful view of the sea, left for Aden on Sept. 15.

The Press Association understands that, subject to the approval of her Majesty, Col. Carrington, well known in connection with the "Carrington Horse" at the Cape, and Sir Bartle Frere, who is attached to the staff of Gen. Newdigate at Dover, will accompany Sir Charles Warren to Bechuanaland, and will hold the principal positions on his staff.

The memorial to the late Prince Imperial having been unveiled on Jan. 13, 1883, by the Prince of Wales, it was proposed that the balance of the fund should be devoted to preparing a book containing the names of all subscribers to the memorial, for presentation to the Empress Eugénie. The manufacture of the book was entrusted to Messrs. Jenner and Knewstub, of 33 St. James's Street, and is a creditable work. The cover is formed of ebony with silver mounts, with a raised carved "N" and Imperial crown in the centre, and raised silver eagle at each corner, inside, a painted view of the memorial, an autograph letter of the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., as president of the general committee, and a list of the names of all the subscribers beautifully illuminated on vellum sheets, giving the staff, the regimental and other officers in order beautifully engraved. The album was presented to the Empress on Oct. 29 by Lord Napier of Magdala, attended by Major the Hon. J. Napier, 10th Royal Hussars, and Major-Gen. Fraser, hon. sec. to the Memorial Fund.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Gibraltar, Oct. 27.

The Channel Squadron left Plymouth on Monday, Oct. 20, shortly before noon, and arrived here this morning at 10 o'clock. Ushant was passed early on Tuesday, and a south-easterly wind picked-up, which carried the Squadron pleasantly along across the Bay with port studding sails set. The next day sails were furled, and the Squadron exercised at steam tactics, manœuvring principally in groups. At the conclusion of the evolutions sail was remade, and while doing so the Agincourt sprung her mizen topsail-yard in hoisting, and had to shift it. The fine weather continued all the way across the Bay, but soon after passing Cape Finisterre, on Thursday evening, a change was experienced; a strong south-west wind come on, accompanied with rain, and a heavy north-westerly swell got up. On Friday the sea had increased, and the ships rolled considerably, some of them very heavily. The Agincourt and Northumberland both had boats nearly washed away. On board the Achilles also the crutches of the boom boats carried away. Shortly after noon, the Admiral made a signal to observe and indicate the maximum number of degrees the ships rolled between the hours of 1 and 2. The replies show the following results:—

	To Starboard.		To Port.		Total Arc of Roll.
Minotaur	23 deg.	...	25 deg.	...	48 deg.
Neptune	22 "	...	21 "	...	43 "
Sultan	20 "	...	18 "	...	38 "
Agincourt.........	27 "	...	26 "	...	53 "
Northumberland.	30 "	...	35 "	...	65 "
Achilles	26 "	...	26 "	...	52 "

The Neptune suffered most, although she did not roll as much as some of the others; but the seas washed right over her upper deck, her bulwarks were considerably damaged, and not only the lower deck, but the ward-room and officers' cabins, were all awash. In the afternoon, as the wind had veered round to the north-west, plain sail to topgallant sails was made. The Neptune was unable to make sail, as the men could not work the ropes owing to the amount of water washing about her deck. In the evening sail had to be furled again, as the wind drew ahead. Head winds and rain, with a heavy sea, continued till the Squadron rounded Cape St. Vincent, which they did at midnight on Saturday. Since then it has been fine again, and to-day the weather is perfect, bright and fine, and so warm that we have gone into "whites." As we approached the anchorage this forenoon the Second Division parted company, and proceeded to the anchorage off the neutral ground, and the First Division went alongside the New Mole. The Duke of Edinburgh landed in the afternoon, under a salute of 21 guns. There are no other men-of-war in harbour, except the little Grappler. The Squadron sailed on Monday from Gibraltar for Madeira. It will return to Gibraltar on the 18th inst.

SQUADRON NEWS.

China.—The Linnet was at Hong Kong on Sept. 26, about to leave for Shanghai and Gulf of Pechili. The Swift remains at Canton. The Foxhound is still stationed in the Gulf of Tonquin, between Hoihow and Pakhoi; she was at Hoihow on Sept. 22. The Sapphire will remain at Amoy. The Midge passed up the Min River on Sept. 24 to relieve the Zephyr, off Foochow. The Merlin was at Sharp Peak, in the Min, on Sept. 24. The Vigilant is at Hong Kong making good defects. The Fly was at Takao, Formosa, on Sept. 14; she is ordered to remain for the protection of foreign residents at Takao, Taiwaupi, and Amping. The Cockchafer remains at Tamsui, Formosa. The Cleopatra remains at Shanghai. The Curaçoa was at Chefoo on Sept. 13, and remains as senior officer's ship in the Gulf of Pechili. The Espoir was at Tientsin on Sept. 13, and is to proceed to Newchang, returning to Chefoo. The Flying Fish is still in the Korea, surveying.

North America and West Indies.—The Northampton was at Halifax on Oct. 24, and will proceed to Bermuda on Nov. 4. The Garnet was at Newfoundland on Oct. 15, and, when relieved by the Tenedos, will rejoin the flagship at Bermuda. The Tenedos was refitting at Halifax on Oct. 24, preparatory to wintering in Newfoundland. The Dido, senior officer's ship on the Barbadoes Division, was at Barbadoes on Sept. 3. The Griffon was at Newfoundland on Oct. 15, and will shortly leave for Devonport. The Fantome was refitting at Bermuda on Oct. 7, and the Mallard left Halifax on Oct. 21 for Bermuda.

Pacific.—The Swiftsure and the Mutine will leave Vancouver's Island on the 17th inst. Letters should be addressed to San Francisco.

West Coast of Africa.—The Flirt was at Bonny on Sept. 27, and was about to visit Ambas and Fernando Po. She will afterwards return to Bonny. The Alecto was at Akassa on Sept. 26, and was ordered to proceed up the Niger with H.B.M.'s Consul. The Forward was at Accra on Sept. 18.

Consequent on the retirement of Admiral E. B. Rice, C.B., the following promotions have been made:—Vice-Admiral Augustus Phillimore to be admiral, Rear-Admiral Thomas Brandreth to be vice-admiral, Capt. Richard Wells to be rear-admiral. These changes have resulted in the following promotions on the retired list from the same date:—Vice-Admiral Vincent Amcotts Massingberd, Charles Luxmoore Hockin, and Thomas Etheridge to be admirals. Rear-Admirals Frederick William Pleydell Bouverie, Edward James Bedford, Henry Christian, Charles Wright Bonham, John Halliday Cave, C.B., John Edward Parish, William Charles Fahie Wilson, C.B., to be vice-admirals.

DIMNESS of SIGHT.—Dimness of Sight and Blindness are often caused by the use of unsuitable Spectacles. Mr. H. Reviews.

The Peruvians at Home. By George R. Fitzroy Cole. (Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co.)

Any work on the subject of Peru can scarcely fail to arouse gloomy reminiscences of the time when the stock-broking fraternity in London, as well as in Paris, paid almost undivided attention to the "ups and downs" of Peruvian stock,—the results of the wild speculation which some few years ago upset what appeared to be all sound calculations as to the future of these erratic securities will never be known. It may, however, serve as a pleasing distraction to hear from a writer so competent as the author of this volume, a carefully prepared description of the vie intime of the Peruvians. In the spring of 1873 he visited Peru on private business, and remained there for two years, during which period he had ample opportunities of seeing the most important towns and sights; moreover, the object of his visit brought him into contact with all classes of Peruvians, from the politicians and merchants of Lima to another class of men, who, differing from each other in habits of life as much as in colour and character, form a mixed society both strange and novel. How to reach Peru was naturally the first problem for solution. We learn that there are three modes of accomplishing this object, and that the best is, of course, the dearest,—namely, from London to Lima, which required one month to execute, and cost £100 for a single journey. A second route is coasting Brazil right through the Straits of Magellan; this is as dear as number one, but it gains in time about a fortnight. The third route is to cross the Atlantic from Liverpool to New York, and there take a steamer plying between that place and the Gulf of Mexico, going on to Aspinwall. The author is highly impressionable, and the command of language he possesses affords temptations to indulge; but the volume he has reluctantly given to the public has very much indeed to recommend it. It is written in a genial spirit; it is, moreover, written con amore; and better than either, it will enable a reader to find instructive as well as entertaining matter.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine for this month has some features that call for special commendation. The frontispiece is an effective reproduction of Drummond's picture of the death of Nelson, executed in 1807. A profusely illustrated article by the editor on "Armour-plating against Guns" suggests the terrible uncertainty of the issues of naval warfare with new and almost untried engines of destruction. Mr. F. Dixon gives us some interesting "Personal Adventures of Generals in the Field." "England's Exposed Position" is treated by Admiral Sir George Elliot. Colonel C. B. Brackenbury continues his articles on "Tactics," and Major Elliott concludes his "Tale of the last Afghan War." Captain O'Callaghan's "Short Notes on Anniversaries of British Victories" are most interesting. The only fault we have to find with them is that they are not sufficiently numerous. They certainly are a feature of the magazine. The illustrations are, on the whole, superior to those of last month. But we would suggest to the editor that it would be an improvement if articles were published dealing with current events.

Mr. Wyld's exertions to enable the public to comprehend the scope of all naval and military expeditions, work, and enterprise, and to keep step with the march of geographical exploration and discovery, have been so successful for a long series of years by the issue of excellent maps, that he needs no eulogium from the Press, though he is entitled to support and gratitude. He has recently published, at a moderate price, most excellent maps of Egypt and the Soudan, &c., with all the additions to the geography of the Nile Valley which recent travels and reconnaissances have enabled the authorities to obtain, which we recommend to those of our readers who have not the maps of the Intelligence Department.

London Amusements.

The spectacular revival of "Romeo and Juliet" at the Lyceum has been the notable theatrical event of the week. The text of the play is derived from the second quarto of 1599, which was published with an intimation that it had been "newly corrected, augmented, and amended." It is generally acknowledged that the second quarto had received the sanction and assistance of the author, and, it may be fairly presumed, a sufficient authority for any stage representation of the play. On the present reproduction much artistic care has been bestowed, and Mr. John O'Connor, as the prominent scenic artist, and the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, as the designer of costumes and pictorial accessories, may be credited with much successful research in combining strict accuracy with highly picturesque effects. Miss Mary Anderson, with her personal advantages, presents a Juliet sure to captivate the general public, if not altogether satisfying some exacting critics retaining memories of previous exponents of this arduous character. In the earlier acts, and in the balcony scene especially, Miss Mary Anderson was able to bear comparison with several of the most famous of her predecessors; and the actress displayed more intensity of feeling than was probably anticipated in the tragic situations. Always graceful and often impressive in declamatory passages suited to her style of delivery, Miss Anderson may be fairly said to have strengthened her position on the London stage by an assumption so boldly undertaken. Mr. W. Terriss is an effective Romeo, manly in deportment, easy in gesture, and perfect in his elocution. Mrs. Stirling is once more a representative of the Nurse, realising every idea of the character. Mr. Arthur Stirling is duly dignified as the Friar, with a suggestion of parental regard not often so ably conveyed, and nothing could be better than the Peter of Mr. H. Kemble. As Mercutio Mr. Herbert Standing failed in doing justice to his own conception of the part through manifest nervousness. Mrs. Charles Calvert was Lady Capulet, Mr. A. Lewis, Benvolio, and Mr. Anderson, Tybalt. A special performance of the play, under the immediate and personal patronage of the Prince and Princess of Wales, was given on Thursday evening for the benefit of that very useful institution, "The Women's Emigration Society," of which the Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, is president.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Samuel Hayes commenced his season at Her Majesty's Theatre with "Il Barbière di Siviglia," being the first of a series of operas in Italian at popular prices. Mr. G. H. Betjemann, Signor Tito Mattei, and Signor Bottesini act as conductors. The vocalists are fairly efficient, and there is a numerous band. "Rigoletto" and "Don Giovanni" are included in the programme of the week.

The winter season of French plays at the Royalty is proving a success. Mdlle. Jane May, a very bright and vivacious young actress, has been re-engaged for another six nights, and has repeated some of her now popular assumptions. Next week, Mdlle. Leonide Leblanc will appear in "L'Etrangère," of which an English version was given at the Haymarket eight years since.

At the Court Theatre, "Young Men and Old Acres" is now displaced by the production of "Young Mrs. Winthrop," an American three-act comedy by Mr. Bronson Howard, originally produced in October, 1882, at the Madison Square Theatre, New York. The prominent characters are now represented by Miss Marion Terry, Miss Lydia Foote, Miss Norreys, Mrs. John Wood, Mr. H. B. Conway, Mr. Reeves Smith, and Mr. Arthur Cecil.

A military concert was given on Wednesday evening at Covent Garden Theatre in commemoration of the anniversary of the Battle of Inkerman. Three military bands were added to the regular orchestra, increasing the strength of the instrumental forces to 150 performers. The Promenade Concerts, which have been continued for three months, still attract large assemblages.

The comic opera of "Polly" will be transferred this (Saturday) evening from the Novelty to the Empire Theatre, in Leicester Square, where a new ballet of action will also be produced, called "Coppelia," founded on Hoffmann's fantastic German story.

Sanger's Amphitheatre will be opened this (Saturday) evening with those equestrian entertainments so long associated with the name of Astley. Besides scenes in the circle, the "Battle of Bosworth Field" and "Dick Turpin's Ride to York" will be represented.

The farewell season of Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft at the Haymarket Theatre will be commenced this (Saturday) night with "Diplomacy," an effective rendering by Mr. Clement Scott and Mr. B. C. Stephenson of Sardou's play of "Dora," which had a prolonged run at the Prince of Wales's Theatre in 1878. Mrs. Bernard Beere now represents Zieke, Mrs. Bancroft, Lady Henry Fairfax, and Miss Calhoun is the successor to Mrs. Kendal as Dora. Mr. Bancroft represents Henry Beauclerc, Mr. Maurice Barrymore, an American actor, Count Orloff, Mr. C. Brookfield, Baron Stein, and Mr. Forbes Robertson, Julian Beauclerc.

One of the attractions in the forthcoming "Grand Mogul," at the Comedy Theatre, will be the real live serpents in the snake-charming scene. These are fine, well-developed cobras, whose beautiful proportions and elegant movements were not at first very much fancied by Miss Florence St. John, who plays the rôle of the snake-charmer; but familiarity breeds—well, contempt of danger—and now the fair prima donna ties them in knots round her neck, and lets them kiss her, without so much as a shudder. The cobras are, in fact, highly popular in the theatre, and rehearse with the other performers in a most satisfactory manner.

The present craze for acting, and everything connected with that art, is made the subject of satire in a new farcical comedy by Mr. Harry Paulton, entitled "Lilies, or Hearts and Actresses;" the hearts being supplied by a young gentleman of wonderful susceptibility, and more than one actress. The author himself undertakes the part of a professor of elocution, whose only regret is that his figure is not so imposing as nature ought to have made it, he thereby being debarred from the higher walks of tragedy. Mr. Fred Mervin is responsible for the susceptible gentleman. The piece will take a trial-trip at the Prince of Wales's, Liverpool, from which many triumphs—E. A. Sothern's among others—have emanated.

Obituary.

Gen. C. L. Nugent, on the Retired List, late of the 58th Regt., died on Monday, at Southsea, aged 68. The deceased was a son of the late Col. A. Nugent, of Portaferry, County Down, and entered the Army in 1835. He obtained a lieutenancy in 1838, was promoted to a captaincy in 1841, and served with the 58th Regt. in the New Zealand war of 1845-46. He commanded the advance guard which penetrated the forest surrounding Ruapekapeka, and was present at the capture of that Pah. The gallant officer was promoted to the rank of major in 1851, became lieut.-col. in 1857, col. in 1862, major-gen. in 1868, lieut.-gen. in 1880, and a gen. in 1881.

The Marquis of Londonderry died on Wednesday night, at his residence, Plas Machynlleth, Montgomeryshire. The Marquis was on the previous day in his usual health and spirits, and presided at the Machynlleth Petty Sessions in the afternoon. He had, however, long been subject to acute attacks of gout, and during the evening he took a severe chill, and complained of feeling unwell. On retiring to rest early on Wednesday morning the Marquis was seized with a fit of apoplexy, and shortly afterwards expired. He was born at Vienna April 26, 1821. The Marquis, who then bore the title of Viscount Seaham, was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1844, and proceeded M.A. in 1867. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. at Durham University in 1882. He sat in Parliament in the Conservative interest as one of the members for North Durham from 1847 down to March, 1854, when his father's death caused the Earldom of Vane to devolve upon him by a special limitation of the remainder in his favour, and accordingly he sat in the House of Peers along with his elder brother, the late Marquis. By his brother's death in November, 1872, he succeeded to all the honours formerly enjoyed by his father, and to the vast estates of both the Londonderry and the Vane-Tempest families. These last-named estates have been immensely increased in value of late years by the large amount of coal which is raised upon them. Lord Londonderry was a strong Conservative in politics, and a personal friend of Lord Beaconsfield. He was also well-known in the yachting world. In 1845 his lordship was appointed to a lieutenancy in the 1st Life Guards, but retired in 1848. In 1853 he was appointed Lieut.-Col. Commandant of the 2nd Durham Light Infantry Militia, and in 1859 he became Major of the Montgomeryshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He was also Lieut.-Col. Commandant of the 8th Volunteer Brigade, Northern Division, of the Royal Artillery, and an Hon. Lieut. in the Royal Naval Reserve.

The attention of the Admiralty having been called to the fact of an accumulation of hydrogen gas in one of the boilers of the Satellite, directions have been given that all boilers of ships in commission or in reserve which are not already fitted with a small stop-cock at the highest part of the boiler for the escape of air are to be fitted with one as soon as convenient. By means of this stop-cock the engineer officer is to ascertain occasionally whether the boilers which are filled with water are quite full, so as to prevent any great accumulation of hydrogen. Where there are not any stop-cocks at hand, a hole is to be tapped and a screwed bolt used for this purpose until stop-cocks can be obtained.

A telegram, dated Teheran, Nov. 4, says:—"The European portion of the Afghan Boundary Commission, under Gen. ir P. Lumsden, has left Meshed, and will arrive at Sarakhs on the 8th inst. The Indian section of the Commission is expected to reach Sarakhs on the 15th inst."

LORD DUFFERIN will have an anxious part to play in the drama of "Great Expectations," for which all India is waiting; but his bright and confident nature, and the self-reliance which is so often the measure of the consciousness of internal strength and resource, will stand him in good stead in the face of an exacting and excitable audience. We shall not say a word about the political part of his task, save this, that the popularity which Lord Ripon has won in native estimation cannot in any way or wise be weighed against the loss of sympathy which has, we are told, resulted from his administrative policy among the Europeans in India. Lord Dufferin will have to rely on the services of Europeans, civil and military; but it will be very surprising indeed, if, after a while, he has not convinced the Native Princes that their best interests are bound up with the maintenance of the supremacy of the Empress-Queen. It is not possible for him, however, to obtain this command of their confidence and their sympathies, if he be called upon at once to sap up to the destruction of the Native Armies; and it will need all his ingenuity and finesse to enable him to make a lodgment in the outer wall of the citadel wherein Hindoo and Mahometan potentates sit enthroned and guarded by their fantastic levies. Certainly, if the British garrisons in India are many thousands short of the strength which the most experienced Generals consider absolutely necessary, it is desirable, looking solely to the preservation of order within the Empire itself, to reduce Native Armies to a minimum. When one looks beyond the Himalayas, other objects come in view. These Indian Princes cannot be treated as King Richard served the Royal boys in the Tower. They are fixed facts, and by treaty have acquired and been guaranteed rights which it would not be safe to assail, though it might be possible to persuade them to diminish the costly and useless burthens their armed levies impose on their subjects. To the Hindoo and to the Mahometan, be it remembered, the idea of "loyalty" has no connection with his submission to the rule of the Queen. Loyalty is exhibited, if at all, to his immediate Rajah or Nawab; and if once foreign intrigue could get to work among the congenial materials of native Courts, animated by the sense of wrongs and injured dignity, by the deprivation of rights and honours, and encouraged by the promises of the support of a great Power outside, there would come upon the British State in India a great danger and peril. In contrasting the mode in which Russia deals with the Princes of Central Asia and that which England has followed perforce in treating the Princes of India we are struck with the immense advantages possessed by a Christianised and civilised Asiatic race over the unbending and unsympathetic nation which has in a century and a half acquired possession of the vast Empire of the Moguls. The Princes of the Crimea, of Georgia, Mingrelia, Circassia, Daghestan, &c., have become incorporated in the great body of the Russian nobility. Their sons have been admitted into the Guards and the crack corps of the Czar, and no doubt in due time the descendants of the rulers of the Khanates will be devoted soldiers and courtiers of the White Sultan, their breasts covered with orders, stars, crosses, and ribands. They and the Muscovite are almost of the same race. But, for all that, it is to be doubted whether Russia would permit, in the Khanates or in her conquered provinces, the maintenance of such armies as Native Princes keep up in India. These Asiatics are easily influenced by the eye, by the graces of manner, by ceremonial and pageantry—by all the soft blandishments which the Slav wears over the armour of his adaptable nature. The religion of the Greek Church does not alienate their feelings and shock their prejudices. The incorruptibility and integrity on which Englishmen pride themselves, the administration of equal justice,—these are attributes which have to Asiatics no attractions, if accompanied by a rough and rude demeanour. John Lawrence sweating and swearing in his shirt-sleeves whilst engaged in the task of governing justly would stand no chance, in their minds, against a Skobeloff, revelling in his bravery and splendour like another Alexander. But just imagine any regiment in the British service taking kindly to a "nigger" comrade, though he were descended from the moon, sire of Odeypore, or though he were the lineal offspring of a hero of the Maharabathra! It is true that an English constituency did elect an Asiatic once, and that another is flirting with Mr. Lalmohun Ghose, nay, that Scindia is a Major-General of her Majesty's Army, but that is far, indeed, from the attainment of the solidarity which has been established by Russia between her own people and her Asiatic subjects. We must go our own way, and take the consequences. It is to be feared that the English in India will never be anything but what they are till they are out of it. They represent waves of an official migration which pass over the land, and carry off with them rupees and pensions, not, however, without doing vast good, and fertilising the soil in which future generations may plant and mature the seeds of a beneficent civilisation. If Lord Dufferin could hasten the advent of that good time, and direct the Imperial sunshine on India, so as to turn lip-service into the expression of real attachment to the Crown, and if he could, at the same time, break down the barriers which divide the English in India from their fellow-subjects, Mahometan and Hindoo, he would do more to secure the supremacy of the Queen than a million of men in arms, and would be the real founder of a permanent Empire in Hindostan. Equal justice cannot easily be administered without equal rights, and the new Viceroy will have to inculcate the lesson that the Englishman in India who commits a crime against the native is a bitter enemy to his country, and is the most dangerous apostle of the Muscovite avatar.

THE recent contributions to the agitation on the inefficient condition of our Naval defences have not been of such a nature as will tend to allay the still-growing feeling of uneasiness which has been so tardily aroused by the revelations in the Pall Mall Gazette and the exertions of those who, like ourselves, desire that the matter shall be placed before the public from an impartial standpoint. In Sir Edward Reed's letter to the Times, there is not only a decidedly despondent ring, suggesting his disbelief in any real and sustained effort on the part of the Government or the country to put on one side the domestic strife of party for what must be of far greater moment in the long run, but he points out very clearly, to such as can read between the lines, how the pressing needs of the occasion are in danger of being made use of for the attainment of personal ends, without much concern as to the ultimate loss or gain to the community. Both Lord Henry Lennox and Sir William Symonds have, rightly or wrongly, acquired for themselves the unenviable distinction of being considered pessimistic croakers at all and sundry, and their arguments do not, therefore, carry such weight as, from their undoubted position and ability, they would otherwise receive. Sir Thomas Brassey's recent speech at Hastings, able as it is, is a most disappointing and unsatisfactory one to those who are endeavouring to remove the dispute as far as possible from a charge of culpable neglect on this or any past Government. By all hands it was expected that at such a moment and on such an anniversary, he would have risen to the situation, and in that outspoken and honest manner by which he has heretofore earned the respect and regard of everyone, putting considerations of party and place aside, have given such unequivocal replies as he alone of all civilians has the means of substantiating, to the questions now most prominently brought forward:—"Is our Navy capable of repelling any hostile combination which can possibly arise? and are our Naval defences in the highest attainable degree of readiness to meet every possible demand that might be made upon them?" We search in vain for any answer to these very pertinent queries. The major part of his discourse is made up of,—1st, a rather lame defence of the present Administration, which he claims has endeavoured to keep the country in a foremost place, whereas our idea is that this country should be in the foremost place, and a long way ahead of any other; 2nd, of what looks very like a bid for popularity (on the principle of "you rub my back, and I'll rub yours"), by giving credit to both parties for an effort—which has yet to stand the test of trial—to make use of our Mercantile Marine by fitting them to carry guns, when, as most seamen believe, their great reliance must be upon the power of ramming given by their momentum velocity; and 3rd, of an enumeration of our present needs which he optimistically trusts may be supplied soon, instancing, as an example of the go-ahead manner in which Government is treating this question, the lately published correspondence referring to the defence of our coaling-stations, wherein, to our mind, there never was exposed a more flagrant case of "how not to do it." Instead of tackling the matter as it stands, Sir Thomas assumes that the question now before the public is "our relative position with that of France,"—a very curious, not to say incredible, mistake for him to labour under; and in reference to which, while he marshals a long array of ships and figures purporting to show that because Mr. Barnaby was incorrect in the article he wrote for the "Encyclopædia Britannica," therefore Sir Edward Reed's deductions are misleading; in reality, he adds but another to the already numerous jumbles of puzzling calculations which, however interesting to the specialist, are but as caviare to the crowd, and in no way disprove the assertion that, though we may be in advance of the French as regards vessels, we are behind them in guns and age of ships, and hardly equal in armour and speed. Shirking, also, the question of the admittedly possible combination of France, Russia, and one other Power, he says, "Perhaps we should have less to fear in the case of Russia and France than in the case of France and Italy," for assuredly it is no answer to say that the notion of this or that combination does not deserve serious attention. But it is with the concluding remarks of the speech that we have most to find fault; throughout the controversy there have been such continued efforts to shift the responsibility on to other shoulders, such a constant cry of "It's not me, sir, but the other boy," that any outsider would at once be inclined to remark, "Evidently herein is something wrong, or why all these excuses?" The Admiralty, the Treasury, this or that Government, Mr. Gladstone, and the people generally, have all come in for their share of blame; but it was reserved for Sir Thomas Brassey to say, "But it was, after all, upon our seamen and their officers that we placed our main reliance." Place reliance in them to do what? To extricate the country from a difficulty into which it should never be allowed to drift? for should a catastrophe occur, our commerce, our shipping industries, and our food supplies would be in danger, and our interests abroad and at home imperilled. The blame is to be laid, not upon those responsible for lack of ships, want of proper armament, and insufficiency of harbour defence, but upon those gallant men who, unquestioning and uncomplaining, will be sent to sea in what Sir Edward Reed graphically describes as "locomotive explosive machines," to be the scapegoats of a set of petty economists, who, with their parsimonious and shrivelled-up ideas of governing, should never have dared attempt to fill the shoes of those grand administrators who, by their wise and far-seeing efforts, made Great Britain the nation that she is, but may never be again, if we live on in a fool's paradise as regards one of the most important elements of its existence.

OUR recent articles on the education of our officers have drawn forth several letters on the subject, notably one from the Head Master of Clifton College, which we publish in another column. He takes us severely to task for the supposed animus displayed in our articles. If animus there was in our articles, it was directed against the framer, or framers, of the Warrant for the regulation of the examinations, whosoever they be. We shall confine ourselves to the salient points in his letter:—1. His denial of the responsibility of the Head Masters of Public Schools for the new Warrant. 2. His assertion that our criticism was obsolete. 3. That our strictures upon the Public Schools were not justifiable. We accept Mr. Wilson's assurance that he and his colleagues did not frame those absurd regulations. But how came it that Lord Morley, when questioned by Lord Salisbury, assured the House of Lords that the new Warrant had been framed with a view of putting down cramming and to suit the Public Schools' curriculum? It was stated openly that the framers had consulted the heads of Public Schools, although it would appear, from Mr. Wilson's statement, that their advice was disregarded. The whole debate in the House of Lords left the impression on the public mind that the Heads of Public Schools share with the War-Office authorities the responsibility for the new Warrant. We wrote in cognisance of the alterations made in the new Regulations, but with documents before us, so similar in most respects, we inadvertently quoted from the one issued in January. These slight modifications nowise dispose of the grave objections which were raised in our previous articles, namely,—(a.) That the preponderance given to modern languages will have the effect of transferring the crammer's activity to the Continent. We fully recognise the importance of living languages, but it is quite possible to overrate their importance to a soldier. All that is written in German and French, and worth reading, is rapidly translated. The chances of utilising a knowledge of either of these languages in actual warfare belong to remote contingencies. But if we take such contingencies into account, why not admit Russian and Italian as well? (b.) Whilst modern languages are made compulsory, sciences are optional, and valued on a par with Greek, 33 per cent. less than Latin! Of what possible utility could a knowledge of Latin and Greek be to an officer serving, say, in Egypt at the present moment? None, absolutely none; whereas a knowledge of science would stand him in good stead in a hundred different ways; yet the scantiness of the marks awarded for the subject have all but driven it out of the field. English history shares the fate of science; it stands bracketed with Greek. Literature, it would seem, is no longer considered worthy of cultivation, since the discovery by Lord Morley of its unhallowed connection with the crammers. Our future officers are compelled to make themselves acquainted with German and French authors, whilst they may ignore every author in their mother-tongue, or the most common events in our history. English troops, whilst yielding to none in valour and honourable obedience, utterly lack the submissiveness of the Russians, Germans, and Frenchmen. Of troops so heterogeneous, no officer can expect to be an effectual leader, unless he can rise superior to them. But how can he, when our curriculum for his elementary education is so framed as to place him in this respect at a serious disadvantage in respect to the men whom he is called upon to command? Can it be maintained, with any show of truth, that our richly-endowed Public Schools—to which the country has a right to look for the rational education of our future generations—have responded to the national exigencies? Have they imitated that wise, accommodating spirit shown by our Universities, and so shaped their curriculum as to meet the altered conditions of life? Or is it the truth that, with few honourable exceptions, the majority of them retain the old curriculum, suited only for the comparatively small number of their boys destined for the Universities,—a curriculum which drew forth from Cowper these well-known lines?:—

> "And is he well content his son should find
> No nourishment to feed his growing mind
> But conjugated verbs, and nouns declined?
> For such is all the mental food purveyed
> By public hackneys in the schooling trade;
> Who feed a pupil's intellect with store
> Of syntax truly, but with little more.
> Dismiss their cares when they dismiss their flock;
> Machines themselves, and governed by a clock."

Will the curriculum of our rich grammar-schools, and even that of many of the more modern schools, bear comparison, as regards practical utility, with that of our middle-class schools, or even with that of our national schools? When the Head Master of Uppingham Schools declares before a Royal Commission that "he will not alter his curriculum for any examination in the world;" when the authorities of Eton College appoint a head master known for his bias for the old curriculum, and his uncompromising opposition to modern subjects; when Wellington College allots one scholarship out of eleven to the so-called "modern side;" when we bear in mind how little has been done to give effect to the very emphatic recommendations of the Royal Commission of 1864, which declared that the education of our upper classes is, as regards utility, behind that of the middle and lower classes, and in some respects more backward now than it was two centuries ago; and when we glance at the statistics quoted in our previous article, what inference are we to draw? Simply this, that our Public Schools are more or less animated by a spirit hostile to the introduction of modern subjects. We are, of course, aware, and have already acknowledged, that some of the more modern Public Schools have adopted a more liberal curriculum. The statistics quoted by Mr. Wilson are interesting; but to pass in 10 years 53 boys into Woolwich, and in three years 17 into Sandhurst, out of a total of between 600 and 700 boys, cannot be regarded as a brilliant achievement. We were taken to task by the authorities of Wellington College because we stated that schools like to get rid of boys when arriving at a troublesome age. Mr. Wilson, on the other hand, fully confirms our statement. We repeat the desire we have already expressed, in which we are convinced public opinion will back us, namely, that the history and literature of our own country, and science,—whether they be crammers' subjects or not,—should receive greater encouragement, and that they should be placed on a footing of equality, at least, with Latin, French, and German.

[Mr. Wilson will find the authority from which the statistics quoted in our last article were taken, stated in that article. "Our Schools and Colleges," the recognised standard work on such matters, gives the year 1853 as the one in which Wellington College was founded. We did not quote a letter from Mr. Thring, but his evidence before a Royal Commission.—ED. A. & N. G.]

ON the eve of the promised statement on the condition of the Navy, we are brought face to face with the only two men in the Admiralty who really possess sufficient power and influence either to forward the true interests of the nation, by openly stating our needs and insisting upon the necessary funds being found to make our first line of defence efficient, or by concealing the facts under a cloud of confusing technicalities and party recriminations with some slight show of energy at the smallest possible cost, to lull the country again into the apathetic state of imaginary security and strength, from which it has been with difficulty aroused. In spite of the speeches lacking a genuine ring of determination, there is that in the admissions and declarations of Lord Northbrook and Sir Thomas Brassey which gives us the hope that they are minded to take the first and only patriotic course; and should they not do so, the responsibility will rest with them, and them alone. The First Lord, speaking at the Mansion House banquet, after delivering himself of certain truisms regarding the conduct of our Blue-jackets and Marines in the Red Sea and Egypt, takes credit for certain principles which he says have met with general approval, and which have actuated the present Board in supplying the wants of the service. Those principles, which are undoubtedly correct, and which, with some additions, cannot fail to be concurred in by every one knowing anything of the needs of modern maritime warfare, have, to our thinking, received but slight practical demonstration at the hands of this Admiralty; and we say it in common fairness, at the hands also of the rival Administration when in power. The reason for this is not far to seek—want of funds, hampered by which it is beyond the possibilities of any one, however determined, to supply all that is wanted to place our Naval forces in a position to meet all the demands made upon them by our growing responsibilities and rapidly extending interests in every quarter of the globe. Lord Northbrook must know, from Sir Thomas Brassey's somewhat reluctant admission at Hastings the other day, that at the present moment we are only just on a level with France and Italy as regards ships, and a long way behind as regards guns and armour; and that should certain eventualities occur, such as with our immense Colonial Empire are quite possible, in the event of war the Fleet would be utterly inadequate to bear the strain that might be put upon it. With him, then, and not with the Naval Lords, who ineffectually have constantly pressed our necessities upon the political party in power, must rest the onus, if the matter is not, at the present auspicious moment, so insisted upon that the necessary steps are taken to regain and maintain our lost supremacy upon the ocean. We shall be much disappointed also if, in spite of the optimistic glasses with which at times he covers his eyes, Sir Thomas Brassey does not plainly point out, waiving all party considerations, the true facts, as he knows them, to the House of Commons. Not alone ourselves, but the service generally, has great faith in Sir Thomas; he is looked upon as the coming man, the First Lord to be, who from his intimate knowledge of, and heartfelt interest in, Great Britain's glorious Navy and its traditions, can, and may if he be willing, restore that at present wofully-neglected and miserably-starved bulwark of the greatness of this magnificent Empire to a proper and efficient condition as the safeguard of its wealth, power, and prosperity. Yet, from the over-much-guarded speech which he made at the Fishmongers' Hall, Sir Thomas would seemingly have us contented, because we possess a commanding predominance in ships, and, for the rest, have enormous resources behind ready for any emergency that may arise. We should like to ask Sir Thomas what resources we have to supply our ships with modern guns—or even to efficiently arm our merchant steamers—in time of war, as he would most probably want to do? If this is all he can say to reassure us, truly has England's vaunted prowess come to naught. Our First Lord relies on his principles, which have been hardly carried out in practice, and our Civil Lord trusts to certain intangible resources which, he says, he believes are at hand in case of need. Let these gentlemen take heart, the nation is with them; no longer need they be afraid of Mr. Childers and his grasp upon the money-bags. Let them only fearlessly coach Mr. Gladstone as to the actual and pressing needs of the Navy, put aside the common-place platitudes which, however much suited for the shielding of political comrades, are out of place here, and in men in their position, and they may be sure that the country is ready to make any sacrifice to ensure the safety of the Empire and the many and divers interests involved in its maintenance. But we feel certain, although there may be an apparent attempt to justify delay on their part, neither Sir Thomas Brassey nor Lord Northbrook would willingly do anything to cause the present agitation to pass without making such legitimate use of it as is possible and right. The repeated assurances they both gave their hearers, that nothing would be left undone to maintain the maritime supremacy of the country, and that the Lords of the Admiralty, including themselves, were anything but insensible to public opinion, leads us to conclude that they are no longer inclined to contemptuously dismiss the weighty opinions and counsel of those who are as well, or perhaps better, able to judge of the situation as themselves. Come what may, it is for Lord Northbrook to remember that no amount of political or party gain will repay him for, or absolve him from, the immense responsibility he will incur if, in the statement he is to make next week, he draws a rose-coloured picture of the condition of the Navy which neither the facts nor his own belief for one moment warrant.

Vice-Admiral De Horsey will succeed the Duke of Edinburgh in command of the Channel Squadron on December 3.

The news of the death of Captain Frank Thomson, late of the Victoria and Albert, was received with regret by those many friends he had made in his career in the service; and the Queen has not hesitated to give expression to the sense she entertains of the loss of one who served her faithfully. The cause of his death was an erysipelatous tumour, following a severe cold and chill. His funeral on Thursday was attended by the Captain and officers of the Royal yacht, and a large number of friends in and out of the service.

Rear-Admiral Tryon, his Flag-Lieutenant W. C. Pakenham, and his Secretary Mr. Pawsey, leave for Sydney in the Peninsular and Oriental steamer of December 4.

Is not this a strange "item"? The steam-cutter of the Invincible (at Alexandria) "has been brought to Dongola by a nuggar for Lord Wolseley!" By "a nuggar," mark! We presume the steam-launch was sent up by rail to Siout, then steamed to Assouan, was taken round or up the First Cataract, and steamed to Wady Halfa, and then was portaged and railed to some place where she was "nuggared," and so borne to Dongola.

Admiral Phillimore, the popular officer, who succeeds Sir W. H. Stewart, entered the Navy in 1833, and attained the rank of Admiral on the retirement of Admiral Chads.

Prince George of Wales has resumed his studies at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and we trust that his short vacation will enable him to tackle the wily "x" with renewed ardour; but the brains of Princes do not differ from those of other people in the capacity for work, and nine hours a day (!)—nine hours of hard work, mind—is rather too much of a good thing. On Thursday his Royal Highness is permitted to receive guests, and the Prince of Wales recently was his son's guest, and greatly enjoyed the College dinner.

Captain Sharp, whose term of service in the dockyard at Devonport expires shortly, has received a notification that he may continue to hold it until the end of next year.

"R. N." ought to be accustomed by this time to the "mistake" of proposing as a toast "The Army, Navy, and Volunteers," as the Prime Warden of the Fishmongers' did the other night; and we think Sir T. Brassey would have taken nothing by his motion if he had pointed out the "blunder," as our correspondent suggests he should have done, when he "emphasised the slight by following Sir A. Clarke in returning thanks for the services," though he might have made his host and the company feel unpleasant. The Navy is admitted to be the senior service,—there is no question about it. Perhaps, as public dinners are generally given on land, the Army is "complimented" out of its place by precedence; but that at a banquet on board ship, the "Navy" would be first in the toast.

During the trial on Thursday at Portsmouth of the Active's new 6-inch breech-loaders, one of them burst at the muzzle. Luckily the gun was out, and no one was injured. An inquiry has been ordered into the circumstances.

Only one feeling pervades Devonport on the retirement of Admiral Sir Houston Stewart. At a meeting of the Devonport Town Council, it was unanimously resolved, "That the Council desire to convey to Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, K.C.B., their full appreciation of his unvarying courtesy and assistance whenever it has been in his power to promote the interests of the town; and on Sir Houston Stewart's retirement from the naval command of the port, they desire to wish him health and long life to enable him to continue his services to his country."

A Naval pension for Lieutenants of £50 per annum is placed at the disposal of the Lords of the Admiralty, by the death of Commander John Douglas. This officer entered the service in 1812, and was one of the few survivors of the battle of Algiers.

Truth says:—"'I have always,' said Nelson, 'acted on the principle that one Englishman is a match for four Frenchmen,' and probably in the days of the old-fashioned wooden ships this was a sound principle. One English ironclad, or one torpedo-boat, or quick cruiser is not, however, a match for two French ironclads, or two torpedo-boats, or two quick cruisers; and although we ought not to engage in a ruinous competition in point of numbers and armaments with the Fleets of the world, we ought most certainly to have a Navy which renders it reasonably certain that we can hold our own against all who attack us on the sea; for, without this, and without well-fortified coaling stations in all parts of the world, not only will Britannia no longer rule the waves, but she will stand a good chance of being driven from them in the event of a great Naval war."

Lord Henry Lennox is to the fore again,—twice this week he has spoken voluminously on the Navy, and he promises the Government he will let them have it on Monday next. If he will only take precautions to carefully eliminate from his speech all traces of attack upon the other side, and every flavour of political rancour, Lord Henry can tell the truth about the Navy as well as any other man, and better than a good many.

A letter, over the signature "W. Hope," appeared in Thursday's Times, combating the use of torpedo-boats as a sole and sufficient means for coast defence. The writer declares his opinion, which, he says, is also that of every experienced Naval officer he has consulted, that it will be impossible to obtain "flesh and blood" to drive torpedo-boats after the first Naval engagement; and he also considers that no harbour, dockyard, or coast town can be rendered secure from the possibility of being shelled and burnt from a distance by guns of long range, unless adequately supplied with the very largest and most powerful armour-piercing guns well placed, and as far in front of the position to be defended as possible.

If it is true, as stated, that the new torpedo-boats Landrail and Curlew are to be armed with one 6-in. and three 5-in. breech-loading guns, six Nordenfelts, and ten Whitehead torpedoes each, they ought to be very formidable craft indeed; but much will depend on their speed and sea-going capabilities.

The Old Pupils' Committee, formed to raise a fund for the presentation of a portrait of Mr. Alfred Eames, to be placed in the Dining-hall of the Royal Naval School, as a memorial of his long and faithful services as Secretary, have given the commission to Gustave Girardot; and, as the fund is more than sufficient for its purpose, the Committee have been enabled to order of Messrs. Elliott and Fry, in whose studio it will be painted, enough photographic copies of the picture, cabinet size, to send one to each subscriber. We understand that the portrait will be completed in about a month.

The report of the Shipbuilding and Repairing Committee is out. Four members, Captain Codrington and Messrs. Norwood, Palmer, and Samuda, while approving of it so far as it goes, express their opinion that the evidence given with regard to the organisation or administration of the Admiralty and of the dockyards was incomplete, and advocate further inquiry.

Even the decorous timidity of the Daily News in any matter requiring expenditure cannot prevent its admitting the "obvious determination of the public to uphold, at all costs, the efficiency of the Navy," in an article on Tuesday upon the speeches at the Mansion House banquet, and its suggestion to "Lord Northbrook and his professional advisers," that they are fortunate in knowing "that their efforts in maintaining, not merely our superiority, but our supremacy at sea, will be universally and cordially approved by all classes of Englishmen," ought to assist the First Lord in the endeavours—which we trust he will make—to obtain from the Treasury sufficient to place beyond doubt the Navy in an efficient position to meet any possible demands.

In reference to the report current in the House of Commons on Thursday night, that a Supplementary Estimate for two millions will be asked for on account of strengthening the Navy, the Daily News believes that the actual sum to be proposed falls far short of that amount. This is what is called "letting us down easy."

The work of the Rambler, which was commissioned at Chatham on Tuesday, includes some of the most important surveying duties that have been undertaken for a long time. In addition to a plan of the island of Diego Garcia, the new Indian Ocean coaling-station, there is to be an entire examination and verification of the whole China coast, and possibly a survey of the coast line of the late annexation in New Guinea. Commander Vereker is to be congratulated on the trust the Hydrographical Department evidently places in him.

What next will they find for the Marines and Blue-jackets to do! It was only the other day that the unfortunate loss of the Wasp called attention to the fact that our Naval officers were employed upon work somewhat similar to the duties of a process-server, and now detachments of "the finest troops in the world," accompanied by seamen from the Reserve-ships, are to lend a helping hand in evicting the Crofters of the Western Islands of Scotland.

If there is any truth in the rumour that two Chinese ironclads are preparing to put to sea for the purpose of meeting the French Fleet—which we much doubt—we can only declare our sorrow at the needless loss of life that must ensue, from our knowledge of the utter uselessness of Chinamen as seamen and gunners. Not even 25-ton guns will save them from being utterly smashed if an action should ensue.

Yesterday was the thirtieth anniversary of the day on which the tempest that wrecked the Prince and a fleet of transports, drove line-of-battle ships on shore, caused the loss of all the winter clothing of the devoted troops, flattened every tent to the earth, and filled Sebastopol itself with dismay and ruin, fell upon the Allied Camp; and a year later it was on the same date —November 14—that the explosion of the siege-train magazines occurred, with loss of life and limb and much destruction of ammunition, in the camp before Sebastopol.

The following tabular statement is given by Admiral Seymour:—

French.—Ironclads: Building and fitting—1st class, 13; 2nd class, 3. Fitted—1st class, 19; 2nd class, 10. Coast-service vessels, 8. Floating batteries, 6. Armoured gun-boats: Building—1st class, 4; 2nd class, 4. Total, 67.

Italian.—Ironclads: 1st class, 15, seven of which mount 100-ton guns; 2nd class, 7. Total, 22. Total, French and Italian, 89.

British.—Ironclads: Building and fitting—1st class, 9; 2nd class, 1. Fitted—1st class, 23; 2nd class, 12. Coast-service vessels, 8. Floating batteries, 6. Armoured cruisers: Building, 1; fitting, 1; fitted, 2. Total, British, 63.

The Government proposals for the protection of certain of our Naval depôts and defenceless coaling-stations abroad are now known. Three are apparently to be undertaken shortly, viz., Aden, Singapore, and Hong Kong. The total expenditure on Aden is estimated at £128,000, providing an armament of five 10-in. breechloading guns and nine obsolete 64-pounders; Singapore, £124,000, with nine 9·2-in. breechloaders, four 7-in. muzzleloaders, and 10 64-pounders; Hong Kong, £93,125, with eight 9·2-in. breechloaders, three 10-in. muzzleloaders, eight 7-in. muzzleloaders, and seven 64-pounders. The other depôts are to await a more convenient opportunity—probably till we are involved in war. These are Trincomalee, on which an expenditure of £45,000 is estimated, providing four 10-in. muzzleloaders, four 9-in. muzzleloaders, two 7-in. muzzleloaders, and six 64-pounders; Sierra Leone, £52,000, four 9·2-in. breechloaders and four 64-pounders; St. Helena, £7,000, two 9-in. muzzleloaders and three 7-in. muzzleloaders; Simon's Bay, £89,000, five 9·2-in. breechloaders, four 7-in. muzzleloaders, and four 64-pounders; Mauritius, £89,000, three 9·2-in. breechloaders, four 10-in. muzzleloaders, two 7-in. muzzleloaders, and four 64-pounders; Port Royal, Jamaica, £59,000, five 9·2-in. breechloaders, five 7-in. muzzleloaders, and six 64-pounders; St. Lucia, £48,000, three 9·2-in. breechloaders and four 64-pounders. The defences of Colombo, estimated at £45,000 and 12 guns, and of Table Bay, at £113,000 and 15 guns, are to be left to their respective Colonial Governments. It is understood these inadequate defences are only sufficient to guard against the sudden attack of small squadrons, whatever that may mean; but to arm these places with obsolete guns, and at the same time render the recall of our ships-of-war from the protection of our commerce necessary in the event of powerful ships of an enemy being sent to attack them, appears to most people the highest folly and penny-wise economy.

The launch of the large Russian ironclad corvette Vitja took place on the Neva last Tuesday, in the presence of the Emperor and Empress of Russia and the members of the diplomatic body. The proposed speed of this vessel is fifteen knots, and the armament includes ten 6-in. guns. Another large corvette, to be named the Rynad, will be launched next spring. The Russian Admiralty are using every exertion to place the Navy on an efficient footing.

The Navy is in great favour just now in France, and the names of Courbet, Miot, Lespès, Krautz, and Gougeard fill the trump of fame, not to speak of Captain Fournier, of the Tien-Sin Treaty, wounded the other day in a duel with Henri Rochefort. In a long article of many columns published by the Figaro, dealing with Naval affairs, the writer says:—"There is a saying in the fleet that in order to become admiral one must have been midshipman or cabin-boy; this is inexact as regards cabin-boys, except in the yarns spun in the forecastle." In no other Navy but ours, perhaps, has been witnessed so curious a succession as that referred to by Macaulay in his "History of England,"—a cabin-boy who afterwards rose to command the fleet as Sir Christopher Mings, had for cabin-boy a lad who became Sir John Narborough, and Sir John had a cabin-boy who is pretty well known in history as Sir Cloudesley Shovel. However, matters have changed with us since then. To return to the Figaro, it reminds us that the maritime inscription embraces all the coast line, and ascends the rivers as high as the tide is felt; every child born within the region of the maritime inscription, and who goes to sea, is at once entered in a special register, and becomes a sailor of the inscription. Besides this, all the conscripts of the same region who draw low numbers for the Army are taken for the Navy, and become sailors of the classes. When these men have served their five years, they are simply called out for the 28 days' training; they then pass into the Reserve, and, like soldiers, are entirely liberated at the age of 40 years. The lad inscribed, or the inscript, is treated differently. After serving his time in the Navy he may return to his merchant vessel or his fishing-smack, but the State retains its hold upon him until he is 50 years of age. The inscript can at any time, however, have his name struck off the books of the inscription, and get entered as a sailor of the classes; but in this case he must give up the sea altogether. Should he embark again, the inscription immediately pounces upon him. The French coast is divided into five districts, having for head-quarters, Cherbourg, Brest, Lorient, Toulon, and Rochefort; these districts are subdivided into quarters, and each quarter has its Commissioner, which Commissioners have an absolute and discretionary power over the inscripts, which the writer observes is hardly in harmony with the immortal principles of '89. In fact, no other class is subject to such arbitrary rule as the inscripts. However, we are assured that no one complains, not even the Radicals, for every one understands that without this system there would be no sailors, "even were the humblest of them to receive the pay of Cabinet Ministers!" It is some comfort to learn that in return for this oppression, and for the services exacted from him, the State treats Jack well, and serves him a pension in his old age which enables him to live modestly, to smoke his pipe, and from time to time to take a glass with his old comrades. There is one anecdote in this article which reminds us painfully of a portion of the evidence given before the Court which tried the survivors of the ill-fated Wasp. It is this,—"M. de La Landelle relates, in his excellent work upon sailors, that the captain of a frigate, warned by a subaltern that the ports had been left open, preferred to allow his ship to go to the bottom sooner than accept the advice to close them. The author declares this fact to be historical, nor is it improbable."

The Italian Government appears to be most desirous to ascertain the practical merits of great guns, and many costly experiments have recently been made. A 130-ton gun has been cast at the Krupp works for Italy, and if the experiments with this monster are successful, others on the same model, to serve for the Coastguard defence, will be cast at the Royal Foundry near Spezzia.

We cannot afford to under-estimate the rapidly-growing importance of the port of Vladivostock as a menace to our commerce, colonies, and shipping in the Pacific. It should be remembered how, at a rather critical moment in 1877, a Russian Fleet of seven cruisers and transports suddenly sailed from thence and appeared at San Francisco, our naval strength at the time in those waters consisting of the Fantôme, at Honolulu, and the Rocket, at Vancouver Island, B.C. Practically, if the war which was anticipated had broken out, Esquimalt, our only coaling depôt and repairing-yard in the whole of the Pacific, would have fallen into the Russian hands, inflicting an incalculable blow to our prestige, and paralysing our forces in that part of the world. Since then every measure has been taken to render Vladivostock invulnerable, great efforts have been made to develop the coal deposits in the Isle of Saghalien, the military forces in the neighbourhood are constantly being increased, the naval squadron of cruisers and other vessels augmented, and in addition to the iron dock already erected, another has been ordered to be constructed as rapidly as possible and sent out. All this activity appears to point to some intention on the part of the Russian Government which, we repeat, it will be unwise of our rulers to ignore.

"The sovereignty of the seas," wrote Mr. Isaac Disraeli, in his "Curiosities of Literature," "which foreigners dispute with us, is as much a conquest as any one made on land; it is gained and preserved by our cannon, and the French, who for ages past exclaim against what they call our tyranny, are only hindered themselves from becoming universal tyrants over land and sea by that sovereignty of the seas without which Great Britain would cease to exist." After discussing the merits of the Mare Clausum of Selden and the Mare Liberum of Grotius, Mr. Disraeli reminds us that "our kings have always levied great sums, even without the concurrence of their Parliaments, for the express purpose of defending this sovereignty at sea." Alas, tempora mutantur! The father of Lord Beaconsfield would write in a different strain to-day were he alive.

Although the movement of the shipping interest in reference to the composition of the Royal Commission on Loss of Life at Sea is not strictly a matter for our cognisance, the welfare of the merchant sailors and the interests of the seafaring population of these isles are closely associated with the well-being of the Royal Navy. In all the speeches and letters with which the Press, and Parliament, and public meetings have been saturated since the Pall Mall Gazette published its article, "The Truth about the Navy," one of the foremost topics urged upon the consideration of the country is the protection of our commerce at sea, and the necessity of providing for its safety, not only in mid-ocean, but at the ports of destination, and at the Colonies. Unquestionably the shipowners have a right to be represented on the Royal Commission, and they have also claims to be heard in defence of their interests, which they have thought unduly assailed by Mr. Chamberlain; but we trust that there will be no battle-royal over the body corporate of the seafaring population. It is in no offensive spirit that we point out the fact that the legislation which has ensured some measure of safety, not to speak of comfort, for the sailor, has not been owing to the action of the shipowners themselves. The agitation on behalf of the merchant sailor has been external. As a class, merchant seamen have got few friends amongst the shipowners. The institution of the Plimsoll "line," and of rules and regulations connected with deck-loads, forecastle accommodation, and the like, was not the work of shipowners as such, or of any association of the intelligent, wealthy, and important class who have invested their capital in the fleets which cover the seas of the world, and constitute the carrying navies of nearly all nations. The shipowners have a fair status before the country, and they can have no real interest which is not consistent with the safety and well-being of the sailors in their ships. It is not travelling outside the limits of this journal to express a hope, without any reference whatever to his political views, or to his legislation in connection with this subject, that Mr. Chamberlain may not be ousted from the Royal Commission. It would be a great slur upon the intelligent gentlemen selected for this solemn inquiry to suppose that they should be perverted from the path of duty by the influence of any Cabinet Minister. If Mr. Chamberlain has been unjust, he will stand condemned by the result of the Commission; if he has, in the discharge of his duty, endeavoured to prevent injustice, to save life, and to contribute to the welfare of the seafaring population of the three Kingdoms, no amount of feeling on the part of individual shipowners or associations should be allowed to influence the Government; and nothing but conclusive proof that he has been influenced by narrow views, or erroneous information, should induce Parliament to reject the measures which the President of the Board of Trade may submit as the Magna Charta of the merchant sailor. With regard to the sailor himself, there is much room for improvement. We fear that the reputation acquired by the English merchant sailor in foreign parts is not of the most savoury. For the present we must be content with the work which is to be done, we hope efficiently and thoroughly, by the gentlemen appointed as Royal Commissioners.

It is stated that Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., a solicitor of Wolverhampton, has been offered the vacant seat at the Admiralty as Civil Lord.

We understand that Sir Thomas Brassey has been appointed to succeed Mr. Campbell-Bannerman as Secretary to the Admiralty. We trust he will, if only for the esteem in which he is held by the Navy, use his position to justify their good opinion, and to obtain for the service those reforms which he knows are urgently required.

The recent call for volunteers for service in South Africa once more draws our attention to the present system of obtaining officers for small wars. Once more the mad rush has been made, and those only with powerful interest have succeeded in the struggle. The Duke of Cambridge called for volunteers, instead of allowing them to be selected, as was the case in the Nile Expedition; but long before the names reach head-quarters interest is at work and the list virtually settled. The ample rewards to officers who have been fortunate enough to take part in recent campaigns show that promotion is almost certain, and surely a settled system should now be instituted to insure promotion reaching the most deserving. A list of those who wish to volunteer for any active service should be carefully prepared at head-quarters, and only those of five years' service and upwards, who are strongly recommended by their commanding officer and General, should be placed on the list. And only those who are in every way physically fit and able to ride should be submitted. Even if a stiff physical and professional examination was added, hundreds of officers would gladly undergo the ordeal, and it would be a great incentive to hard work and zeal. Many who fight shy of the book-work of the Staff College would gladly make every effort to attain the requisite standard for such a list, and many a valuable Staff College man would be improved by having previously passed such an examination.

Captain E. Nash, R.A., has been appointed Professor of Military History, Administration, and Law at the Royal Military College of Canada.

In addition to the appointments already announced, Lieutenant-Colonel C. Wyndham Murray, 28th Gloucestershire Regiment, has been appointed Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General on Sir Charles Warren's Staff. Major Murray left England yesterday for the Cape.

Cairo promises to be gay and anxious this winter. "Shepheards'," the "New," the Hotel du Nil, &c., are full of sisters, wives, cousins, mothers, and aunts; and if Messrs. Cook can spare the steamers, there will be water parties to Assouan, Wady Halfa, may be Dongola, Cataracts and all, to meet the returning expedition,—we hope in happiness and triumph.

Whenever "society" is interested in an expedition such as that on which Lord Wolseley is now engaged, there are invariably cropping up various kinds of impostors who seek to attach to their own persons some of the interest belonging to the enterprise itself, by pretending that they "are off to-morrow" for Magdala, Ulundi, Khartoum, Lord knows where! Some of these are amiable, well-meaning people enough,—the victims of imagination. They really believe "they are going." "Well, old chap, you won't see me here for many a long day!" That day week Tadpole meets Taper at the club, and to the "Hallo, here you are still!" of his friend, explains that "the confounded Admiralty would not let him go," or that his yacht was not ready; that it was too late in the year; that Sir Burnaby Cockle "didn't think his liver would stand the climate," and all the rest of it. But there are others who never have the smallest idea of leaving the clubs, and who are trifling with the affections of their friends for their own pleasure. It is so delightful to hear Lady Dolly exclaim, "Oh, you desperate man! How can you think of risking your life in such a dreadful place?"—to know that a buzz is running round the room as he enters, "He is going to relieve Gordon, you know, to-morrow!" But the worst of the bad lot are those who actually do go to what is called "the seat of war," and who sit on it,—loafing about in hotel bars and messes, in utter uselessness, and impeding useful work as well. There are, however, brilliant illustrations of the energy and activity of the race in the persons of men who, by the vis viva within them, are driven away from home and friends to share the dangers and hardships of belligerent expeditions, without any share in or right to the rewards of service; but those people do not publish themselves beforehand.

Captain M. D. Whitmore, R.E., has been appointed acting Aide-de-Camp to General Sir John Adye at Gibraltar.

Zohrab Bey, whose name appears on the list of officers with Lord Wolseley, is an Armenian, nephew to Dr. Zohrab, the well-known physician in Constantinople, not long ago attached to the household of Khedive Ismail. Zohrab has seen a good deal of fighting. He was with Prince Hassan in Abyssinia and Bulgaria, and with Lord Wolseley at Tel-el-Kebir, and with Lowe in the march to Cairo; for his services in the last campaign he received the C.B. He speaks English and French well, in addition to Turkish and Arabic, and is a very useful, intelligent, and gallant officer; so good a shot, that he did more than hold his own with Lord de Grey when they had a turn at the quail together in 1883.

The appointment of Brigade-Major to the Troops in Canada is vacant, Lieutenant-Colonel W. F. M. Hutchinson, R.A., returning to England, on promotion to the Half-pay List.

Captain Parry Okeden, 60th Rifles, Aide-de-Camp to the General Officer commanding at Aldershot, is, we much regret to hear, dangerously ill. Captain Okeden's health has been far from good since the Egyptian Campaign of 1882, during which he served on the Staff of the General Officer Commanding. He has completely broken down while on his way to Algeria for his health's sake, and his present condition gives much anxiety to his friends.

Major A. C. M'Kean, Inniskilling Dragoons, has been appointed temporary Deputy Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at the Cape of Good Hope.

It is not easy to understand the causes of the general sense of "insecurity," the anxiety about the "safety of the Empire." But they exist. The words meet one in speeches and in writings, in newspaper articles, in lectures, in reports on defences, in private conversation. There ought to be no such feeling. But it is unquestionable that from time to time "scares" of this kind take possession of England, as if the memory of old-world invasions lingered in the national mind, and the thought was coming up out of the depths that what has happened may occur again. There have been many occasions on which the alarm was well-founded, even since Elizabeth harangued her levies at Tilbury. Lord Malmesbury reminds us, in his delightful "Reminiscences," of the helpless condition in which this country was when the Emperor's Colonels were urging France to war, and of the great trouble which men were in at the prospect. We do not think undefined fears are safe guides; but they are not to be derided or laughed at. This country is in the presence of tremendous forces arrayed for battle, has the guardianship of immense treasures, and is the protector of varied interests all over the globe. There should be no doubt about its ability to vindicate its rights. Our Government has assumed, or been forced to accept, enormous responsibility in Egypt; and in the pleasant practice of "Empiring it all over the world" there are always hidden risks of sudden conflict. It is not sufficient to ask us to indicate precisely the sources of danger, or to demand a categorical answer to the question,—"What are you afraid of?" and, in event of silence, to maintain there is no cause for disquiet. The criticisms of foreign papers on the shortcomings of their Navies, afford no satisfactory reasons for neglecting the voices which are heard at home in the same sense. Nay, they are rather arguments the other way. For what is the purpose France, Italy, Germany, Russia have in view in pressing on their Naval armaments? May there not be some settled half-unconscious policy and purpose of some day destroying the maritime supremacy which now they are fain to accept?

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel R. J. Bond, R.E., has succeeded Lieutenant-Colonel A. E. Hamilton, R.E., as a member of the Royal Engineer Committee at the War Office.

Surgeons-General A. Smith, C.B., R. Gilborne, and J. Lamprey, A.M.D., are about to be placed on the Retired List. This will promote Deputy-Surgeons-General A. H. Fraser, J. Hendley, C.B., and H. B. Hassard, C.B.

In Truth, and one of the medical papers, allusion is made to a fracas at Aldershot, which was the result of the action of certain medical officers condemning the food supplied for the sick in hospitals by the contractor; and it is said that the officers in question, having condemned the rations, were called on for a report, and, having rendered this report, were then pronounced obstructive and insubordinate, and removed from Aldershot to other stations. Now, this surely requires some further investigation, for, if the story be true, we have, on the one hand, condemnation of medical officers by Lord Wolseley in his evidence before Lord Morley's Committee for not condemning food which was of inferior quality and unfit for the sick; and on the other, the Commander-in-Chief condemning medical officers for doing their duty, and peremptorily directing their removal from Aldershot to other stations. This is, if true, a veritable example of sailing between Scylla and Charybdis. Will a court of inquiry be assembled? Justice must be done. So far it has only been extended to the Army contractor. Should Truth not be in error, the Duke of Cambridge has not been exposed to the charge of unjust or capricious action with regard to officers, but it is just possible that the Army Medical Department officers may not always have the most favourable construction placed on their acts. Still, if the Duke and Sir F. Alison concur in the course alleged to have been pursued, we are inclined to think there was some offence committed at Aldershot deserving of the punishment inflicted.

Lord Hartington, in his speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet on Monday last, made two statements concerning the efficiency of the Army, and then appeared glad to leave that subject, and to get on to the more congenial ground of recounting the deeds of, and bestowing praises on, the gallant little army who fought so well in the Soudan, in the early part of the present year. The statements of the Secretary of State for War were most encouraging, and were to the effect that since last November the effective Army had been increased by between 4,000 and 5,000 men. Also that the Reserves had been increased by between 5,000 and 6,000 men. We should be sorry to doubt Lord Hartington's word, especially when he tells us such good news; and, as regards the Reserve, we will not say one word against the accuracy of the statement, for we have no means at present of judging thereof; but, as regards the Line, we can only say that, presuming the news to be true, the recruiting during the last six weeks must have reached a total far exceeding the previous highest record for so short a period by several thousands. But has it? Time will show.

L'Armée Française contains a curious paragraph this week, from which we gather that, while the French War Office subscribes for 82 copies of all the other military papers, it, for some reason not explained, is left out in the cold. The copies of the papers subscribed for by the War Office are forwarded to the staffs of the commanders of Army Corps, at a cost of nearly £40 a year for each of the favoured journals.

There is a vacancy in the Corps of Gentlemen at Arms by the death of Major E. Sutherland, who had held a commission in the corps since July, 1852. Major Sutherland served formerly in the 7th Fusiliers.

By order of the Secretary of State for War, a series of lectures on Staff duties, addressed to officers at the Staff College by Major F. H. Clarke, C.M.G., have been published officially, and can now be obtained of any of the military publishers.

One result of the visit of the Assistant-Director of Clothing and Colonel Blundell to Aldershot, to inspect the khaki clothing, has been the removal of the cork ridges from the shoulders of this condemned dress. As these "epaulettes" were neither ornamental nor useful, the garment has not suffered by their removal. When the greatcoat was worn any length of time, the pressure of the hard ridges on the shoulders became unbearable, and to obviate this it was a common practice of the men, when on night guard, to take off the grey frock, and wear the greatcoat alone.

Captain H. C. Somerset, 3rd Buffs, has been appointed provisional Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Sargent, C.B., commanding at Hong Kong.

Instructions have been received at Aldershot to raise a section of the Telegraph Battalion, Royal Engineers, to the war establishment, and prepare it for service in Bechuanaland,—to embark during the ensuing week. Like other branches of the service, the Corps of Royal Engineers is at the present time in a very weak condition, and if further exceptional demands are made on this corps for scientifically-trained soldiers for service abroad, it will be almost impossible to supply them without recalling men from the Reserves.

The Intelligence Department of the Horse Guards has just published the 19th Section of the German official account of the Franco-German war of 1870-1871. The new volume includes the occurrences in the South-East theatre of war from the middle of January, 1871, and proceedings in rear of the German Army and in the coast provinces from November, 1870, until the armistice.

It is very refreshing to read an account of the English expedition to Egypt in the pages of the Spectateur Militaire, after all the trash and falsehood published in the French civilian press. The Spectateur does not flatter us, but it represents matters in their true light, and its criticism is sincere. Instead of representing the bombardment of Alexandria (generally confounded by our amiable neighbours across the channel with the burning and pillage of that city) as the most savage act on record, it refers to that bombardment as a diversion on the part of the British fleet, and a duel between the guns of the forts and the ironclads. The Spectateur simply points out that the Egyptian batteries were not protected in accordance with the necessities of modern warfare, and that the guns were worked without intelligence. Consequently, the duel decided nothing as regards the relative value of shore and naval batteries. After describing the shifting of the base of operations from Alexandria to Suez, slightly blaming our treatment of the Canal and M. de Lesseps, and dwelling on our first encounters with the enemy, the Spectateur adds:—"The actions of August 28 and September 9 were as ill-directed on the side of the English as on that of the Egyptians. In that of August 28 the English left wing was too much exposed. General Lowe perceived this, and executed his flank attack the next day, when the fire of the infantry was unsteady. Both actions proved the small amount of discipline and moral courage possessed by the Arab forces." The Spectateur then points out the chief defects in the fortifications of Tel-el-Kebir, which fell into the hands of the English in twenty minutes, adding that the night march which preceded the carrying of the position is only to be understood on the supposition that reliable news had been obtained concerning the Egyptians, whose want of vigilance was well known. The Egyptians not having posted a single sentry along the line of entrenchments, the English were able to reach the foot of the works without being perceived. The writer considers the march of the English Cavalry on Cairo and Zagazig as surprising, seeing the distance got over in a country which was supposed to be hostile. In conclusion, the Spectateur, after pointing out what Arabi and his troops might have done, says:—"The campaign terminated gloriously and cost very few men—79 killed, 578 wounded, 22 disappeared; all the honour was due to General Wolseley, for the boldness of his plans and the correct estimate he formed of Arabi, his men, and the elements of which he disposed. . . . . . . Taking all in all, this expedition was a trial of the mobilisation and internal organisation of the English Army after the principles laid down by the law of 1881; and we are sure that the English Army will know what advantages to derive from the lessons of this one month's campaign."

The new German powder, to which public attention has been directed in connection with a remonstrance from English makers against the contracts made by Government with foreign powder manufacturers, has been in use for some time at Woolwich, &c., in the proof of guns, and has developed remarkable qualities. It is appreciably stronger than the Italian (Fossano) powder, which has also been beaten by the later products of Waltham under Colonel Brackenbury's management; and it possesses, moreover, a very valuable quality, being in comparison with all the large-grained powders almost smokeless. We were present at some experiments with the 43-ton gun the other day, and observed that the smoke was very light and diffusible; and that Sibert's ingenious velocimètre showed that the pressures were very satisfactory, and the initial velocity exceedingly high. The composition is a secret, and, of course, we must pay through the nose for it; but it is not comforting or consolatory to feel that as the country is dependent on the foreigner for its food, it is also beholden to him for the best means of securing supplies, just as we have to look to private firms at home for the supply of our largest ordnance and all our gun-carriages for big guns, the national establishment at Woolwich not being provided with furnaces for large steel castings and plant for making guns over 63 tons. Sir J. Whitworth and Co. supply the steel for Woolwich guns; Elswick and Co. supply all the 80 and 100-ton guns, made and to be made, apparently, for forts and ships; and the Vavasseur carriages are made "out of doors," as far as Woolwich is concerned. It is not from disinclination or inability, but from want of means, the national workshop does not turn out what the services require.

A short time since the whole, or nearly the whole, of the Indian papers were caught by a hoax, and gravely announced that General Wilson, the Military member of the Council, with General Macleod Lewes, V.C., Inspector-General of Military Works, was about to proceed to Morar, then and there to decide whether that station, the Cantonment of Gwalior, should not be at once abolished. General Wilson's real destination, it appears, is now to be Kumaon, Agra, Gwalior, and finally Lucknow; but it is needless to say that nothing is said about the abolition of Morar. At Naini Tal the question to be decided will be the fate of the depôt, which has hung in the balance for some years past. The depôt buildings are old and bad, and the road by which they are reached is so unsafe that not long ago an officer was killed there while going round his guards. Part of it overhangs a precipice, and it is by no means uncommon in the rains for parts to be washed away, and communication with Naini Tal suspended for a day or so. In addition to this, at Ranikhet, half-way between the station itself and the outlying part, known as Chaubattia, where there is already the head-quarters and wing of a regiment of British infantry, are a number of sites, which were cleared some years ago, and have always since been spoken of as the probable site of the depôt. And if this place was not approved, there is on the other side of Ranikhet a fine site, which was cleared some years since in the same way for a military prison. They got as far as collecting stones to build the foundations, when it was decided that the place was too good for military prisoners, and the works were abandoned.

At the Army Entrance Examinations in 1885, the prescribed portions of Pope will include the "Essay on Man," the "Moral Essays and Epistles to Several Persons," the "Imitations of the Satires and Epistles of Horace," and the "Prologue to the Satires;" but not the "Satires of Dr. Donne versified," nor the "Epilogue to the Satires."

There is nothing we are so fond of in practice as an anomaly. All the summer the London papers and philosophers have been lecturing the rest of the world about the wickedness and folly of quarantine and the like, and especially did we badger the Spaniard anent his cross persistence in fumigation and the absurd frontier regulations; but here is Sir John Adye imposing 21 days' quarantine on all arrivals at Gibraltar from Italy and France, clean bills or no! Verily, verily, these be things "no (foreign) fellow can understand!"

Brigade-Surgeon R. W. Carter, who has lately been performing the duties of Principal Medical Officer at the Curragh, is about to retire from the service, and has proceeded to Weymouth, there to take charge of a station hospital. Dr. Carter entered the service in July, 1854, became Surgeon in 1867, Surgeon-Major in 1873, and Brigade-Surgeon in 1879. He served in the Crimea, and was present at the battle of the Alma, siege and fall of Kinbourn (Crimean medal with two clasps and Turkish medal); was also in India during the Mutiny, and present at the actions of Kankur and Bunkagaon (medal). Finally served in the late Afghan Campaign (medal). A more energetic and painstaking medical officer than Brigade-Surgeon Carter there does not exist. His strict attention to duty and unquestionable ability has earned for him a reputation that any one in the Department might be proud of. It is a pity, in these days of selection, that an officer so universally esteemed should not have been chosen for promotion, by which means his valuable services could have been retained in the Army.

Vice-Admiral Dowell arrived at Shanghai on Tuesday last.

The Portuguese naval station on the West African Coast is to be reinforced by a corvette and two gunboats.

In a little brochure entitled "How to Secure Officers' Widows, and Orphans against Want," a captain in the Navy strikes the key-note of a very widely-spread feeling in the service, when he writes:—"Notwithstanding the generosity of our fellow-countrymen ashore, it is desirable that officers should make some provision for those whom they may leave behind them. Nothing is more painful for a man who has been several years in the service than to read the number of urgent appeals made on behalf of the families of shipmates or acquaintances, who have 'nothing beyond a slender pension to depend upon,' and to feel that to such appeals the response is not likely to be considerable. It may, perhaps, have been noticed that similar appeals are made more rarely on behalf of the widows and orphans of military officers, especially of those belonging to corps like the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, to the condition of which those of our own service bear most resemblance. In both these distinguished branches of the Army funds have been formed by the officers themselves, out of which annuities are provided for widows. There is no reason why the Navy should not follow their example." He makes some excellent suggestions for the establishment and maintenance of a fund out of which annuities should be provided, in addition to the pensions to which they may be entitled, for the widows, it being optional to any one paid under the Parliamentary Votes of the Navy, whose name appears in the Navy List, to become a subscriber. While mentioning the steps taken by the Artillery and Engineers to meet a similar need, the writer might also have called attention to the fund established by the Marines, which we understand is in a very flourishing condition. An independent movement of this kind deserves the encouragement of the service generally; and while it will greatly depend upon the primary organisers and the business manner in which the details are arranged, there appears to us no reason, if only the right men interest themselves in the affair, why it should not meet with the success which we earnestly wish it.

The French residents of Sydney and a large party arranged an excursion to the monument erected near Botany Bay to La Perouse for the officers and men of the French ship-of-war Bruat, which last year recovered from the sea some cannon which had formerly belonged to La Perouse's ships.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

Responding to the toast of the Navy at the Mansion House banquet on Monday evening, the Earl of Northbrook said:—"Since the early part of last year the Navy has not had any very stirring work to do; but Comdre. Molyneux, in the Red Sea, has had the responsibility of the protection of the ports of Suakim and Massowah, a work which has been most triumphantly carried out by the forces engaged, especially by the Royal Marines, to whom the defence of Suakim was entrusted. When we remember that the thermometer in the middle of the day in a double hospital stood at 126 deg., and that for several weeks it never went below 90 deg. at night, all those who have any knowledge of tropical climates will know what that means. Admiral Lord John Hay has heartily co-operated with Lord Wolseley in everything connected with the operations which he is carrying on in the Soudan. I had a letter only a few days ago from Lord Wolseley himself, in which he used these words respecting the men of the Navy who are now with him upon the Nile:—'No men could work heartier or more willingly than the Naval detachments at the Cataracts. Here the dangers are very difficult and very great, but all ranks seem to make light of them.' I have had an opportunity of seeing myself some of these little boats with which Lord Wolseley is advancing up the Nile. I saw these little boats ascend the First Cataract, a distance of six miles, which they passed by pulling and tracking in six hours. I heard also from Lord Wolseley the other day touching these boats, that he is perfectly satisfied with their performance, and that he is sure that with no other means could he have transferred an army of from 5,000 to 6,000 troops to Shendy. No doubt you all know, by the proceedings in Parliament and during the Recess, that there has been a considerable discussion in the public Press respecting the state of the Navy, and I can assure your lordship and this company that the Board of Admiralty have no fear of any criticism on this subject. They are fully aware of the deep interest that is taken in the Navy by all classes of her Majesty's subjects. I may also say for myself that it seems to me that the discussion that has taken place respecting the Navy has not had any, or hardly any, of that party hue which, however healthy it may be when applied to other matters, has never seemed to me to be suitable when applied to the Naval and Military services of the country. I need hardly assure your lordship that at the proper time I shall be prepared to enter into any discussions of that kind in Parliament; but this I should like to say here, that although the subject of the Navy, and of shipbuilding in particular, is one upon which the greatest difference of opinion exists, and to which might be applied with perfect truth the old proverb, 'Quot homines tot sententiæ,' yet in all the correspondence that has recently passed, as far as I have read, it is very gratifying to the Board of Admiralty to know that the principles of Naval administration which they have set before them have received universal concurrence. I mean by these main principles, first, that it is desirable steadily to increase the strength of armour-plated ships; in the second place, that it is necessary to increase the number of swift cruisers for the protection of the commerce of the country; and thirdly, that it is desirable to pay greater attention to the element of speed in the construction of the smaller class of vessels. These three principles, which the present Board of Admiralty have consistently followed, have, as far as I am aware, received universal concurrence. I can assure your lordship and this company that the Board of Admiralty are sensible of the responsiblity which rests upon them, and that they are determined to maintain the supremacy of her Majesty's Navy, whereon, to use the words of the old Act of Parliament, 'the wealth, safety, and strength of this kingdom mainly depend.'"

Sir T. Brassey, M.P., on Tuesday evening, at the Fishmongers' Hall, in responding on behalf of the Navy, remarked:—"It is said that our ships are not numerous enough, that they are defective in their design and construction, and when I am asked to give a reassuring statement to those whom I have the privilege of addressing, I can with confidence give you a reassuring statement with regard to the present condition of the Navy. I know it may be said that there are many criticisms as to its condition, but I can match them. I can more than match them in the criticisms pronounced abroad in the public Press of foreign countries, and in the Assemblies of those countries. And I can confidently say this, that in the strength of the Navy, in the important class of battle-ships, we stand at the present moment in a commanding position; and we know that we have at our back enormous resources, to which we have only to make an appeal, to produce more rapidly than it is possible for any other country a development of our Naval force. The duty of the Admiralty is to protect the country against any possible combination of the battle-ships of foreign nations. We have fully done our duty in that respect. But perhaps you will say, 'We want something more. We want to protect our commerce.' Well, I quite agree to that; but first of all, I would remind you that commerce itself is not incapable of self-defence, and that very much might be done by good administration to give to the commerce of this country a power of self-defence. We are, of course, not insensible to the force of public opinion; and if public opinion demands a further protection of the commerce of the country, and is fully prepared to bear the charges which must be imposed for this purpose, I think I may confidently say that the present Administration has for its guidance Naval and professional advice second to none which is to be found in any Naval Administration in the world. I am aware that this subject was treated only 24 hours ago in the City of London by my respected chief, Lord Northbrook, and I was glad to know that he was able to appeal, and to appeal confidently, to those who heard him with regard to the condition of the Navy; and that he was able to challenge criticism with regard to the administration of the resources entrusted to the Board of Admiralty at the present time. I cannot go beyond the statement made by Lord Northbrook yesterday when he assured his hearers that they might confidently believe that the Government would take all such steps as were necessary to maintain the Naval supremacy of the country. You must recognise that the proposals which are about to be made to Parliament, and which have been promised by no less a person than Mr. Gladstone, must be made after serious consultations with the Board of Admiralty, and, indeed, of the Cabinet, and it would be presumption on my part on this occasion to intimate what the result of such careful and deliberate consultation may be. I can only repeat what was said by Lord Northbrook yesterday, and say that I share with him the fullest desire and the most strenuous determination to maintain the Naval supremacy of this country."

Lord Henry Lennox, at the house dinner of the City Constitutional Club, said:—"To his mind the condition of the Navy was of far greater importance than the date of the enfranchisement of the agricultural labourer; inasmuch as the existence of this country as a nation depended upon the Navy, the efficiency of which did not constitute a party question. It was monstrous that they should have been told officially at a recent banquet that they had the most perfect Navy in the world, and he hoped that an opportunity would be afforded in Parliament for discussing the whole question, when he would once more demonstrate the utter insufficiency of the Navy and the absolute necessity of adding to its strength." He proceeded to point out the rapid advances which were being made in the Navies of France, Italy, Germany, and especially of Russia, and said that he was thankful to know that Lord Salisbury and Sir S. Northcote looked upon the condition of our Navy as a burning question. While he approved of the suggested Royal Commission on the subject, he would give it the warmest opposition if its object was merely to inquire, because the real condition of the Navy was notorious not only to ourselves but to the whole of Europe. If they desired to maintain our naval supremacy, the Government must give immediate attention to the warnings they had received on all hands.

Sir Edward Watkin, M.P., at the annual mayoral dinner at Hythe, said that he advocated an appeal to the country, a continuançe of the custom of preparing merchant vessels for use as cruisers, and the building of war-ships in private yards.

Orders have been received at Chatham directing the enlistment of 1,000 recruits at Birmingham, Manchester, and other large manufacturing towns.

The Court Circular says:—"The Queen received on Monday with much regret the news of the death of Capt. Frank Thomson, who had commanded her Majesty's yacht for seven years, and for whom the Queen had a sincere regard."

At Hankow the Linnet is the sole defence of foreigners. The Consuls on the Yang-tze-Kiang intend, if danger arise, to defend the hulks, abandoning the stations.

Messrs. Castle, the Government contractors, are to break up the Doris, Lavinia, Dauntless, Sirius, and Dublin.

The members of the Royal Naval Club of 1765 dined at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday evening; Rear-Admiral Curme in the chair. Present:—Admirals Sir L. T. Jones and Sir E. Ommanney; Rear-Admirals Chapman and Watson; Capts. A. Fitzgeorge, Bateman, Nelson, Hon. E. Dawson, Moore, Pitman, Johnstone, Spratt, Hornby, and H. Crozier; Coms. M'Kechnie, Jephson, Orme, Webb, Hoare, Darwall, Martin, and Brodie.

"Common-Sense" asks as to the professional requirements of brigade-surgeons who are to be exposed to new examinations:—"Has not their proficiency been tested to the full during the campaigns we have been engaged in these last ten years? Such men as Surg.-Gen. Munro, principal medical officer of the Umbeyla Campaign; Sir A. Home, Ashantee; Mackinnon, Coomassie; Woolfryes, Cape War; Alexander Smith, Afghan Campaign; Holloway, Cape War; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Hendley, West Afghan Force; Hassard, Cabul Force; O'Nial, Candahar Force; Sir J. Hanbury, Afghan Campaign and Egyptian; Brigade-Surg. Moore, Joaki Campaign, and Brigade-Surg. McDowell, Teb and Tamai Force,—all these officers were very successful; they were mentioned as 'distinguished' in despatches, and added credit to our service."

Two hundred tons of torpedoes have been despatched from Woolwich Arsenal for shipment on board the steamship Ajax for Hong Kong. They are being sent out for the protection of the British harbours and coaling stations in Chinese waters.

The Poonah will carry out the coasting services of the Assistance during the absence of the troopship at the Isle of Skye.

The Channel Squadron is expected to return to England at the beginning of next month, when the Duke of Edinburgh will haul down his flag, and it is expected that the crew of the Minotaur will be transferred to the Hercules.

Rear-Admiral Salmon was at Simon's Town, with the Boadicea, on Wednesday last.

A correspondent of a contemporary writes:—"Considerable satisfaction exists among two classes of Warrant Officers at an alteration which the Admiralty are said to have in contemplation, viz., the assimilation of the positions of boatswains and gunners. Hitherto, when there was a gunner's vacancy, a gunner must fill it; the same in the case of a boatswain. The Admiralty, it is understood, are considering whether they cannot utilise officers of either branch for either position; and, as it is known that the capacity exists for either work, the Warrant Officers are highly satisfied with the turn things have taken."

The German corvettes Bismarck, Gneisneau, Olga, and Ariadne, accompanied by a tender, arrived at Madeira on Wednesday.

STIMULANTS and insufficient amount of exercise frequently derange the liver. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT.—"All our customers for ENO'S FRUIT SALT would not be without it upon any consideration, they having received so much benefit from it.—WOOD BROTHERS, Chemists, Jersey, 1878." Reviews.

The Egyptian Difficulty, and the First Step Out of It (we venture to add "Into the Fire"), is the title of an anonymous pamphlet, price 6d., published by Messrs. King's Parliamentary Agency, which may be briefly but truly described as the work of an adroit partisan of Prince Halim, the youngest surviving son of Mehemet Ali. A partisan is not necessarily unfair, or unprincipled, or bribed. He may be a partisan from conviction, or he may be one in the sense a barrister is when he advocates the cause of a client for his honorarium. We do not know anything of author of this brief or case stated. He argues that the present Khedive should be shunted, and replaced by someone who is not incapable, obnoxious, distrusted by Turkey, nor under the ban of the national religion; that the firmans of 1866 and 1873 should be cancelled; and that Prince Halim should be placed on the Throne at Cairo. Ismail was a hard nut for him to crack, and he has not done it; but he assumes two hypotheses as facts,—that Ismail's restoration would be unpopular, and that the Sultan would not agree to it. Q. E. D.

Cassell's Illustrated Almanack for 1885 is unique. When the reader feels wearied by laughter at its funny stories and striking engravings, he or she may apply a remedy by studying what may be called the statistical part of the almanack, and thus acquiring sound information. This remarkable article is to be had for sixpence, frontispiece and all.

The Mistletoe Bough.—Miss Braddon is always thoughtful for young children, and young children as well as old can thoroughly appreciate her kindness. They have heard a rumour of what is to be expected for Christmas, 1885, and are busy already in forming notions as to whether they would like best to have Miss Braddon's bunch of stories or the wonderful plum-pudding which is to surpass in flavour and in almonds all its predecessors. The Mistletoe Bough contains twelve tales, and of these nearly all are illustrated with whole-page engravings. It is not to be supposed from these observations that the Mistletoe Bough treats only of tales suited for children. On the contrary, its contents are full of matter which cannot fail to interest the old as well as the young.

The November number of Colburn exhausts three of its best contributions, namely, "The Present Position of Tactics in England," written by Col. W. W. Knollys; "Colville of the Guards," by James Grant; and "The Journal of a Private Soldier during the Zulu War." The other articles serve to make up a very good number.

There is not much to attract notice to the Army and Navy Magazine for November. "A Few Notes on the Italian Army," by Major M. J. King-Harman, and "Behind the Scenes," are quite readable.

The October number of the Shipwrecked Mariner most certainly deserves attention. The letterpress is good, and the illustrations exceptionally so.

Irrespectively of its sensational frontispiece, the November number of the Atlantic Ocean should not be neglected. For instance, take "The Traveller's Tale of the Coral Fishers," by Edward Graham,—a pretty love-story.

Obituary.

Lieut.-Gen. W. F. Brett, major-gen. on the Retired List, died at Colchester on the 16th inst., aged 63 years. Gen. Brett commanded the 54th Regt. during the burning of the troopship Sarah Sands at sea on Nov. 11, 1857 (mentioned in a general order, brevet of lieut.-col., and presented with silver medal of Royal Humane Society, and vote of thanks); served in the Mutiny Campaign of 1857-58 (medal). He joined the Army, April 1, 1842; became major-gen., March 1, 1870; and lieut.-gen., Retired List, July 1, 1881.

The Admiralty have chartered the steamer Lydian Monarch to proceed to Egypt.

The obituary list from the November Navy List:—Capt. Foot, Gunner Revington, Lieut. Stamper, R.M.L.I. Removals from the Active List:—Acting Sub-Lieut. Bruce (failed to pass examination); Surg. Boyne, resigned; Assist.-Pymr. Underwood, name removed. Chief warrant and warrant officers pensioned:—Chief Gunner Bechervaise; Gunners Codd, Thorning, O'Neill, and Kirk; Boatswains Selley and Woollacott; Carpenter Maben.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Corpl.-Major Fisher is to succeed Capt. Robertson as Ridingmaster when the latter retires shortly.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Head-quarters and the service troops are en route from Bombay to Muttra, where they take the place of the 13th Hussars. The establishment of captains has been reduced from five to four, on the departure of the regiment for India. The death has taken place, at Farndon, Newark, Notts, of Capt. H. D. Bellwood Bellwood. The deceased, who was born Sept. 27, 1848, entered the regiment in April, 1869, and retired last month. The remains of the late band-master, Mr. James Brophy, were interred with military honours at Eccles, near Manchester, on the 8th inst., the Duke of Lancaster's Yeomanry furnishing the band, firing-party, &c. Mr. Brophy joined the 2nd Batn. 6th Regiment, on its formation in 1857, and was its bandmaster at Gibraltar, Corfu, and Jamaica, but, owing to ill-health, returned to England in 1867, and was soon afterwards appointed to the 1st Batn. 21st Fusiliers; in consequence of his state of health, he could not proceed with the battalion to India, and at the end of 1868 joined the 101st Fusiliers on the regiment landing from India, where he remained until 1874, when that corps was again sent abroad. Then he was appointed to the 3rd Dragoon Guards, and continued with that regiment until the beginning of 1880, when he left the Army. In addition to his duties as bandmaster of the Duke's Own Yeomanry, he was for four years in charge of the band of the Lancashire A.V., a strong contingent of the latter, under an officer, attending the funeral.

4th Hussars. The adjutancy is vacant by the appointment of Capt. Blacker to the adjutancy of the Nottingham Yeomanry. Capt. Blacker's appointment to the Yeomanry will not give any promotion to the subaltern.

6th Inniskilling Dragoons. Major M'Kean is not to be seconded on appointment to the Staff at the Cape, as he only holds an acting appointment.

10th Hussars. Major Spottiswoode is about to return from India on vacating his appointment as A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Cureton, C.B.

13th Hussars, under command of Col. Sir B. Russell, left Muttra on Saturday for Bombay, where they embarked on Tuesday in Serapis, to join Bechuanaland Expedition. The establishment of captains is to be be increased from four to five, on the departure of the regiment from India. Capt. Braithwaite has been appointed to the adjutancy of the Leicestershire Yeomanry Cavalry, vice Hon. Major Gibsone.

19th Hussars. Major Smith is about to join the Pay Department on probation.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The two batteries ordered for service in South Africa will go out in the Union steamship Trojan. H Baty., 4th Brig. (Major C. H. Atchison), consisting of 5 officers, 161 non-commissioned officers and men, will embark on the 20th inst., at Southampton; and No. 1 Baty., 1st Brig., South Irish Division, from Devonport, will embark on the following day at Plymouth. Each battery will be armed with four Gardner guns and two 16-pounder breech-loading guns, requiring 86 horses for each battery. The artillery force will, on their arrival out, be augmented by C Baty., 1st Brig., Field Artillery, already out at Natal.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Capt. Herepath and Lieut. and Adjt. Gamble have volunteered for the Bechuanaland Expedition, and the services of the latter officer have been accepted.

11th Devonshire Regiment. The Devon County Standard says :—"A handsome memorial brass was affixed on Wednesday to the north wall in the nave of the cathedral at Exeter, bearing the following inscription :—'This tablet is erected by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the 2nd Batn. 11th (North Devon) Regiment, in memory of their comrades who died in the service of their country during the Afghan Campaign, 1880-1881.' Then follow the names of Capt. and Pymr. A. A. D. Weigall, Lieut. W. H. Bishop, 13 non-commissioned officers, three drummers, and 121 privates. The names are flanked on either side by the figure of a mourning soldier, with helmet, and leaning on the butt of his rifle, the muzzle resting on his foot. The inscription is surmounted by the arms of the regiment, and a list of the engagements in which it has taken part, namely, Dettingen, Salamanca, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, Toulouse, Peninsula, and Afghanistan. The tablet measures 4 ft. 5 in. by 6 ft. 6 in., and has been engraved by Messrs. Matthews and Hodgson, 113 Regent Street, London."

18th Royal Irish. The 1st Batn. left Cairo on Wednesday, to join the Nile Expedition.

19th Yorkshire Regiment. There is no foundation, we understand, for the report that Capt. Franklyn is entering the Pay Department.. Major Levin and Lieut. Todd have volunteered for service in Bechuanaland. A telegram, dated Tangur (Nile), Nov. 8, says :—"Two companies of the 38th passed Semneh this morning; all well."

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. A telegram, dated Sarras, Nov. 7, says :—"The second half of the South Staffordshire Regt. left here to-day by river for the front. All the whale boats got off without difficulty except one, which sprang a leak and was obliged to return to be unloaded and caulked."

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). Major Simpson, V.C., qrmr., on the Retired List, died at St. Martin's, near Perth, on the 27th ult., of paralysis, aged 59. Major Simpson served in the Crimean campaign of 1854-55, including the battles of Alma and Balaclava, expedition to Kertch and Yenikale, siege of Sebastopol, and attacks of June 18 and Sept. 8; was present with the regiment throughout the Indian Mutiny, including the siege and fall of Lucknow, action at Fort Rohya (where he earned the Victoria Cross for rescuing from the hands of the enemy Lieut. Douglas and several men while under a tremendous fire). He obtained his commission as qrmr. Oct. 7, 1859, and retired with the hon. rank of major in 1883. He was awarded the good-service pension of £50 in June last.

47th Loyal North Lancashire. We understand that Lieut.-Col. Cleather preferred to retain his Staff appointment at Aldershot to taking command of his battalion.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Capt. Fenwick, 1st Batn., has applied for an adjutancy of Auxiliary Forces.

79th Cameron Highlanders. Capt. Chapman is a candidate for the Pay Department, and has joined the pay office of the 93rd Highlanders at Portsmouth on probation.

82nd South Lancashire Regiment. A telegram from the Cape, dated Nov. 8, says that "the Zulu Reserve is garrisoned only by the 82nd Regt., with some native police."

91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The regimental paper published at Pietermaritzberg on Oct. 1 gives the following particulars of the movements of the regiment during September :—"On Sept. 4, the head-quarters, under Lieut.-Col. Robley, with Major Mills and Lieut. Henderson, left Etshowe and marched to Entumeni. Capt. Fowler was left in command of the remainder at Fort Curtis, together with Lieuts. Collings, Scott, and Richardson, and Lieut. and Adjt. Wilson. The head-quarters encamped near Fort Chater that night, and on the next day reached Fort Yolland, Esunglwene Heights, about 10 o'clock and encamped, together with 100 of the Welsh Regt. under Major Anley, close to our Mounted Infantry—when Col. Robley assumed command of the troops there, consisting of the original garrison and two squadrons 6th Dragoons, the Mounted Company of the Welsh, and two Gatling guns, Royal Artillery—Major Chater acting as Staff Officer. The same day a sudden order caused the return of one squadron Dragoons and the Mounted Welsh Company to Etshowe, and the anticipated forward movement was postponed. On the 12th, however, the Entumeni detachment, under Lieut.-Col. Forbes-Robertson, with Capt. Macdonald, Lieuts. Fraser and Robinson, marched in, and the next day the whole force, with the exception of the Welsh detachment, moved forward at an early hour, and the battalion was thus again almost united for the first time for some months. The officers were as follows :—Lieut.-Cols. Robley and Forbes-Robertson, Majors Mills and Chater, Capts. MacDonald, Cookson, and Middlemass, Lieuts. Fraser, Richardson, Macbean, Robinson, Henderson, and Vallancey, the latter acting as adjt. After a march of about five miles, we reached 'Mkondo, the spot where Mr. Osborne had been attacked by the Usutus in May. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Leicester Smyth and staff arrived in the afternoon, accompanied by Col. Curtis, who assumed command of the column. The battalion remained here for some days. On the 18th, the camp began to break up, and the whole force were ordered back to Etshowe and its out-stations. Several changes were, however, made of companies and detachments. Major Mills, with Lieuts. Fraser, Macbean, and Henderson, proceeded to Fort Yolland, and Capt. MacDonald, with Lieuts. Robinson and McKie, to Fort Chater. On the next day, the 19th, 'Mkondo was again deserted, the last to leave being the head-quarters of the battalion, who paraded at daybreak, reached Esunglwene to breakfast, and then marched to Entumeni, where they encamped. Next day, after an early start, they reached Fort Curtis, Etshowe, about noon. About a mile from Etshowe the regiment was met by the bands of the Inniskilling Dragoons and the 82nd, who played us in past the Head-quarter camp, the General coming out to have a look at us after our few months' hard and constant work. On Monday, the 22nd, the battalion formed up at 3 p.m. for inspection by Lieut.-Gen. Sir L. Smyth, but before the time laid down, the rain, which had been threatening for some time, came down in such torrents that the parade was dismissed. The General afterwards inspected the books, and the same day issued the following most gratifying order :—'Etshowe, Sept. 22, 1884.—It is my duty, and with such old friends and acquaintances it is a double pleasure, to express my sense of the excellent behaviour of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders generally, and very particularly during the hard work and hard times passed at Fort Yolland and 'Mkondo. I hope I may be able soon to concentrate the battalion and give it a little rest, but things in the country are not settled, and that is all I can say.'"

97th Royal West Kent Regiment. The following officers have volunteered for service in Bechuanaland :—Capts. Fanshawe and Harrison; Lieuts. Maunsell, Williams, and Campbell. The Queen's Own Gazette, the regimental paper, says :—"A very handsome brass tablet has lately been erected in All Saints' Church, Maidstone, to the memory of Surg.-Major Porter, late 97th Regt. The brass tablet is mounted on a grey marble slab. On the top is the old regimental crest and number in Roman characters, surrounded by the regimental motto, 'Quo fas et gloria ducunt,' with the crown above. The crest is light blue, the colour of the old facings of the regiment. The tablet bears the following inscription :—'Sacred to the memory of Surg.-Major Joshua Henry Porter, who served in the 97th Regt. for nearly 18 years as assistant-surgeon and surgeon, including the Crimean Campaign and Indian Mutiny, and who died at Sherpur, Afghanistan, while principal medical officer of the Cabul Field Force, on Jan. 9, 1880. This tablet is erected by the officers of the regiment (past and present) who served with him, as a token of their esteem and regard for a true friend and comrade.' Surg.-Major Porter served with the 97th Regt. in the Crimea, at the siege of Sebastopol, from Nov. 20, 1854 (medal with clasp, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). Served in Bengal in suppressing the Mutiny in 1857-8; with the Jounpore Field Force in the actions of Nusrutpore, Chanda, Ummeerpore, and Sultanpore; afterwards at the siege and capture of Lucknow, and storming of the Kaiser Bagh. Served in the operations in Bundelkund in 1859, and surprise and night attack at the Bala Nuddy (medal with clasp). Served with the British Ambulance during part of the Franco-German War in 1870; was at the siege of Paris, and has received the German steel war medal. The tablet was supplied by Messrs. Hart, Son, Peard, and Co., Regent Street."

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. A telegram from India announces the death at Quetta of Capt. G. Allen, son of Mr. T. Allen, of Connaught Square and Freestone, Pembrokeshire, in his 34th year. He entered the Army Nov., 1870, and for some time acted as fort-adjutant at Trinidad.

101st Royal Munster Fusiliers. Capt. England has been selected for the adjutancy of the 3rd Batn. Manchester Regt., vice Brevet Lieut.-Col. Jackson, who retires.

108th Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers. Capt. Swaine has taken up his duties as brigade-major of the troops in Cyprus from the 4th ult.

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. L. Kidd died at Hamilton, Bermuda, on the 31st ult., aged 55 years. The deceased entered the Army, May 26, 1854; became surg., Feb. 13, 1866; surg.-major, March 1, 1873; brig.-surg., Nov. 27, 1879; and deputy-surg.-gen., April 20, 1883. He was in medical charge of the troops on board the Charlotte, wrecked with much loss of life in Algoa Bay on Sept. 20, 1854; also in the Eastern Monarch, destroyed by fire at Spithead on June 3, 1859; and was specially mentioned in general orders for his conduct on the occasion of the loss of each of these vessels; served with the 27th Regt. on the Peshawur frontier in 1857-58 (medal).

Pay Department. During October the following changes of station, promotions, appointments, and retirements have taken place in the Army Pay Department :—Changes of station—Staff Pymrs. and Majors Currie, from 12th Regtl. District, Bury St. Edmunds, about to retire; Forster, from 87th Regt., to Bury St. Edmunds; McNair, from 72nd Regtl. District, Fort George, to Unattached List; Mortimer, from District Office, Dover, to Fort George, Inverness; Pymrs. and Majors Simpson, from 1st Batn. 4th Regt., to District Office, Dover; Ballard, from Gibraltar, to Unattached List; Stokes, to 66th Regt.; Pymrs. and Capts. Haynes, 2nd Dragoons, to 103rd Regt.; Cooper, to Unattached List; Gilbert, to 21st Hussars; Drury, to 1st Royals; Parkinson, from District Office, Edinburgh, to 1st Batn. 17th Regt.; Powell, to 2nd Batn. 24th Regt.; Thackwell, to 14th Hussars; Meredith, to 89th Regt.; Smythe, to District Office, Woolwich; Moyers, to 28th Regt.; Tunnard, to 81st Regt.; Irwin, to 65th Regt.; and St. George, to 64th Regt. Promotions—Staff Pymr. and Major Rippon to be Chief Pymr. and Lieut.-Col.; Pymr. and Major Whiteford to be Staff Pymr. (both dated Sept. 23); and Pymr. and Capt. Dowdall to have the hon. rank of Major (Oct. 1). Appointments—Capt. Moyers, Gillon, Meredith, Rivett-Carnac, Irwin, Ashburner, and Couran. Retirement on a gratuity—Pymr. and Major Willoughby.

AN INKERMAN REMINISCENCE.

Capt. T. Mitchell, Retired Qrmr., late Inniskilling Dragoons, writes :—"As you do not mention my name among the survivors of 'Inkerman,' allow me to say why I cannot well forget it, as it was at Inkerman that I gained most of my honours, among which the distinguished conduct medal and insignia of Knight of Legion of Honour. I then belonged to a field battery R.A., attached to 1st Division, commanded by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. We commenced the action before daylight, and while the battle raged in front kept up a continuous fire until our ammunition was exhausted. No supply coming up, we were ordered to retire to replenish, and found some of our ammunition waggons disabled. We filled the gun-limber boxes, and were immediately ordered to the right of our position to meet a new force of the enemy coming up. No infantry coming with us, we were ordered to retire again before reaching a point to come into action. Marching to this position in column of route, I was the leading gun. When we wheeled about, my horses refused to move, being fagged, I suppose. Being in a fix, and a new army coming against us, I sent on my detachment with the rest of the battery, and remained with the drivers (Smith and Caldwell), who never dismounted, in charge of my gun. During this time a portion of Dannenberg's army passed me quite close, while I was leaning on the wheel of the gun helpless. Why they did not take me, remains to me a mystery. When we lost sight of them in the fog and battle-smoke, we at length got the horses to move, and took a sloping ground to the left to accelerate their movement. Soon we met and passed Bosquet's Corps, and I soon afterwards rejoined my battery, and was hotly engaged during the terrific cannonade on the retreat of the Russians. During this period a Staff officer came up to me to ask what range I was firing at. I told him. He then said I was to continue at same, as the General said I was making excellent practice. At the end of the battle, towards 3 p.m., we got biscuit, and rum,—the first meal on that memorable day. I was personally thanked next morning by my commanding officer. I may say, here, that I have for some years been noted at the Horse Guards for the good-service pension, and that I received my first commission, after being only a few months a serjeant, while serving in the Crimea."

HOGE'S HOREHOUND HONEY.—What is known as the "Bee Belt" of Southern California is one continuous bed of honey-bloom, one sweet bee-garden throughout its entire length; but there is one part of it which the plough has not yet invaded, that is the region where the Horehound plant flourishes in one glorious blaze of purple and gold. The tropical luxuriance of these plants is so profuse that they brush against the feet at every step, and close over them as if you were wading in liquid gold. The air is sweet with its fragrance, and tuneful with the humming wings of the bees gathering this precious panacea: this honey-full horehound is a great favourite with the bees, and is one perpetual feast for them. They revel in its bloom long after the flowers of other countries have withered and gone to seed. A single plant will at times be visited by a whole hive of bees at once; the grand hum of such a multitude of wings impresses the listener with the fact that the winning of more than ordinary honey is going on. The product of a dozen or two of these plants is sufficient for the wants of a whole hive. In this perfect paradise for bees the petals of the continuous sheet of blooms drink in the vital sunbeams, and the bees hug this favourite flower with profound cordiality, and push their blunt polleny faces against them, like babies on their mother's bosom; and fondly, too, with eternal love, does Mother Nature clasp her small bee babies and suckle them, multitudes at once, on her warm Californian breast. The Horehound Honey so gathered by these little almoners of Nature is put up in bottles, and retailed by all Chemists, &c., at 1s 1½d each. W. L. Bright, Esq., son of the Right Hon. John Bright, M.P., says :—"Hoge's Horehound Honey cured his father of a bad cough."

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1884.

IF we are not much mistaken, the Indian fakir whom Mr. Cameron, of the Standard, saw at Dal on Thursday, is the very man we encountered several years ago at Ramleh, where he was wandering in search, he said, of some charitable gentleman; for he then told the same story to us that Mr. Cameron telegraphs to London, minus, of course, all that refers to Mahdi and Mudir, who were then lying perdus in the womb of time. He informed the Indian officer who was with us that there was intense dislike of the then Khedive, and of the French and English, and of all feringhees in Egypt, Tripoli, and Tunis, which he had visited; and his object was evidently to impress us with the certainty and power of a great Mahometan uprising in India, Arabia, and Africa, against all Christians and their allies. My friend thought he might be an agent of the Senoussi Brotherhood. Mr. Cameron is a hard-headed, sagacious Scotchman, but he can have no means of testing the truth of the man's stories, which are evidently intended to inspire distrust and alarm. It is very certain he can be no friend of ours, and his tale, that he, being bound to Mecca, was endeavouring to make his way to Suakim, suggests the question—"What brought him to the Soudan, and where was he coming from when he fell in with Haddai and Sheik Salah?" Probably it would be well if he were brought face to face with the Mudir of Dongola, who is credited with the possession of sagacity, and who can probe the case more easily than we. He seems to contradict himself. First, he states that the Kababish Arabs are on the war-path, but that they will not attack the Mahdi's forces on their way to Dongola. Next, he says that if the Mahdi advances, the Kababish, in spite of their neutrality, will join him, with the great gathering of horsemen and camel-men, under Sheik Salah. Meantime, the Mudir of Dongola the same day telegraphs to the Khedive that one of the Mahdi's generals is marching on Dongola, and that another is leading a force against the Kababish. The report that the Mahdi is at Margatt, in the Wady el Shamba, north-west of Khartoum—"a natural position for a good general to occupy to meet a force coming across the Desert for the relief of Khartoum"—acquires consistency. Should these informations be correct, the notion that there would be no fighting on the way to Khartoum must be dismissed, and the necessity for a concentration of the relieving force and for great caution and vigilance all along the line becomes imperative. In other words, difficulties increase as we make our way southwards towards the objective point. Letters from Lord Wolseley and the officers of the force are written in the most cheerful, confident tone,—the spirit becoming a skilful General and stout soldiers; and any apprehension respecting the issue of an encounter between the British troops and the Mahdi's rabble must be dismissed as utterly unjustifiable; but there can be no hesitation in admitting that the Expedition will be exposed to serious trials, and that the water-picnic is likely to prove anything but a pleasure-excursion, pure and simple.

The recent decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon restraining Miss Devey from publishing certain letters addressed to Lady Lytton, has the sanction of common-sense, and the approval of all men of honour. We had occasion recently to state that letters from Lord Wolseley and Admiral Hornby, which had been published by the person to whom they were addressed, were not intended for publication by the writers. The law with regard to letters is clear. The recipient of a letter is owner of it only for the purpose for which it was sent to him, and the right to publish it for any purpose remains the personal property of the writer. There is only one exception to the legal dictum that a letter cannot be published without the consent of the writer or of his representative, and that is in a case where the course of justice would be barred by the rule. "The publication of letters has lately," says the Observer, "been pushed to an extent which has given a new terror to social life. Letters more than anything else lend themselves to unscrupulous literary uses, and it is well that the world should be reminded that the consent of the sender as well as of the receiver is needed for their publication."

A somewhat curious state of discipline exists amongst some of the men of a certain regiment now quartered in the Emerald Isle. It is noticed that they are rapidly acquiring the peculiar habits of the "Corner-boys," and have already taken to "booing" their superiors, both commissioned and non-commissioned. It must be acknowledged that the culprits are young, and, therefore, scarcely initiated in the customs of the service; but they have more than once indulged in frivolities which a few years back would have resulted in most serious consequences.

The appointment of Military Secretary to General Sir D. Stewart, Commander-in-Chief in India, has become vacant, Colonel E. F. Chapman, R.A., having relinquished that position owing to ill-health.

A number of rifles to which a "thumb-trigger" has been attached are about to be issued to various Infantry battalions for experimental purposes. Great advantages are claimed for this mode of discharging. It is said that, in the hands of men who have been trained to their use, much better target practice can be made with these rifles than with those discharged by the pull of the forefinger.

Captain A. Davidson, 60th Rifles, Assistant-Instructor of Army Signalling, has been ordered to embark for South Africa, for special duty.

General England, R.A., who died on the 6th inst., was no doubt the "Doyen" of the Army, inasmuch as his first commission was dated May, 1805. The three oldest officers now living are:—Lieutenant Richard Armstrong, an ensign of May 10, 1807; Lieutenant F. Bayly, half-pay, R.A., 2nd Lieutenant, R.A., June 5, 1809; and Lieutenant John Armstrong, late 40th Foot, who entered the service October 19, 1809. These three veterans may easily have known and spoken to officers who were at Fontenoy, Dettingen, and Culloden, for General Craig, late Colonel of the 13th Light Dragoons, and who joined the Coldstreams in April, 1742, did not die until 1811, when the above-named officers had been respectively two and four years in the service. We have thus still among us a link which stretches back 142 years.

The Aldershot "Permanent Committee on Infantry Dress and Equipment" has again been reconstructed, and is now composed of the following officers:—Colonel Utterson, 17th Regiment; Colonel Twentyman, 4th Regiment; Lieutenant-Colonel Slade, Rifle Brigade; and Lieutenant-Colonel Helsham Jones, R.E. The latter officer is now the only original member serving on the Committee. Since Colonel Harrison proceeded to Egypt, but little progress has been made. On Tuesday, the new members made a preliminary inspection of the latest pattern of the modified valise equipment of 1884.

The officers commanding infantry battalions to which the now very old khaki clothing was issued have requested that the next issue of clothing to their men may be of the old pattern and colour, as the grey clothing is much disliked by the men, and is in every respect inferior to the old. This unfortunate convict suit has had a very hard time of it since the Adjutant-General to the Forces left Pall Mall for the Soudan to carry out his own instructions.

There are absolutely 42 officers required to fill up the existing vacancies in the establishment of the Army Pay Department; for, in addition to nine district offices of various kinds, in which retired officers of the Department are temporarily employed, there are three cavalry and 30 infantry regiments without paymasters, as follows:—1st Dragoons, 2nd Dragoons, 4th Hussars, 2nd Battalion Royals, 1st Battalion Queen's, 1st Battalion 3rd, 1st Battalion 4th, 1st Battalion 5th, 1st and 2nd Battalions 10th, 2nd Battalion 12th, 1st Battalion 13th, 1st Battalion 14th, 2nd Battalion 19th, 1st Battalion 20th, 1st Battalions 26th, 38th, 39th, 44th, 55th, 57th, and 58th; 2nd Battalions 60th, 68th, 72nd, 73rd, 87th, 101st, 105th, 108th, and 109th Regiments, and 2nd and 3rd Battalions of the Rifle Brigade.

In a recent Divisional Orders at Aldershot "apportionment of barrack damages," a sum of 1½d. is charged against the 5th Dragoon Guards for damages to the Cambridge Hospital. How the 5th Dragoon Guards could have done three-halfpennyworth of damage to the Cambridge Hospital at Aldershot, considering that the regiment is now lying at Manchester, and has not been at the Camp since the Cambridge Hospital was built, is inexplicable. The R. E. D. is, however, infallible in these matters, so the 5th Dragoon Guards had better stump-up at once, and ask no questions.

One advantage of the Territorial names,—the only one! It will puzzle the enemy horribly. The France Militaire, in speaking of the regiments in Egypt, mentions "Dicke of Connaught's Light Infantry." It also calls Buller "Bubler." Now, it is considered very advantageous to conceal the names of corps, &c., and the Territorial regiments will in that way carry confusion into the ranks of the European enemy.

With this month's General Orders is issued the Annual Return showing the state of education in the Army. This year we have included the statistics of the whole Army at home and abroad; whereas, hitherto, the returns have, we believe, given information concerning the Home Army only. The total strength of the Army on January 1, 1884, is given in the Return at 166,338 men, of whom a total of 112,155 are certificated, leaving a per-centage of 32·58 remaining uncertificated. This is a very marked improvement on last year, when the per-centage of uncertificated was as high as 42·18. The number of certificates obtained in 1883, to which year the present Return refers, was 31,185, an increase of about 2,000 on the number which would have been expected of the whole Army, judging by the 15,311 awarded in 1882 to the 87,297 men then serving at home. This improvement in the education of the soldier is highly satisfactory; but, without any disparagement to the hard-working Army Schoolmaster, we suspect the result is due more to the Education Act and its effect on the raw material prior to enlistment, rather than to any increase in the popularity of the Army School among the men. Be this as it may, the result remains the same, and points, let us hope, to the near approach of a time when the necessity for an Army School will have ceased to exist, and Army Schoolmasters will be retired on the terms which apply in the case of abolition of office.

The letter on "The State of the Army," signed "C. W. White," in the Globe of November 13, represents the views of a Militia officer who has very earnestly and conscientiously studied the subject; but it would seem as if warnings based on facts, when they are addressed to placemen and politicians, fall on deaf ears. It is a pity that the names of the officers, the extracts from whose letters Captain White quotes, cannot be published; but there are in the House of Commons officers whose actual experience of the quality and condition of the home battalions would entitle them to speak without any "fear of the consequences" before their eyes; and if their views coincide with those of the correspondent of the Globe, it is to be regretted that they do not challenge the rosy rhetoric and complacent eulogies of the official organs of the War Office anent the first line of the Army.

Dongola is becoming quite "a place." The field-hospital which Surgeon-Major Ferguson and the doctors have run up has been visited and praised by Lord Wolseley. There and at Wady Halfa there is a considerable amount of cases, mostly of a mild type.

The Secretary of State for War has ordered the immediate withdrawal of the Metropolitan police who are stationed at the various garrison towns for the purpose of assisting in carrying out the provisions of the Contagious Acts. Although these Acts have been inoperative for many months, Metropolitan policemen have remained, up to the present time, at all the principal military stations. They will now, however, return at once to head-quarters. Whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the wisdom of recent legislation in this direction, military hospital statistics show that the suppression of these Acts has been followed by an alarming increase of disease of the most malignant type, and which is still on the increase. More than 50 per cent. of sick in the military hospitals at home are now suffering from disease of a strictly preventable nature.

Though an attempt may be made, for economical motives, to get rid of the Chaplain-General, the abolition of the office will, we believe, be strongly opposed in certain high and most influential quarters.

Among the many aggravations of the short commons of news from Egypt to which the British public have been subjected lately, first and foremost is the intolerable vagueness arising from the absence or uncertainty of dates. Sometimes there may be a reason for the want of precision. There may be ignorance of the Arab computation and calendar—indifference to it—and there may be the native haziness which pervades Oriental news, and the insouciance which takes no note of time; but when Baron Reuter's correspondent at Dongola tells us of "an Arab merchant who arrived here [when?] from Khartoum," does not deign to tell us when the man left Khartoum, he sorely tries one's patience; nor does he appease one's desire to shake him into accuracy to read that "he affirms he saw Colonel Stewart, &c., embark at Khartoum for Berber 45 days ago." What does "ago" mean in this connection? Then, again, telegraphing the escape of two survivors of Hicks's army from El Obeid and their arrival at Dongola, he does not vouchsafe a word as to the date of their leaving the Mahdi's capital, or the route they took from it to Dongola. The same criticism may be applied to the telegrams which have been vexing us for some time past.

Great regret is expressed at Aldershot at the departure of Lieutenant-Colonel Molyneux, the popular Brigade-Major of the 3rd Brigade, though everybody is delighted at the officer's good-fortune in again being selected for active service. Colonel Molyneux was the Duke of Connaught's right-hand man during his Royal Highness's service in command of a Brigade, and it is generally admitted that an abler, more painstaking, and more kind Staff officer does not exist.

The Intelligence Department has compiled a work giving particulars of all the minor expeditions in which British troops were engaged between 1746 and 1814, which will shortly be published.

The following General Order has been issued:—"The Staff College is open to officers of all arms of the service, and may consist of 48 students, admission to the College being determined by a competitive examination. Only one officer from a Line battalion of Infantry or regiment of Cavalry, and 12 officers from the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers can belong to the College at one time; but an exception may be made when an officer has been unable to complete the course within the prescribed period, and, so far as the exigencies of the service shall permit, there will be no limit to the numbers allowed to compete for admission. Twenty-four vacancies are offered for competition annually, which will be filled as follows:—Three by officers of the Royal Artillery, two by officers of the Royal Engineers—with an additional vacancy per annum for each corps alternately, provided they are among the 24 candidates on the list—and 18 by officers of the remaining arms of the service. From the year 1885 inclusive no officer will be permitted to compete for admission to the Staff College whose age exceeds 37 at the date fixed for examination."

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 11, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of June 26, 1867, Feb. 22, 1870, and May 18, 1870, Staff Com. J. H. Tully has been placed on the Retired List, with permission to assume the rank and title of Retired Com. (Nov. 8); Sub-Lieut. H. Grant-Dalton has been promoted to the rank of Lieut. in her Majesty's Fleet (June 21); Engineer W. Siddorn has been promoted to the rank of Chief Engineer in her Majesty's Fleet (Oct. 24).

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 12, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 30, 1877, Engineer J. T. Dominy has been placed on the Retired List of his rank (Nov. 7).

APPOINTMENTS.

Rear-Admiral—George Tryon, C.B., to be Commander-in-Chief on the Australian station, vice Comdre. Erskine.

Commanders—Pearson C. Johnstone, to the Hercules, for the Coastguard at Plymouth; Gerrard R. Bromley, to the Urgent.

Staff Commanders—John B. Palmer, to the Rodney; Jesse Dixon, to the Penelope.

Lieutenants—William H. Eyre and Gerald S. Hawker, to the Audacious, additional; Norman B. Youel, to the Rifleman; Hubert Grant-Dalton, to the Merlin, for navigating duties; Edward H. Bayly, to the St. Vincent, additional, for command of the Martin; P. C. Underwood, to the Ganges, additional, for command of the Sealark.

Sub-Lieutenants—Torquill Macleod, to the Minotaur; Sydney G. Maxwell, to the Banterer; Henry E. F. Worthington and Henry B. T. Somerville, to the Audacious, additional.

Chief Engineer—William Siddorn, to the Rifleman.

Engineers—James J. Walker, to the Cherub; John Fielder, to the Victor Emanuel.

Assistant-Engineers—Warwick Monkhouse, to the Cleopatra; Frederick Jarvis, to the Audacious.

Gunners—Jeremiah Neil, to the Black Prince; Louis Barber, to the Cambridge, for the Sabrina; Richard J. Outfin, to the Racer; Harry E. Kent, to the Firefly; William T. Ovenden, to the Rifleman.

Boatswains—John Widgery, to the Edinburgh; Richard H. Trigger, to the Agamemnon; Charles Allen, to the Royal Adelaide; Edward Lawler, to the Duke of Wellington.

COASTGUARD.

Chief Boatman—George White, Union Hall, to be chief boatman-in-charge, Ballymoran, vice James Thomas, pensioned.

Agamemnon, Capt. Long, is not expected to be out of the hands of the dockyard authorities until next Wednesday at the earliest, and will probably not leave for her destination until the following Saturday.

Alexandra, Capt. Rawson, arrived at Malta from Alexandria on Thursday with Admiral Lord John Hay on board.

Algerine, Com. Fullerton, was at the port of Maccio (Brazils) on Oct. 29, and arrived at Monte Video Nov. 13.

Assistance, Capt. St. Clair, left Plymouth on Wednesday for Portree, with a detachment of Marines for the Isle of Skye.

Diamond, Capt. Dale. While lying at anchor off New Britain a marine jumped overboard, and a young seaman named William Todd, without thought of the sharks which swarm there or the danger of tackling a madman, jumped after him, and supported him till they were picked up by the boats.

Dreadnought, Capt. Fremantle, anchored at Spithead on Saturday, preparatory to leaving for the Mediterranean, to relieve the Inflexible.

Dryad, Com. Hulton, which was at Tamatave during the hostilities between France and Madagascar, was paid out of commission at Sheerness on Monday, after nearly five years' service on the East Indies station. Her hull is so rotten that she is unfit for further service.

Flamingo, Com. Custance, was paid off at Devonport last Saturday.

Forester, Lieut.-Com. Hodgkinson, tender to the Clyde, left Greenock on Tuesday for Skye, and has since arrived in Portree Bay.

Jumna, Capt. Singleton, arrived at Bombay on Monday.

Kingfisher, Com. Rainier, was commissioned at Sheerness on Tuesday to reinforce the fleet on the East Indies station, the crew of the Dryad being transferred to her.

Orontes, Capt. Andoe, left Gibraltar on Wednesday for the Cape, with the Lothian Regt. on board.

Osprey, Com. Dowding, left Tamatave on Oct. 10 with the British Consul on board, a passenger to the north-west coast.

Polyphemus, Com. Jeffreys, has now completed her long series of torpedo trials in the Solent, and it is said that the difficulties in discharging her torpedoes when she was going over ten knots have been overcome. Measures are being taken to improve the ventilation of her stoke-holes.

Rambler, Com. Vereker, was commissioned at Chatham on Tuesday for surveying service in China.

Serapis, Capt. Douglas, leaves Bombay on the 11th inst., viâ the Cape, for the purpose of landing the 13th Hussars in South Africa, if needed.

Starling, Lieut.-Com. Sanders, left Plymouth on Wednesday to join the fleet at Suakim. She will call at Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria en route.

Tamar, Capt. Warren, sailed last Saturday from Portsmouth with new crews for the Nelson, Undine, and Harrier, which are to be recommissioned on the Australian station for four years. As she is going to call at the Cape to land supernumeraries, she will be away from England about four months.

Temeraire, Capt. Domvile, has left Larnaca, after a stay of ten days, for Candia.

Valiant, Capt. Knowles. Two successful entertainments were given by the minstrel troupe of this ship during her late stay at Rathmullen. The sum of £4 was realised, and handed over to the local sufferers by the loss of the Wasp. The Valiant has now returned to her moorings at Bantry for the winter.

Valorous, Capt. Hare, left for Queenstown with supernumeraries on Thursday.

W. S. Blackman, colour-serjeant of the royal yacht Osborne; John Keohane, leading stoker, of the Indus; Henry George Stone, naval schoolmaster, of the Swiftsure; John William Morgan, naval schoolmaster, of the St. Vincent; William Woods, second-class ship's steward, of the Excellent; James W. Dowty, third-class ship's steward, of the Myrmidon; Alfred Parish, armourer, of the St. Vincent; Robert Strevens, captain's coxswain, of the Terror; John Thomas Peters, sick-berth attendant, of the Castor; James Whittington, carpenters' crew, and Thomas Henry Pate, signalman, of the Northampton; A. J. Hampton, boatman, and John Burke, commissioned boatman, of the Coastguard, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

On Tuesday evening the engineer students gave an agreeable and able dramatic performance at Keyham Dockyard, to which Sir Houston and Lady Stewart were invited with the captains and officers of the ships in port and a large number of friends from the shore. Com. Annesley, of the Indus, undertook the direction, and the entertainment was a great success.

Rear-Admiral Curme struck his flag on board the Indus on Tuesday, and proceeded on leave of absence. Capt. Kelly will perform the duties during the Admiral's absence.

During the absence of Admiral Corbett, Admiralty House will be thoroughly renovated. It was built about sixty years ago for the Duke of Clarence. Capt. Codrington acts as senior officer during Admiral Corbett's absence.

The German Government will present supplementary estimates for £9,000 for a coasting steamer and steam launch for the "Governor of Cameroon."

The Lords of the Admiralty have issued a circular cancelling the "Regulation for preventing Collision at Sea," contained in Article 62 of the Addenda, 1880, and in subsequent Orders in Council and making also certain alterations in the Queen's Regulations, 1879. Article 1,001 now reads that "the captain shall not entrust the charge of a ship under weigh to any officer, whether confirmed or acting, or to any other person, unless he has satisfied himself that such officer or person is acquainted with the regulations to be observed in order to prevent collision at sea; and it further obliges all officers of the executive branch to make themselves thoroughly acquainted therewith. These regulations, after defining which ships are to be considered steamers and which sailing vessels, contain rules concerning lights, sound signals for fog, steering and sailing rules and speed of ships in fog, precautionary measures, and special lights for squadrons and convoys.

SQUADRON NEWS.

China.—The Audacious was at Hong Kong, refitting, on Oct. 1. The Linnet was to leave Hong Kong on Oct. 2, to deliver a letter to the French Admiral and return to Hong Kong. The Vigilant was at Hong Kong on Oct. 1. The Esk was to leave Hong Kong for Swatow on Oct. 2, to relieve the Tweed. The Swift was at Canton on Oct. 1. The Tweed was at Swatow on Sept. 24. The Foxhound was in the Gulf of Tonquin on Sept. 26. The Sapphire was at Amoy on Sept. 29. The Champion was at Pagoda Anchorage, in the Min, on Sept. 28. The Midge was also at Pagoda Anchorage on Sept. 28, but was under orders to relieve the Zephyr off Foochow, and the Zephyr would go to Sharp Peak, and take the place of the Merlin. The Merlin would probably be sent to Amping, in Formosa. The Fly was at Takao, Formosa, on Sept. 20. The Cockchafer was at Shanghai on Sept. 26. The Daring was at Ningpo on Sept. 25. The Albatross was up the Yangtze River, at Hankow, on Sept. 22. The Curacoa was at Chefoo on Sept. 20, as senior officer's ship in the Gulf of Pechili. The Espoir was at Tientsin on Sept. 20, under orders to proceed to Newchwang, and then return to Chefoo or Tientsin. The Pegasus was at Penang on Sept. 15; but on arrival of the Firebrand at Singapore, she was to visit North Borneo and Labuan, returning to Singapore. The Flyish Fish was at Nagasaki on Sept. 13, and was under orders to leave for the Corea on Sept. 17. The Wanderer has been ordered to Hong Kong. The Firebrand is to remain in the Straits of Malacca.

Pacific.—On Oct. 20, the Swiftsure was at Esquimalt and the Satellite also. The Heroine was at Callao as senior officer's ship on Oct. 9. The Sappho was at Coquimbo on Oct. 1, about to visit Caldera and return. The Pelican was at Callao on Oct. 9.

North America and West Indies.—The Amethyst arrived at Bermuda on Oct. 23, and will leave on Nov. 20 for the River Plate. The Fantôme was to be undocked on Oct. 24. The Bullfrog was at Port Royal, Jamaica, awaiting orders, and the Express preparing for sea.

Mediterranean.—On Nov. 4 the Monarch was at Alexandria; the Helicon at Alexandria, under orders to proceed to Malta; the Albacore at Alexandria, ordered to Port Said; the Bittern at Suez, as senior officer's ship; the Falcon en route to Suakim, to relieve the Carysfort; and the Sphinx, Tyne, Humber, Dolphin, Condor, Cygnet, and Coquette, at Suakim. The Carysfort was also at Suakim, ordered to proceed to Alexandria when relieved by the Falcon; the Invincible, Iris, and Cruiser at Malta; the Inflexible at Smyrna, and the Superb also, but expected to leave for Salamis Bay. The Temeraire was at Larnaca, the Cockatrice at Galatz, on the Danube, the Imogene at Constantinople, and the Grappler at Constantinople. The Myrmidon is surveying the southern part of the Red Sea.

NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

In delivering the inaugural address at the University of Glasgow, upon the opening of the winter session of lectures on naval architecture, Professor F. Elgar referred to the fact that no British University had ever before included this subject in its teaching. He pointed out that the demand for a scientific knowledge of naval architecture grew up in the Royal Navy, and that it was not till after the introduction of iron and steam power that it was required for the Mercantile Marine. He said that the failure of the Royal Naval College to attract students was mainly attributable to the fact that the College at Greenwich had been organised for the special purpose of training war-ship designers and calculators for the Admiralty, and was not fully adapted to the requirements of the Mercantile Marine. In the practical work of building a ship the unsuitability of the Admiralty system for teaching to Mercantile students might be seen by the fact that structural steel or iron work, which in merchant steamers with watertight bottoms costs about £5 per ton for labour costs as high as £20 per ton in Admiralty work. This difference in the amounts expended upon the labour of production was due very largely to the slow and costly processes of work which were still adopted in the Royal Navy, but which had long been obsolete in the Mercantile Marine, and supplanted by imposed methods of a simpler character.

At an inquest at Walmer last week on a private in the Royal Marines, named Ault, the jury found that death was caused by suffocation, produced by being "frog-marched," and added a rider condemning the practice.

Mills and Offices.—FORT FRANCIS, RAINY RIVER; and RAT PORTAGE, LAKE of the WOODS, MANITOBA.

Secretary and Treasurer.—Mr. THOMAS H. SHEPPARD, WINNIPEG.

This Company was established in the month of June, 1882, by letters patent, under the "Canada Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1877."

The mill at Fort Francis has already produced this season about 4,600,000 ft. (B.M). The new saw mill completed at Rat Portage, with approved modern machinery, is capable of sawing about 150,000 ft. per day of lumber (B.M.), or 36,000,000 ft. of lumber per year. The mills, during about four months in each year, are worked 22 hours per day.

The operations of the Company have been very extensive and successful; the total amount of logs felled and floated during the past season exceeded 20,000,000 ft.

The Mortgage Deed has been approved by English Counsel on behalf of the Debenture-holders, and it contains very stringent powers and remedies for ensuring the payment of both the principal and interest of the Debentures.

The value of the property comprised in the security may be stated as follows:—

The Real Estate, consisting of Sites of Freehold Land in the City of Winnipeg; 160 acres in the town of Rat Portage; also the Real Estate at Fort Francis and Rainy River; the Water-power Saw-mills at Fort Francis; the Steam Saw-mill at Rat Portage, Railway, Dock, Piers, Buildings, &c., the value of which at cost price is	£34,524
Logs of Timber.—Afloat and in Booms	54,810
The subscribed and unpaid capital is	67,500
Total	£156,834
The above is exclusive of the value of the timber limits of the Company, comprising about 75 square miles, and 25 square miles, or about 64,000 acres	162,000
The value thus deduced of the whole property comprised in the security is therefore	£318,834

The certificate of English counsel as to the correctness of the foregoing statements, also certified copies of the Company's charter, bye-laws, mortgage deed, and forms of the Debenture, may be seen, and a full prospectus and all other desired information may be obtained on application at the offices of Messrs. Chadwicks, Boardman, and Co., 36 Coleman Street, London, E.C., and 64 Cross Street, Manchester.

Forms of application for Debentures can be obtained from the Bankers; or Messrs. Chadwicks, Boardman, and Co. 36 Coleman Street, London, E.C., Nov. 10, 1884.

CORBETT'S WORCESTERSHIRE SALT.

AGENTS: WESTON and WESTALL, LONDON.

The purest and most wholesome Salt for the Table, and all Culinary and Dairy purposes, and the best for the Preservation of Fish, Meat, and Vegetables, or for any other purposes where Salt of the greatest strength, most brilliant whiteness, utmost purity, and most delicate flavour is required.

Has gained Highest Awards wherever Exhibited.

An important condiment of universal consumption like salt ought not to be purchased without thought or care, as too frequently is the case, but should be selected with the circumspection experience shows to be necessary in all articles of diet, or where intrinsic purity and absolute freedom from foreign matters are of essential importance. These conditions are completely fulfilled by CORBETT'S WORCESTERSHIRE SALT, produced not from water more or less impure, which has passed freely through fissures or otherwise to Salt deposits lying comparatively near the surface, and therefore necessarily exposed to risks of organic contamination, but made from natural brine formed in Nature's laboratory, and drawn from the purest and deepest natural brine springs in England, lying in the same district and the same geological formation which yield the famous spring water of Malvern, the purest water known.

To protect consumers, this Salt is packed for the Table, General Household, and Dairy purposes, in Jars, Bottles, Packets, and Calico Bags, from 1lb. to 28lb. each, bearing the name and trade mark of the Proprietor. It is also supplied in squares and other forms for various uses, and for manufacturing purposes.

May be obtained of all Oilmen and Grocers throughout the World.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Counsel for the Delicate.—Those to whom seasons of changeable temperatures are protracted periods of trial should seek the earliest opportunity of removing all obstacles to good health. This cooling Ointment, perseveringly rubbed upon the skin, is the most reliable remedy for overcoming all diseases of the throat and chest. Quinsey, relaxed tonsils, sore-throat, swollen glands, ordinary catarrh, and bronchitis, usually prevailing at this season, may be arrested as soon as discovered, and every symptom banished by Holloway's simple and effective treatment. These Ointment and Pills are highly commended for the facility with which they successfully conquer influenza; they allay in an incredibly short time the distressing fever and teasing cough.

Courses for all Examinations now proceeding.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS.—LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA PREPARING for the MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath, whose pupils for some years past have continuously maintained a steady average of success, second to none. This year fifteen have been sent up, seven of whom have passed; four in March (one taking first place on the list), and three at the recent Examination. Very few pupils are taken, and there are two resident Military Instructors of high qualifications constantly at work, with a third in reserve in case of pressure. Thus very great individual attention is guaranteed, and the system of lecturing classes entirely avoided. Batcombe is a country village, near no town, but affording opportunity for shooting and other healthy amusements in moderation. References are permitted to the Earl of Harewood, Sir John Adye, G.C.B., General Elmhirst, C.B., General Thompson (late 7th Dragoon Guards), Colonel A. H. King, R.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, the Bishop of Bedford, and many others, all parents or near relatives of successful pupils.

TO OFFICERS, ANGLO-INDIANS, and OTHERS.—First-class School, established 15 years, where boys are prepared from an early age for the Army Examinations. Numerous Staff of Experienced Graduates in Honours. System pursued has resulted in 35 successes and no failures. Indian children received. Highest references.—C. V. GODBY, M.A. (Oxon.), Bute House, Petersham, S.W.

CAVENDISH COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

This College has been founded by the County College Association, Limited, under the Presidency of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K.G., in order to enable students at the earliest practicable age and at a moderate cost to take the University Degree, whether in Arts, Law, or Medicine.

Students are admitted at 16, and a Degree may be taken at 19.

The College charges for Lodging and Board (with an extra term in the Long Vacation), including all necessary expenses of tuition for the degree of B.A., are £84 per annum.

For further information apply to the WARDEN, Cavendish College, Cambridge.

CANDIDATES for the ARMY.—TUITION by CORRESPONDENCE in GEOMETRICAL DRAWING, by a successful Teacher and Author.—"A. B.," Stanton House, 1 Belleville Road, Wandsworth Common, London.

SANDHURST and WOOLWICH.—(Candidates for the Final Examinations preferred.)—A FRENCH and ENGLISH UNIVERSITY MAN, late Modern Language Master in Haileybury, Wellington, and Winchester Colleges, prepares Twelve Pupils for the above. Idle or disorderly fellows particularly objected to. Local reference to Colonel H. P. Montgomery, late commanding Rifle Depôt; or to Lieutenant-Colonel C. T. Bunbury, late Rifle Brigade. Names of successful Pupils and other particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL, Wellington House, Winchester.

CONNAUGHT MILITARY COLLEGE,

Principal—SAMUEL H. WINTER.

The Pupils of this Establishment have been uniformly successful. In July, 1882, Mr. F. Close was SECOND on the Woolwich List, being FIRST in Mathematics; in July, 1883, Mr. G. Close was TENTH and Mr. R. F. Edwards TWELFTH, all at their first trial. Mr. Winter has prepared more than 200 Pupils for various Military Examinations.

PRINCESS HELENA COLLEGE, EALING.—President, H.R.H. the PRINCESS CHRISTIAN. Appointment of Wards to be trained as Governesses, November 15, 1884.

Candidates must be orphan daughters of the Clergy, Officers of the Army or Navy, Marines or Civil Service.

Particulars and forms of application may be obtained on application to the HON. SEC., Princess Helena College, 21 St. Margaret's Offices, Victoria Street, Westminster.

ARMY.—LINE and MILITIA.

IMPORTANT to STUDENTS.

Captain DUMARESQ DE CARTERET BISSON, M.A., Author of "Our Schools and Colleges" (graciously recognised by the Queen and H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief), sends, free by post, a selected List of Prospectuses of all the most SUCCESSFUL ARMY TUTORS, and gives his Counsel on Military and Civil-Service Education free of Charge. References kindly permitted to the late Secretary of State for War.—Apply by letter only, No. 69 Berners Street, London, W.

MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

THREE sent up in March, TWO PASSED; Hill, 4th, Cumberland, 20th. Third only just failed. Many former successes. Tuition for all Competitive Examinations.—Captain PINHEY, 16 Nevern Square, Earl's Court, S.W.

OFFICERS READING for PROMOTION.—SPECIAL PERSONAL INSTRUCTION. Number limited to Six. All passed in July.—Captain PINHEY, late R.A., 16 Nevern Square, Earl's Court, S.W.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS.

Lieutenant-Colonel G. M. CARDEW (passed second from Staff College) PREPARES SIX PUPILS for MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION. Also Officers for Promotion, &c.—14 Observatory Avenue, Kensington. In July, five passed out of six; in September, three passed out of four.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS and GENERAL EDUCATION.—AVRANCHES.—A GENTLEMAN, for many years successfully engaged in preparing Candidates for the Military Competitive Examination and Universities, wishes to RECEIVE PUPILS. Great facilities for acquiring the French language. Terms moderate. Highest references to Parents and Guardians of former Pupils, and to Clergymen and Country Gentlemen.—Apply to Captain CHAWNER, Bois-Guerin, Val-St.-Père, Avranches.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS.—Mr. J. WINDER, M.A., Cranworth House, Eastbourne, Sussex, PREPARES SEVEN PUPILS for WOOLWICH and SANDHURST. Special Masters for French, German, and Science. In 1880, of FOUR Candidates for Woolwich, ALL of whom passed, one was 6th and another 29th. In 1883, of THREE Candidates for Sandhurst, TWO were successful.

KING EDWARD VI.'s SCHOOL, BERKHAMSTED, HERTS, 28 miles from Euston.—Twenty-seven School Scholarships. Four Exhibitions from the School. Laboratory, heated Swimming Bath, Fives Courts, &c.—Address, HEAD MASTER.

MILITIA CANDIDATES for the LINE.—TUITION in MILITARY SUBJECTS for the COMPETITIVE ARMY EXAMINATION.

Lieutenant-Colonel FITZROY WILSON, late Rifle Brigade, a Graduate of the Staff College, and afterwards Garrison Instructor of the Eastern District, offers the above. Careful individual attention. A Class now at work for the March Examination. References permitted to Colonel Aylmer, S. Cameron V.C., Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. (Intelligence Branch), War Office; and Colonel C. W. Robinson, Rifle Brigade, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., Aldershot.

For prospectus, containing terms, testimonials, and references, address, East Bergholt, Colchester.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.—MILITIA OFFICERS are prepared in all the subjects for the above Examinations by Lieut.-Colonel N. STEEVENS (late 20th and 88th Regiments and Staff), and Colonel F. J. HUTCHISON (late 64th Regiment, seven years Garrison Instructor at Devonport, and for several months Acting Professor of Fortification at the Staff College).—For further particulars, apply to Lieut.-Colonel STEEVENS, 1 Wolseley Terrace, Cheltenham.

ARMY (PRELIMINARY, FURTHER, and COMPETITIVE) LITERARY EXAMINATIONS.—The Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A. (Cantab.), late Scholar of his College, &c., offers an unusual combination of advantages. A few Pupils only received. All work is done by individual teaching. No lectures to Classes, but a resident Tutor to every three Pupils, and each Tutor first-rate in his own subjects. For fourteen years, up to and including the last Sandhurst Competition, a steady average of successes, second to none, has been maintained. No town is near, but there are plenty of country amusements, and a liberal establishment is kept. The highest references can be given to noblemen, officers high in the service, and other parents of successful Pupils.—Address, Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.—The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, or the Colonies. Sixty Students will be admitted in September, 1885. For competition the Secretary of State will offer Fifteen Appointments in the Indian Public Works Department, and Two in the Indian Telegraph Department.—For particulars, apply to the SECRETARY, at the College.

ARMY and UNIVERSITY EXAMINATIONS.—J. WEST, of Edinburgh University (two First Classes), F.R.Hist.S., F.A.S., and F. G. BRABANT, M.A. Oxford (three First Classes), RECEIVE a LIMITED NUMBER of RESIDENT PUPILS, to whom they offer special individual attention and a pleasant country home. Long and varied experience, especially in Sandhurst Preliminary. Highest references. List and terms on application.—Address, Heathview, Storrington, Sussex.

HINDUSTANI TAUGHT, Cito, Tuto, Jucunde. Officers prepared for Examinations. Correct Idiom guaranteed.—PUNDIT, 7 Beechholme Road, Clapton.

HINDUSTANEE TAUGHT by a RETIRED OFFICER, Bengal Staff Corps. Has passed High Proficiency Examinations in both Hindi and Urdu at Calcutta.—Address, Captain HAYES, Junior Army and Navy Club, St. James's Street, S.W.

NEWTON COLLEGE, S. DEVON.

PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL.—Earl of DEVON.
HEAD MASTER.—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll. Camb. (appointed, 1875.)
TWELVE RESIDENT MASTERS.—First-Class Honour Men are at the Head of each Department.

The New Buildings lately built accommodate 200 boys, to which number from its present limit of 150 it is proposed to increase the School. The advantages offered are—

1. A large staff of Masters, of undoubted calibre and experience, so that the teaching is careful and thorough.
2. Small Classes so that all can be taught properly.
3. Supervision in study to prevent idleness as far as possible.
4. Complete subdivision into Classical and Modern Sides, Non-Latin Divisions, Junior and Preparatory Schools; so that boys can take up any branch of education, scientific or otherwise, and be thoroughly taught in it.
5. Large airy class-rooms where teaching is carried on at the least pressure to master and boy.
6. Excellent situation and playing fields, large swimming-bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, &c., with all kinds of appliances for keeping boys employed and so out of mischief.
7. A system of Scholarships, entrance and others, open to all.
8. A regular succession of annual public Examinations, so that parents can judge for themselves how their sons stand in comparison with those from other schools.
9. Comfortable and well-arranged accommodation, &c., in the houses, &c.
10. Opportunity for that friendly intercourse between Masters and Boys in out-of-door games, which is so conducive to the good tone of a school.
11. The Head Master has had great experience in dealing with delicate boys, and makes special arrangement for those who desire school life and yet require careful watching.
12. Army Candidates trained without the aid of a Crammer, if entered in fair time.
13. The Preparatory School is specially provided for in a separate House, with Fives' Courts of its own, &c.

The School offers SPECIAL TERMS to the Sons of Clergy, Officers, Professional Men, &c., and the fact that Six Entrance Scholarships have been won since 1882 at Winchester and Marlborough bears testimony to its excellence in the Preparatory School, while the List of other Honours is no less satisfactory.

THE MANOR HOUSE, LEE, S.E.

The SPECIAL CLASSES for the MILITIA COMPETITIVE, the STAFF COLLEGE, and PROMOTION EXAMINATIONS commenced October 15, under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel J. L. NEEDHAM, P.S.C., late Professor of Fortification, Tactics, &c., at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and formerly Garrison Instructor. Each Class limited to eight.

From A. H. MACARTNEY, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. SHUBRICK, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

A. J. Windebank, Esq., Chanda House, Fratton Street, Portsmouth, December 22. 1883:—"Watch, chain, and ring to hand. I am very much pleased with their appearance, the watch especially looking a very strong, handsome one, and equal to many I have seen at double the money."

Mr. H. A. Illingworth, 82 Queen Street, Batley, March 7, 1884:—"After four years' trial of one of your 25s. watches, I now desire to express my thanks for the same. During all the time I have had it I have not paid one halfpenny for repairs. It is as good to-day as ever. When I have shown it to my friends, they have valued it at double and frequently at treble the money. To those who wish to possess a cheap, good, everyday watch, I especially recommend the above."

The account in the Standard of yesterday from their correspondent at Dal, on the Nile, is not very encouraging. He says, telegraphing on Nov. 13:—"The Engineers arrived at Dal this morning, having been 12 days on their journey from Sarras. The Dal Cataract was the worst of all that they had to encounter, being altogether 7 miles long. In addition to the regular Cataracts of Semneh, Ambigol, Tangur, Akashah, and Dal, the boats had to surmount 12 other series of rapids not marked in the maps, the aggregrate length of which was 10 miles. Adding 10 miles for the regular Cataracts, we have a total of 20 miles up which the boats had to be hauled with most severe labour. Between Dal and Dongola there are only two Cataracts—at Kaiber and at Hannek. Nevertheless, after the experience of the Engineers, it seems very unlikely that more than 600 boats can reach Dongola before Dec. 15—or Dec. 20 for the full 800 boats. Nor will even this calculation hold, except on the supposition that a continuous stream of 40 boats shall leave Sarras daily from Nov. 10, and pass all points on the river at the same rate. Beyond Dongola, we shall have 600 miles more of river before reaching Khartoum. One long stretch—the 260 miles between Merawi and Berber, in which 11 cataracts are marked—is reported to be as difficult as the Bahr-el-Hajar itself. With an average progress of 10 miles daily, and allowing for no delay at Dongola, it would be Feb. 15 before Khartoum could be relieved. By that time the weather is beginning to get hot, and the north wind will, throughout the period, be diminishing in strength. Evidently, to say the least of it, the whole affair has been cut very fine."

We think so, indeed! Why the Expedition was not formed two months before the time decreed by Government is quite beyond our comprehension or conjecture.

The Royal Marines in Egypt are to be divided into two battalions, each of six companies, with a company of R.M.A. attached to each battalion. One battalion to be under Lieut.-Col. Ozzard, the other under Lieut.-Col. Way.

Messrs. J. L. Thornycroft and Co. have just completed a vessel for the Nile of galvanised Bessemer steel, 56 ft. 8 in. long over all by 7 ft. 7 in. wide. The depth amidships from gunwale to keel is 3 ft. The boiler, of steel, is of the marine locomotive type introduced by Mr. Thornycroft. The results of the official trial last week on the measured mile were:—Maximum draught of water, with 14 people and 3½ cwt. of coal on board, forward, 13½ in.; aft, 15 in. Mean speed on four continuous runs, 18·449 statute miles an hour. Boiler pressure, 134½ lb. a square inch; number of revolutions a minute, 528; indicated horse-power, 120. There were on board Mr. Rendel, Col. Malcolm, and Major Armstrong, R.E., representing the War Office; Mr. Allen, Mr. Thornycroft, Mr. Donaldson, and Mr. Barnaby.

BECHUANALAND.

A telegram from Cape Town to the Times says:—"The news of the intention to employ Imperial troops in Bechuanaland reassures public feeling at Cape Colony, where the proposal to employ irregular forces was regarded as fraught with danger and as calculated to develop a mere war of filibusters, while Imperial troops are not likely to meet with opposition, unless mistakes occur." But it does appear that "irregular forces" are to be employed, and a "filibustering" agency is actually at work in London, as it seems from public advertisements.

A telegram to the Times, dated Durban, Nov. 10, says:—"The Premier of the Cape Colony will leave Kimberley to-day for Bechuanaland, where President Krüger is expected to meet him and co-operate in the settlement of pending questions. A detachment of the Royal Artillery and the 1st Batn. of the Princess Louise's Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders will remain in the Zululand Reserve."

Cols. the Hon. Paul Methuen, Scots Guards, and Carrington, South Wales Borderers. Lieut.-Cols. Gough, 10th Hussars, and the Hon. S. Cotton, Scots Guards. Majors the Hon. M. Stapleton, 20th Hussars; Martin, 21st Hussars; and Knox, Shropshire Regt. Capts. J. H. Poett, Dorset Regt.; M. Q. Jones, Warwick Regt.; J. M. Gawne, Royal Lancaster Regt.; E. C. Mills, West Yorkshire Regt.; [illegible] Davidson, North Lancashire Regt.; J. Babbington, 16th Lancers; F. L. Kempster, Leinster Regt.; and P. C. E. Newbigging, Royal Artillery. Lieuts. the Hon. G. Bingham, Rifle Brigade; G. A. Keef, Royal Scots Fusiliers; W. C. Tonge, Norfolk Regt.; G. P. Bouverie, Coldstream Guards; L. G. Drummond, Scots Guards; F. R. M'Adam, West York Regt.; F. A. Deare, Berkshire Regt.; S. C. Munro, Seaforth Highlanders; F. J. Angell, Royal Irish Fusiliers; E. J. Phipps-Hornby, R.A.; C. E. Inglish, R.A.; [illegible] H. Hibbert, Lancashire Fusiliers; R. N. Gamble, Lincoln Regt.; and J. S. Pelly, Border Regt., are selected for service under Sir C. Warren.

The military command of the Expedition will be entrusted to Col. Methuen, Scots Guards, acting under Sir C. Warren, who has been furnished with full instructions by the Colonial Office. Of the force raised by Col. Methuen, 200 are gentlemen volunteers, who have served in the Militia and have competed for and failed to obtain commissions in the Regular Army. Three hundred others have been selected from the Volunteer Force, and from gentlemen who have unsuccessfully competed for admissions through the Royal Military College at Sandhurst. These are of a very different type of men from those gentlemen volunteers to whom we referred elsewhere, and they will do good service when once in hand.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Col. Sir Charles Warren to the command of the expedition to Bechuanaland, with the rank of major-general. Her Majesty has also approved of the appointments of the following officers on the Staff of Sir Charles Warren, the British Commissioner to Bechuanaland, viz.:—Aides-de-Camp—Capts. Sir Bartle Frere, Rifle Brigade, and Walker, 60th Rifles. Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. on the Staff—Col. Walker, C.B., Scots Guards. Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen.—Col. Allen. Officers in command of the lines of communication—Cols. Molyneux and Duncan.

It is officially notified that the rates of pay for officers about to embark to serve with irregular forces in Bechuanaland will be, per diem, as follows:—Colonels, £1 10s.; majors, £1; captains, 15s.; and subalterns, 11s., with free rations. Each officer will be permitted to take with him a soldier-servant, who must be fit for active service in the field. The officers of the Mounted Rifles will be dressed like the men. They may, if they prefer it, be clothed in a thinner and better material, but the colour must be as nearly as possible the same. The rank of officers serving in this corps will be shown, as in the Navy, by rings of braid, of the same colour as the frock or jacket, round the sleeves,—one for a lieutenant, two for a captain, three for a major, four for a lieutenant-colonel, and five for a colonel. The pattern of the dress to be worn by the men, and the material of which it is made, can be seen at the Clothing Factory, Pimlico.

Orders have been given to raise an irregular force in the Cape Colony for service in Bechuanaland. Any one wishing to join this corps at Cape Town can obtain particulars as to terms of service, &c., from Capt. Harrill, 50 Leicester Square, W.C. The Press Association states that this force will number fully 500 men selected for good shooting and activity in the field. As they will be employed as mounted infantry it is desirable that they should have some knowledge of horse-riding, but it is not necessary that the men should have any previous military training, and civilians will, therefore, be eligible for the service. One-third of the officers will be supplied from the regular service, the remainder being selected from the volunteers themselves by the General officer commanding. It is understood that a free passage will be provided for men volunteering from this country. On arrival at Cape Town each man will be provided with a horse and accoutrements, comprising a rifle, sword, saddle, and uniform. The irregular force will be drilled and instructed in their duties on their way up country. Col. the Hon. Paul Methuen will have command of the battalion.

Sir Charles Warren, the British Commissioner, left Paddington on Thursday evening, to embark for the Cape. A large number of officers were present to see the General off, and three hearty cheers were raised as Sir Charles and his staff entered the saloon carriage.

THE SOUDAN CAMPAIGN.

The following General Order has been issued:—His Highness the Khedive of Egypt having signified his desire to confer a bronze star on the troops engaged in the operations near Suakin, under the command of Major-Gen. Sir Gerald Graham, K.C.B., V.C., her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her assent to the proposal, and the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has it in command to convey her Majesty's permission that the decoration may be accepted, and worn in uniform by those who are entitled to receive it. The star will be of a similar pattern to that granted for the Egypt (1882) Campaign. Individuals who are already in possession of the star granted for the last-mentioned campaign will not be entitled to receive another star. Individuals who served in the campaign, and are entitled to receive the medal granted by G.O. 99 of 1884 (with the exception of those specified in para. 3 of this order), will be considered as entitled to the star.

[Why "individuals?" Surely this is a new word to use in a General Order? Perhaps some "individual" has invented it!"—Ed. A. & N. G.]

On Tuesday, Capt. Tirtoff, of the Russian ironclad General Admiral, accompanied by a large number of his officers, were shown over Devonport Dockyard. They were conducted to the building slips, boat-houses, smiths' shops, saw-mills, and were taken on board the Himalaya, and many other of the vessels in dock, the basin, or alongside the jetties. Time did not permit of their proceeding to Keyham. In the afternoon Capt. Tirtoff paid an official visit to Sir W. H. Stewart.

THE BUILDING AND REPAIRING OF SHIPS.

The Report of the Committee appointed on April 24 last "to inquire into the conditions under which contracts are invited for the building or repairing of ships, including their engines, for her Majesty's Navy, and into the mode in which repairs and outfits of ships are effected in her Majesty's dockyards," has been issued. The Committee state that the whole question of incidental expenses is so obscure as to render untrustworthy any comparison between the cost of shipbuilding in public or private yards. As regards the quality of extra work performed under Admiralty supervision, there appears to be no difference of opinion, the unanimous testimony being that it is excellent, and in no way inferior to that performed in the dockyards. The Committee observe that "The time occupied in building a ship under contract compares favourably with the period of construction in a dockyard, the whole tendency of contract work being to avoid delay. The progress of contract work is necessarily retarded by the vagueness of the specification, which, it has been suggested, is perhaps, in some measure, due to the desire to leave room for the introduction of any improvements or alterations in the fittings which may be considered desirable during the time the vessel is under construction. In connection with this point, the Committee, while fully acknowledging the necessity of keeping ships-of-war abreast of the most modern improvements, are of opinion that it is desirable to discontinue the system of endeavouring to adapt every ship to the latest improvements, whether in gunnery or mechanical appliances, that may arise during the period she is under construction. That vessels when designed and laid down in the dockyards, or contracted for, should be completed to receive the best armaments and mechanical inventions known to exist, and thus great expense would be avoided and time saved. It appears in evidence that in the case of ships built in the dockyards, at least three years out of six might be saved by this course; and the Committee consider that the gain to the Naval strength of the country by the more rapid completion of vessels possessing fittings of the most approved type at the time they were designed would more than counterbalance an advantage that might be gained by adopting the latest improvements at the cost of serious delay during the construction of the ship. If this course was adopted, the principal, and indeed apparently the only disadvantage under which contract building labours, would be removed, and the area of such building might be extended, a result which would be attended by these advantages to the country,—that not only would the resources of the dockyards be rendered to a greater extent than at present available for repairs and for the building of ships of an experimental type, but familiarity with the art of building warships would be spread throughout the country. Contractors would be encouraged by a more constant flow of work to provide themselves with the necessary skilled labour and costly plant, and facilities would thereby be afforded of increasing the naval defences of the Empire at a more rapid rate of progress than at present. As regards the question of repairs, the Committee hold that the case stands differently, and the testimony is unanimous that the system is an expensive one, and that such work could best be done in the Royal dockyards. The Committee express an opinion that very careful consideration should be given before large expenditure is incurred upon structural repairs of her Majesty's ships, especially those in the transport service. The great improvements and economies effected in the design, construction, and machinery of ships of late years render vessels rapidly obsolete; and it appears to the Committee that the practice prevailing in large mercantile companies of adding new ships to their fleet, in preference to making large expenditure on old vessels, is well worthy of the consideration of the Admiralty. The Committee add that, on the occasion of their visiting Chatham Dockyard, it came to their notice that some of the tools employed in shipbuilding were of an obsolete character, which must necessarily increase the cost of the work, and they regret that want of time prevented them from visiting other of the home dockyards." Four members of the Committee sent in separate memoranda, stating that while approving of the Report so far as it goes, they consider a more thorough inquiry to be desirable.

Sir W. Hewett arrived at Bombay in Euryalus, on Sunday last. Comdre. Molyneux returns to Suakim from Massowah about the 18th inst.

At the first meeting of the session of the Institution of Civil Engineers, a very interesting paper was read on "Electric Lighting for Steamships," by Mr. Andrew Jamieson. It stated that although not more than three years had elapsed since the first application of incandescent electric lighting to the illumination of steamships, the advantages had been so universally recognised, that more than 150 men-of-war and merchant steamers had already been fitted with it.

Service Questions in Parliament.

THE NILE BOATS.

In answer to Mr. Dawnay, on Monday, Lord Hartington said that no confirmation of the statement as to the state in which the Nile boats and their equipments reached Egypt could be obtained.

JOHN DUNN.

Replying to Mr. Dawnay, Mr. Ashley said the Colonial Office had heard nothing of any raid in John Dunn's district, but information had been received that on September 25 a raid was made by Usutus upon the kraals of a loyal chief in the centre of Zululand. The Resident Commissioner would take such steps as he might think desirable.

ROYAL MARINES.

Sir T. Brassey stated in the House of Commons on Monday, in reply to Viscount Lewisham, that two officers and 83 non-commissioned officers and men have been furnished by the Royal Marine Light Infantry for Camel Corps service with the Nile Expedition, and that the total strength of the Royal Marines on shore on Oct. 31 last year was 6,081. The force available for immediate service was 3,854. The effective strength on shore this year was 5,138, and 2,984 were available for immediate service. (This seems a wonderful non-effective condition!)

THE PORTSMOUTH HAND-DRILLERS.

Sir Thomas Brassey on Tuesday informed Sir H. Wolff that he believed no petition from the hand-drillers in Portsmouth Dockyard had reached the Admiralty.

THE NAVY.

Mr. Gladstone, reminded by Sir J. Hay that he had not yet stated whether there was any intention to have a discussion on the state of the Navy, said a pledge had already been given on the subject, from which pledge the Government did not intend to draw back.

COLONIAL DEFENCES.

On Thursday, in the House of Lords, the Earl of Carnarvon called attention to the proposal of the Government to spend a sum of about £900,000 for the defence of Colonial possessions and garrisons abroad, characterising it as altogether inadequate, and contending that, in the event of untoward circumstances happening, some of Great Britain's most vital interests would be seriously jeopardised. The Earl of Northbrook denied that any unnecessary delay had been allowed to take place, and maintained that the Government had shown every desire to carry out the recommendations of the Royal Commission which inquired into the matter.

NAVAL GUNS.

Mr. Brand, replying to Mr. Carbutt, in the House of Commons, said that the 63-ton and the 110-ton guns now in course of manufacture were of a new design. The 43-ton gun, on being tested, had penetrated 21 inches of wrought-iron, and had been found to possess a maximum range of eight miles. None of the 41-ton guns were fired at Alexandria. The guns damaged at Alexandria consisted of one 11-in., two 10-in., one 8-in., and one 20-pounder.

CAPTAIN MONTAGU.

Sir T. Brassey stated that a report had been received from the Commander-in-Chief on the North American station with reference to the charges brought by Mr. Donovan against the captain of the Garnet. The Admiralty have informed Capt. Montagu that they consider he acted very injudiciously in writing the letters which he addressed to Mr. Donovan, but that they accept his explanation respecting the other charges brought against him.

THE DEFENCE OF THE COLONIES.

In the House of Lords on Thursday Lord Carnarvon called attention to the correspondence concerning the defence of Colonial possessions and garrisons abroad in reference to the recommendations of the Royal Commission appointed to report upon British possessions and commerce abroad. He held that we could not expect the Colonies to provide all our Colonial defences. Lord Northbrook assured their Lordships that the Government were alive to the importance of duly protecting our coaling-stations, and that they intended to fortify those stations in a manner which they believed would be adequate.

THE VOTES OF SUPPLY.

In the Commons Mr. Gladstone said the Admiralty would be prepared to make a statement on the condition of the Navy on the 24th. The House having gone into Committee, Lord Hartington moved the Army Estimate of £1,000,000 for the Nile Expedition, and in support of it he went at length into a history of the preparations and the instructions to Lord Wolseley. He also explained the reasons which had guided the Government in choosing the Nile route, the main consideration being the enormous cost of the land transport if the Suakim route had been chosen. Col. Stanley gave a general support to the vote, but asked for further explanations on details. After several members had spoken, Lord Hartington said, in reply, that Lord Wolseley had never committed himself to any particular date. In the end the vote was carried on a division by 73 to 17. Lord Hartington next moved the vote of £675,000 for Army purposes in connection with the expedition to expel the Dutch freeboters from Montsioa's territory, which, he said, was an outside estimate, at least for any expenditure which could occur within the financial year, though not sufficient if the matter were pushed to the bitter end. Ultimately the vote was carried by 78 to 31. Two Navy Estimates were subsequently agreed to, one for £324,000 for the Egyptian Expedition, and another for £50,000 in connection with the Bechuanaland Expedition. A division was challenged on the first, and it was carried by 66 to 26.

DIMNESS of SIGHT.—Dimness of Sight and Blindness are often caused by the use of unsuitable Spectacles. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1A Old Bond Street, scientifically adapts his improved Spectacles to strengthen and assist the weakest sights. Testimonials from Earl Lindsay, Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, containing valuable suggestions, post free.

WHAT OUGHT TO BE DONE FOR THE NAVY.

The writer of "The Truth About the Navy," in the Pall Mall Gazette of Thursday undertakes, with the object of giving form and substance to more or less vague convictions prevailing on the subject among the best-informed officers in the service, the task of shaping in outline a method by which the startling condition of affairs that he depicted some eight weeks ago may be placed in a fair way to amendment, premising that no point of his indictment has been seriously disputed. He states that "the official apologist, Sir Thomas Brassey, has confirmed the accuracy of my assertions. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, immediately before his removal from the Admiralty to the Irish Office, congratulated the nation upon the attention now suddenly directed to the condition of its first line of defence, and even the Chancellor of the Exchequer has expressed his satisfaction at the discussion, and his confidence in the excellence of the result which is certain to follow so seasonable and intelligent a debate upon the efficiency of our Navy." He proceeds to give a brief recapitulation of the grounds on which his case for a considerable increase in the Navy Estimates rests. Calling attention to the disproportion between the rate of our Naval insurance in 1868 and 1883, he says:—"Our Navy is maintained in order to protect the English at home and over sea, and all their possessions, wealth, trade, and shipping. It is, therefore, almost a truism to assert that it should bear some definite relation to the value of the property which it was created to defend. Money expenditure is, all things considered, perhaps the fairest, although one of the roughest, tests of Naval strength. If, therefore, the last middle-class Parliament, in 1868, regarded an expenditure of eleven millions as necessary to insure the safety of property valued at £430,000,000 per annum, whose annual trade was £522,000,000, and whose ships measured 5,500,000 tons, then it simply needs a rule-of-three sum to show what our Naval insurance should cost now that the annual value is £601,000,000, its trade £732,000,000, and its shipping 7,000,000 tons." Then glancing at the immense increase in our insurance rates in the same period, and the fact that while France has less territory now than in 1868—Italy and Germany in 1883 had not extended their possessions over the sea, and the Russian coast-line is as it was in 1868—we have multiplied our distant possessions, extended enormously our coast-line, and increased our responsibilities over sea, "the startling fact comes out that in more than 15 years our rivals increased their Naval Budget by 4,000,000; while we have actually diminished our effective expenditure by £850,000. This alone is sufficient to explain why our Naval supremacy has almost slipped from our grasp." Dwelling upon the proportion that Naval expenditure bears to the commerce and shipping in the case of the four other principal maritime Powers, as compared with our own, he shows, from the calculations of Capt. Colomb, that if we adopted the lowest French rates, our Naval estimates would be over £20,000,000 per annum. Then he considers in detail, our deficiency in guns, powder, shot, and material of war; our weakness in ironclads; the need for swift cruisers, torpedo-rams, ships and boats, docks and coaling-stations, and supply of men. He contends that "the ideal of good administration is attained when the public knows exactly whom to hang when anything goes wrong, and good administration is attained when the penalty is rigorously inflicted. But as to the defence of the empire, no one would know whom to hang if the Fleet went to the bottom to-morrow. If we could discover a Naval Von Moltke, the best thing we could do would be to establish him permanently in Whitehall, with absolute powers over the service in all its branches. Failing his advent, every effort should be made to concentrate responsibility, and to give the widest possible publicity to the grievances and deficiencies of the Navy." And he concludes:—"My object has been to avoid disputed points, and to set before the public the truth about the Navy, not from the point of view of prejudiced experts or frenzied alarmists, but from that of the Admiralty itself. I have accepted all their figures and all their facts. I have in no point questioned their policy, but I have proved that on their own showing, taking the most favourable view of the situation, England's Naval supremacy has almost ceased to exist, in four years will have entirely perished, and that we are now utterly unprepared for war. We are, therefore, living upon sufferance, and we shall do wisely to walk humbly—paying blackmail, if need be, to our powerful neighbours—until such time as, having once more recovered our Naval supremacy, we can again act with the independence and self-reliance of a great Power." The writer concludes that the "lost ground cannot be regained at a stride, but at least a beginning may be made towards regaining our former position by an immediate vote of 10 millions for the Navy and the coaling-stations, and a permanent addition to the Navy Estimates of two millions per annum. Without arrogating any right to prescribe how this money should be spent, I venture to summarise the various heads under which it might be profitably expended:—1. One million on guns, gun-carriages, and material of war, £100,000 of this sum being devoted at once to laying down plant at Woolwich capable of casting steel ingots for the largest guns, and £400,000 more in the creation of a new Naval arsenal. Woolwich and Shoeburyness to be made as complete as Essen and Meppen; and the Admiralty given command of its own ordnance. 2. Two millions on defence and armament of coaling-stations over sea, £100,000 being devoted to the construction of a dock at Bombay. 3. One-and-a-half millions in laying down five new ironclads, to be constructed in three years, the remaining cost of their construction being defrayed out of the increased annual estimate. £500,000 to be spent in expediting construction of those now building. 4. Two millions on the construction of 10 swift cruisers—improved Esmeraldas, with greater coal-carrying capacity. 5. Two millions on the construction of torpedo craft, £1,200,000 in building 100 first-class torpedo-boats, and £800,000 in building 30 sea-going torpedo-vessels to accompany our fleets in the Mediterranean and Channel. 6. One million on construction of auxiliary vessels, fittings for those improvised cruisers, and making vessels in commission thoroughly efficient in every respect. I have now placed the facts of our position before the country. If, in face of this revelation of its peril, nothing, or next to nothing, is done, the responsibility for the unmaking of England will rest upon those who would rather ruin the Empire than add a penny to the income-tax."

London Amusements.

The commencement of the season at the HAYMARKET, announced to be the last under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, has been signalised by a reproduction of the four-act play of "Diplomacy," first brought out under their lesseeship at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, on Saturday, January 12, 1878. This ably-rendered version of Sardou's French comedy of "Dora," executed with notable literary skill and dramatic tact by Mr. Clement Scott and Mr. B. Stephenson, is now likely to obtain a renewed career of popularity. Miss Le Thière, as the impecunious Marquise, is the only representative of the original cast. Miss Calhoun succeeds Mrs. Kendal as the heroine, Dora, and in the third act exhibits much emotional power. Mrs. Bancroft, resigning the character of the revengeful spy, the Countess Zicka, to Mrs. Bernard-Beere, secures a more congenial position as the lively Lady Fairfax, and embellishes the part with some diverting reminiscences of foreign travel. Mr. Bancroft now plays Henry Beauclerc, instead of the Russian, Count Orloff, here impersonated with great success by Mr. Maurice Barrymore, from the United States; and Mr. Forbes-Robertson, taking the place of Mr. Kendal as Julian Beauclerc, depicts acute mental agony with more energy than discretion in that famous scene of "the three men," which provides a strong situation without parallel in dramatic annals. Mr. C. Brookfield is not so good a Baron Stein as his predecessor, Mr. Arthur Cecil; but notwithstanding some deficiencies which will soon be remedied, the general excellence of the present representation well merited the hearty applause bestowed on Saturday night. Mr. Elliott proves a vivacious Algie Fairfax, and the smaller characters are very efficiently supported.

At HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, "Don Giovanni" has been represented with a fairly satisfactory cast, including Madame Rose Hersee as Zerlina, Signor Padilla as Don Giovanni, Signor Frapolli as Ottavio, Signor Castelmary as Leporello, and Madame Marion and Madame Sandrini as Donna Anna and Donna Elvira. Madame Laura Ségur is the American primâ donna, who made her début here twenty-three years ago as Miss Laura Harris, appearing as Amina in "La Sonnambula." The programme has this week comprised the still popular "Il Trovatore," and the experiment of giving Italian operas at reasonable rates of admission would seem likely to prove successful.

The Promenade Concerts at COVENT GARDEN must soon terminate to allow preparations to be made for the Christmas circus entertainment, arranged to begin on Boxing Day, under the direction of Mr. William Holland. Thursday was set apart for an "American night," in recognition of the election for President, and the annual benefit of Mr. A. Gwyllym Crowe is announced to take place this (Saturday) evening.

At the ROYALTY the comedy of "L'Étrangère" has been the latest addition to the programme of the French plays. Mdlle. Leonide Leblanc, who has not been seen in London for some time, made her reappearance as Mrs. Clarkson, a character included in the repertory of Madame Sarah Bernhardt.

"Young Mrs. Winthrop," at the COURT THEATRE, is attracting good audiences, and the pathetic interest of this pretty domestic drama seems to be quite as fully appreciated here as on the other side of the Atlantic. Miss Marion Terry is an ideal representative of the young wife; Mr. Conway is well suited in the part of the thoughtless husband; Mrs. John Wood is admirable as the hilarious Mrs. Chetwynd, and Mr. Arthur Cecil makes a strong impression on the audience as the good-natured family lawyer. Miss Norreys, as the blind girl, and Mr. Reeves Smith as her lover, add to the effect of a striking performance, in which Miss Lydia Foote prominently figures.

The comic opera of "Polly," recently produced at the Novelty, is now transferred to the EMPIRE, and is followed by "Coppelia," a grand ballet of action, originally produced at the Opera House, Paris, about ten years since. The chorographic combinations are exceedingly effective, and the pretty music, composed by M. Leo Delibes, receives full justice from a numerous band conducted by Mr. Stanislaus.

The AVENUE THEATRE opened on Wednesday evening with Mr. Burnand's new drama, in a prologue and three acts, called "Just in Time." The scene is laid in Paris, but the piece is not an adaptation. Mr. John S. Clarke is the prominent personage, and he is very adequately supported by Mrs. Alfred Mellon, Miss Eva Sothern, Mr. William Farren, Mr. W. Rignold, and Mr. R. Soutar.

The career of Mr. Joseph Derrick's farcical comedy of "Twins," interrupted by the unsuccessful exhibition of the model of ancient Jerusalem, has been resumed at the OLYMPIC, Mrs. Anna Conover, the lessee, now occupying the place of Miss Ritta as Edith Granby.

SANGER'S AMPHITHEATRE has been reopened with those equestrian entertainments so long popular at this establishment. The scenes in the arena are supplemented by performances on the stage of the fifth act of "Richard III." and "Dick Turpin's Ride to York." The male personages are represented by Miss Grant Washington, Miss Gladys Ffolliott, and Miss Lettie de Witte, whose personal attractions are rather to be relied upon than histrionic qualifications.

"As You Like It" will be the next production at the St. James's. M. Audran's comic opera of "The Grand Mogul" will be brought out at the Comedy Theatre next week. A new three-act comedy called "Lottie" will be produced at the Novelty Theatre this (Saturday) evening, and a burlesque of "Hamlet" is in rehearsal at the Gaiety Theatre.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS & ARMY EXAMINATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have only to-day seen your leading article of Oct. 4 on "How we Educate our Officers." It reflects very strongly on the Head Masters of the Public Schools, and I claim, from your sense of justice, that you should insert this reply. You say that "the latest Warrant for the regulation of the competitive examinations was framed by men profoundly ignorant of the requirements of the service The Warrant referred to was framed in consultation with the Head Masters of our Public Schools. It would have been easy," you add, "to foreshadow the kind of advice likely to emanate from that source." The schedule for the examination is then set forth at length in the article, and is that of Jan. 1, 1884; and to this Warrant reference is made throughout the article. In the first place, it is misleading to say that the Warrant of Jan. 1, 1884, was framed in consultation with the Head Masters. That phrase implies a joint responsibility, or at least reciprocal criticism and mutual deference. The fact is, that a draft of the proposed Warrant was sent to the Committee of the Head Master's Conference, and, in reply, a memorandum was sent containing suggestions and remarks. No further communication took place until the Warrant appeared, and when it appeared it took us at least as much by surprise as it took the public. I distinctly deny that the Head Masters are responsible for the Warrant of Jan. 1, 1884. It would be a violation of confidence, and it would now serve no purpose, to particularise the very important points in which it differs from the scheme we proposed, or to allude to subsequent action. But this ought to be plain to every one, that to establish our responsibility, it would be necessary to prove that our advice had been taken, and this the writer has not attempted to do. So much in vindication of the Head Masters from an unjust attack. I now turn to the substance of the article itself, and its criticism on the Warrant of Jan. 1, 1884. I ask myself with some bewilderment who can be the writer who ventures to deal with such a subject in your important paper, and yet betray such manifest ignorance of the actual circumstances. The article appeared on Oct. 4, and yet the writer is obviously ignorant that the Regulations which he quotes at length had been cancelled two months before by the Warrant of Aug. 1. This Warrant modifies the new scheme in several important particulars, and defers its operation for six months. The main purpose of these latest Orders is to raise to 2,000 the marks allotted to English history, experimental science, and geography and geology. Thus it will be seen that the larger part of the article is devoted to the criticism of obsolete Regulations, and that the points selected for comment in the scheme of Jan. 1 are, for the most part, those that have been modified by the orders of Aug. 1. Nothing could show more clearly how small must be the writer's practical acquaintance with the subject of which he treats. It is a blunder which discredits the authority of the whole article. I will now, with your permission, advert to an article in your issue of Oct. 18, giving some statistics as to the number of cadets at Woolwich who have passed direct from the Public Schools. The article does not state at what time these statistics were compiled, and I am, therefore, only able to say that at no period do they correspond with our own. In no term, as far as I can ascertain, had we 12 cadets direct, and two assisted by crammers (I adopt the expression used in the article). At present we have 14 direct, and none assisted. As I write, however, a possible explanation of the discrepancy occurs to me. If a boy came to us for a year or two in our preparatory or junior school (we have boys of 8 and 9 years old), and then left us for some other school or tutor, we should not count him as a Cliftonian at all. But it is possible that such a boy might mention the fact of his having been at Clifton, and hence his name might appear in the lists of those who got into Woolwich from Clifton with assistance. But it is obvious that such a case ought not to be counted at all. The figures I give refer only to boys whom we knew to be Woolwich candidates, and who left us within a year or two of their examination. I may observe, however, in passing that I do not see signs of great care or accuracy in the article of Oct. 18, while the same animus against public schools is manifest. It is there stated as a fact that "Wellington College was founded in 1853, and that at the lowest computation some 10,000 boys must have passed through it." This is stated with the aim of showing that the 400 officers who have passed from Wellington College into the Army form but an insignificant portion of its students. But, in fact the College was not open till 1859, and I should be much surprised to learn that 3,000 students had passed through the College, or even entered it, judging by the entries at Clifton College. But I wish to call the attention of your readers to two or three important points. These statistics may be relied on, and are doubtless representative statistics. 1. Our 14 cadets now at Woolwich passed direct at the average age of 17 years and two months. Seven of these 14 were among the first 15 on the list. The limit of age is 18. All officers will know what importance is to be attached to the early age at which cadets pass. 2. That in the 10 years since our Woolwich class was formed under Mr. Hall, we have passed 53 direct, and, as far as we can trace, only three through crammers. 3. That in Sept., 1880, I formed a Sandhurst class under Mr. Stevens. Since that date 15 have passed direct at the average age of 18 years and one month. The limit of age is 20. Here also the early age is of great importance. During the same period 17 have passed through crammers at the average age of 19 years three months. The reason why boys leave us to go to crammers for Sandhurst, and not for Woolwich, is obvious. It is that the age of admission is different. The limit of age at schools is not 20, but 18 or 19; and, therefore, if boys do not pass at the age of 19, they are obliged to go to a tutor. Nor would it be desirable to extend the school age. Schools, therefore, compete at Sandhurst under the manifest disadvantage of sending in their candidates only at the earliest age allowable, and not at the latest. At Woolwich we do much more than hold our own against any tutor, at Sandhurst we do the same at similar ages. But the tutors have a whole year more in which to prepare their candidates. In conclusion, let me ask what is the purpose of the writer or writers of these articles? With what animus does a writer quote a letter from Mr. Thring, of Uppingham, and say ex uno disce omnes? What motive impels a man to make so unjust and unfounded a statement? He cannot be ignorant that the public schools differ very widely from one another. An anonymous writer is often credited with a sort of inspiration. I will not avail myself of that advantage, and have the honour to remain, yours, &c., JAMES M. WILSON.

Clifton College, November 10, 1884.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER AND THE ADMIRALTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—May I be permitted to say a word with regard to your criticism of my paper upon the Navy, in the current number of the Nineteenth Century? You remark that in blaming the Naval Lords of the Admiralty, I am putting the saddle on the wrong horse, and that my attack ought in justice to have been directed against the Parliamentary officials. I so entirely agree with the principle of this last proposition, that I should feel myself fairly open to your censure had I, in fact, failed to recognise it. But in justice to myself, I must say that I do not think that what I have written is open to the construction which you put upon it. Personally, I feel most strongly that it is the Parliamentary officials who are in reality responsible for our present deplorable weakness; and I am fully sensible of the fact that the professional advisers of the First Lord have no power to enforce their own opinions while they remain in office. If you will allow me to quote the words of my article, I think my position in this matter will become clear. After delaring my belief that the Naval Lords of the Admiralty share my views as to the insufficiency of the Navy, and my conviction that they have endeavoured to improve matters, I continue as follows:—"Of course, by law the Parliamentary head of the Admiralty is solely answerable for all matters done or left undone in his department, and by statute the Board are absolved from all responsibility in the matter. It is necessary to remember this in estimating the conduct of the subordinate members, and it is necessary also to make allowance for the wholesome and inborn tendency of the British sailor to do the best with whatever materials he can get. Nevertheless, if it does turn out that the Naval Lords have again and again knocked at the door of the Treasury, and found it shut in their faces, there will be many who will probably regret that some member of the Board should not have taken heart of grace, and emphasised his sense of the danger to the country, by refusing to assist personally in prolonging it." To the view last expressed I still adhere; but I think you will allow that I have not lost sight of the main and all-important fact that it is the Treasury and the Parliamentary members of the Board who are the real culprits. If I have in any way encouraged an opposite view I greatly regret it, and can only attribute it to want of clearness on my own part. May I add that in speaking of the "naval officials," I of course include—or rather I should say I refer to—the civil officials charged with the maintenance of the Navy.—I am, &c.,

Reform Club. H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER.

[We print Mr. Arnold-Forster's letter, although we do not think our remarks and criticisms on his interesting paper were unjust. Certainly his strictures would be taken by most readers to be directed against "Naval officials." But he says he intended to attack "Parliamentary officials." Now, what we maintain is, that it is not "officials" at all, unless "Cabinet Ministers" be so called, who ought to be attacked for the unsatisfactory state of the Navy. We say it is "Governments" which are to blame, and if statesmen on both sides say that the country insists on economy, then our answer is that the fault is to be traced to the teaching of those statesmen themselves, and to the vicious practices of party politicians. We do not think any reasonable man can expect a Naval Lord of the Admiralty to resign because the First Lord will not follow his advice. —ED. A. & N. G.]

Major-Gen. J. I. Murray, Bengal S.C., has assumed command of the Oude Division, Bengal Army, vice Lieut.-Gen. C. Cureton, whose tenure has expired.

We (Standard) understand that the Duke and Duchess of Connaught have arranged to leave Bombay for England in the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamship Carthage on April 3 next.

The Rainy Lake Lumber Company, Limited, is about to issue £48,000 eight per cent. first mortgage debentures of £100 each. This company was established in the month of June, 1882, for the purposes of purchasing, holding, selling, and leasing timber, timber limits, and real estate of every description, erecting and operating saw-mills, purchasing and operating steamboats, and for other purposes incidental to the business of timber merchants, with a capital of 350,000 dollars, in shares of 100 dollars each. The capital has recently been increased by the issue of 3,000 additional shares, which have been subscribed for by the directors in various proportions; and there is now unpaid on the entire capital of the company and reserved for the security of the debenture-holders 337,500 dollars, or about £67,500 sterling. The situation of the company's properties is such as to render its business peculiarly successful and certain. The new saw-mill of the company at Rat Portage has a siding to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the company thus obtains access to the timberless prairies of Manitoba and the North-West, where lumber for building purposes is a matter of necessity, and in constant and increasing demand; while it is protected by the Canadian tariff from competition by the United States. Mr. Stewart estimates the advantage in favour of the company in these markets over producers in Eastern Canada to be equal to about seven dollars per 1,000 feet (B.M.). The great expenditure of the company in effecting the purchases and erections mentioned has rendered it desirable to supplement their capital by means of the loan now offered.

THE ARMY RIFLE MATCHES.

The following are the results of the competitions confined to Regular troops serving in the United Kingdom. The shooting took place between July 1 and Oct. 1 at regimental stations:—

CAVALRY TEAM MATCH (six entries).—Cavalry Depôt, 660 points, £18, 1; 4th Hussars, 642, 2; 5th Dragoon Guards, 632, 3; 2nd Dragoon Guards, 631. Prizes in connection with the above officers (10 entries)—Qrmr. Carter, 2nd Dragoon Guards, 82 points, prize £5.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS' AND MEN'S PRIZES (77 entries).—Corpl. Brimer, 13th Hussars, 93 points, prize medal and £4, 1; Troop-Serjt.-Major Exell, 4th Hussars, 90, £4, 2; Pte. Milton, 5th Dragoon Guards, 89, £3, 3; Lance-Corpl. Boon, 5th Dragoon Guards, 88, £2 10s.; Serjt. Greenwood, 2nd Dragoon Guards, 87, £2; Troop-Serjt.-Major Meenagh, 13th Hussars, 86, £1 10s.

INFANTRY BATTALION TEAM MATCH (17 Battalions entered).—1st Batn. Highland Light Infantry, 758 points, prize £51, 1; 1st Batn. Scottish Rifles, 701 points, 2. The score made by the winning regiment is one of the best ever recorded, averaging 94·75 points per man, seven shots at 200, 500, and 600 yards, Wimbledon targets; kneeling at 200, prone at 500 and 600. No shadow of a doubt can rest upon the performance, for it has been ascertained, after special inquiry, that the regulations for the match (very strict ones) were observed to the letter. The certifying officers were Lieut. Richardson, 1st Batn. Highland Light Infantry, at the firing point, and Lieut. Lindsay, Royal Artillery, at the marker's butt, both being experienced officers in musketry. There were also other officers at the firing-point looking on. The following scores are those of the winning team, taken from the target after each man had fired his seven shots at a distance:—

Colour-Serjt. W. Menzies	33	34	35	102

ACTIVE SERVICE cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed night and morning with ROWLAND'S ODONTO, the purest and most fragrant dentifrice ever made. All dentists allow that neither washes nor pastes are as efficacious for polishing the teeth and keeping them sound and white as a pure and non-gritty tooth-powder; such ROWLAND'S ODONTO has always proved itself. Ask any dealer in perfumery for ROWLAND'S ODONTO, and avoid spurious imitations, theirs being the only original and genuine Odonto.

A war game was played at the Horse Guards on Thursday evening. Lieut.-Col. Cantlon and Capt. Hummel, 2nd London R.V., who have passed the examination in tactics, commanded the imaginary forces.

A military correspondent of the Irish Times says:—"The present construction of the Curragh Camp is, I understand, about to be altered. The existing outlying squares will be done away with, and the whole camp made more compact, less of an oblong, and more of a square. The buildings will be of brick, and one storey high; still, they will be a great improvement on the present wooden hut, with its porous felt roof, too hot in summer and a miserable dwelling in winter. In the new construction accommodation for three battalions of infantry, a battery of Royal Artillery, detachments of cavalry, and Commissariat and Transport is provided for."

A collision occurred in the Danube between the Roumanian gun-vessel Pardurul and the Austrian cargo steamer Galatz, by which the former was sunk.

The Collingwood is being rapidly pushed forward for trial. She will carry four 43-ton breech-loading guns in barbettes.

THERE are few sadder things to contemplate than the man who, having rendered his country good service, is cast adrift upon the world either to beg or starve if he cannot get employment. To very many it is a matter of wonder how anyone of common-sense can be induced to enter the ranks of our Army, for though the soldier is well housed, fed, and clothed in time of peace, his life is one of monotonous routine, while on active service, privation and suffering fall to his lot. Should the campaign be popular, and be near home, the British soldier occasionally gets an ovation, and he is made the idol of the hour, soon to be overturned, however, and forgotten, when his uniform, instead of being any advantage to him, is frequently an obstacle preventing his entry to places open to the meanest civilian. On leaving the colours he is generally cast adrift upon the world, when he has to compete with the struggling mass for employment. In most cases he has no trade, or, if he has, the time spent in the service of his country has impaired his skill, so that he enters the labour market at a very great disadvantage. We try to get as much as we can out of our soldier, and then turn him adrift either to sink or swim; yet England wonders why her Army is not more popular, and why a better class of recruit does not join the ranks. Some Continental nations manage things better, and look well after the interest of those who have to fight their battles. England, being entirely dependent upon a voluntary system, has all the more need to look after the well-being of her soldiers, and should take care that they are not only well-housed, well-fed, and well-clothed during their service with the colours, but that every man when he rejoins civil life shall, if he be of good character, stand a fair chance of gaining an honest living. A great deal might be done during a man's term of service by making him work at his trade, if he has one, or by teaching him one if he has not. The time now wasted in endless parades and drills would thus be profitably spent. Also, in filling-up subordinate Government appointments, preference should always be given to deserving soldiers who are fit for the positions. We were glad to see in the June number of Colburn's Magazine an article advocating the establishment at the War Office of a military secretariat; but, like most useful schemes in connection with our Army, the subject did not receive the notice it deserved. It is with extreme satisfaction that we see by the Indian papers that a movement is on foot to find employment for discharged soldiers of good character. As was to be expected from so true a friend of the British soldier, the Commander-in-Chief has given the matter his full support. Regiments in India, notably the Royal Artillery, the 25th King's Own Borderers, and the 95th Sherwood Foresters, have also entered keenly into the scheme; but it is to be regretted that the initiative did not come from regiments at home, for India is so far away from the necessary field of operation, that the keenest interest there will have but little effect, unless the sympathy of the general public in this country is elicited in its favour. The people to get at are the employers of labour; but they frequently are disinclined to employ Army Reservemen, because of their liability to be called away whenever the country is engaged even in the most petty war. It is at least in the power of the authorities to lessen this difficulty by making the civil life of the Reserveman more secure. We think the matter of such importance, and we are so anxious to see action taken, that we hesitate to throw cold water upon any scheme that has for its object the benefit of our discharged soldiers, and yet the suggestions made at the different meetings in India are beset with difficulties, if not objections, as was truly remarked by Sir Michael Biddulph at the meeting of officers of the Royal Artillery at Simla. Registration at depôt centres would benefit the Royal Artillery, but to a limited extent, owing to its peculiar organisation and its very wide distribution. Again, at the meeting of the King's Own Borderers it was suggested that their Militia and Volunteers should be asked to assist, when formed. But as this regiment, apparently, is never likely to have any auxiliary battalions attached, no assistance from that quarter can be expected; and if this regiment goes to other centres, they would be poaching on other people's ground. There are, also, other difficulties in the way of registration offices at depôt centres. In some, the demand for labour is limited, and already meets with a full supply, so that many of the county regiments would have to seek employment from other places, where the openings for industry are great. Then, again, our territorial scheme is little more than a sham, and the connection of a regiment with its own particular county is but small; and the authorities have been doing all in their power to make it so, by their pernicious practice of robbing Peter to pay Paul whenever a regiment, below its strength, or too full of babes and sucklings, is ordered on active service; so that, though a lad may enlist in the Cornwall Light Infantry, he may finish his service either in the Northumberland or Royal Irish Fusiliers, or even find himself deprived of his trousers and wearing a kilt. After carefully considering the whole matter, we think that the object in view would be best attained by an extension of our present Corps of Commissionaires, which is, in all respects, an excellent organisation. We would suggest that the country be mapped out into districts, with a head office in each large town, and branch offices for registration, which should be in direct communication with the nearest head office; the head offices to be in communication with each other, and all to be under the nominal, if not actual, control of the head office in London. Any money that officers of regiments might wish to subscribe might be kept at the depôt centre of their respective regiments, and might be used to defray the necessary expenses of men joining the Corps of Commissionaires. We think this would be far better, and more likely to be successful, than any independent scheme, which must, to a certain extent, be a rival to the present organisation, which, we believe, is being extended year by year. We would also make a strong appeal to the patriotism of employers, and ask them to find labour for those deserving men who protect their interest, and render their property safe from foreign foes; and let our Government set a good example by throwing all suitable positions open to deserving and competent discharged soldiers.

LORD NORTHBROOK will make his "statement on the Navy" on Monday week. The postponement of the discussion which must arise may possibly be regarded as an earnest that the Government are seriously considering a subject that cannot, in the present state of the public mind, be "tided over" with assurances that the matter will receive "that consideration which its importance demands." The First Lord of the Admiralty will have ample time to prepare his statement, which it is hoped will appease the anxiety which has naturally arisen after so many plain facts have been asserted, proving how deficient the nation is in that line of defence to which Great Britain must mainly depend in time of war. The First Lord of the Admiralty has a somewhat difficult task before him, knowing, as he must, the deficiencies in that service over which he so ably presides. Whatever statement Lord Northbrook makes will be keenly criticised in the Lower House,—Mr. W. H. Smith, as a matter of course, taking the non-political initiative. Although we do not desire, or intend, to discount the important statement Lord Northbrook is about to make, it may not now be inappropriate to direct attention to the difficulties—as well as the requirements—which have to be faced and discussed. It is impossible that the Government, with the very complete information at its disposal, can be unaware of our position. To endeavour to lull the aroused nation into a belief of "our Naval security," in the face of facts and figures, would be utterly useless; and Lord Northbrook will assuredly never attempt to take this consoling line in a speech which we anticipate with some anxiety. "Many-tongued" rumour is now very busy anent what will be done to put our first line of defence in a condition to meet any two antagonistic nations opposed to the United Kingdom in time of war. First of all comes the financial consideration, which appears to be omnipresent and almost omnipotent as regards the Navy. The First Lord of the Admiralty and his colleagues in the Cabinet are surrounded with financial difficulties and fiscal considerations. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has just added "an item" to the Income-tax to meet pressing necessities, and millions of money will have to be found for the "little adventures" in Egypt and the South of Africa. The calculations in the Exchequer Department appear to have gone wrong in consequence of "miscalculation,"—not to say of misjudgment. The tax-paying nation may not object to the additional impost, but the First Lord of the Admiralty and his colleagues may be satisfied with the assurance that the country will hail with satisfaction any proposition tending to place the Navy on its old footing of undoubted supremacy. The First Lord of the Admiralty may make comparative statements to prove that our position is not so disadvantageous as recent published facts and figures have demonstrated. Possibly Lord Northbrook will inform the nation that the country stands "first of all" in regard to ironclads of the ironclad class; and he may attempt to show that we are not so deficient in the lesser classes of secondary war-ships, in comparison to other Powers. With restricted finances, Lord Northbrook will possibly state that the Government are about to add to the cruiser class of ships and to our torpedo fleet; while the defences of our coasts and coaling stations have not been forgotten. Placing all European nations—and the Naval preparations they are making in almost every branch of the Naval services out of the question—the fact that America is about to expend $10,000,000 in constructing cruisers should be deeply considered, with a knowledge that the coast defences of the United States must be regarded in the very same category as those of Great Britain. Concurrent action of many countries cannot be passed over unnoticed; and while we have to thank Italy for recent gunnery experiments, we must not be unobservant of the immediate necessity of building light, swift, and protected vessels to protect Great Britain's immense commerce on the high road at sea. Torpedo-vessels and their accessories will, doubtless, be provided, the immediate necessity to provide an essential branch of the service with scientific adjuncts having been recognised and provided for by all countries, except that most interested, in consequence of her isolated position and—the "silverstreak." It has been intimated that Lord Northbrook's statement will render necessary "a total expenditure of between two or three millions upon the Navy in one direction or another; but it is thought that the payment of the sum will be spread over a period of four or five years." The commercial interests of the country are so great, that money will be regarded as an absolute necessity by the great money-winning centres, to protect our most valuable commerce on the ocean. While Lord Northbrook may not satisfy, at once, the requirements so earnestly demanded, "without regard to politics," we are constrained to believe that the postponement of his statement is an indication that something practical will be done without further procrastination.

IN these times, when the support of numerous charitable institutions presses heavily upon private benevolence, it seems very desirable that every effort should be made to bring Army Charities before the notice of the public. We suggest that those responsible for the control of Army charitable institutions might with advantage adopt the system followed by various religious and other societies, viz., employ the agency of local associations and sub-committees in the large towns of every county, for the purpose of making known the object and operations of Army charities; and for collecting donations and subscriptions. Surely there are many hundreds of retired officers all over the country who have the leisure and should have the will to work on such sub-committees? Chief among Army charities that should receive more general support may be enumerated:—1. Military Benevolent Fund, for granting annuities up to £40 per annum to widows and unmarried daughters of deceased officers left in reduced circumstances. The list of applicants for assistance from this fund tells a harrowing tale of distress among the widows and daughters of old officers who were killed in action or died from the effects of service, and all of whom had deserved well of their country. 2. Royal School for Officers' Daughters, which provides, at the lowest possible cost, a sound practical and religious education for the orphan and other daughters of officers. The reports of this institution give numerous instances in which the daughters of officers who have been killed in action, or have died on service, have been well educated at the School at a nominal cost to their friends. 3. Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, the only institution existing for the benefit of the class, provides a home and maintenance for 70 widows, left, in old age and infirmity, totally unprovided for. 4. Soldiers' Daughters' Home, for the maintenance, clothing, and education of the orphan and other daughters of soldiers. The last annual report shows that nearly 200 girls, the daughters of soldiers, are maintained in this home. 5. Cambridge Fund for Old and Disabled Soldiers, administered by the Commander-in-Chief. The nucleus of this fund was a bequest of £10,000 from the late Mr. W. Woodman, for the relief of worn-out or disabled soldiers, and this is augmented by subscriptions and donations. 6. Lastly, the special funds established in time of war, e.g., the Afghan, the Egyptian War Funds, for the relief of disabled soldiers and their families, sufferers during any particular campaign. Such are the principal Army charities that claim the support of the nation at large. Apart from patriotic and national instincts, such institutions appeal to the sympathies of all classes, for, from the palace of our gracious Queen to the cottage of the peasant, the manhood of the nation goes forth for service in the Army. We venture to recommend that, instead of spasmodic efforts to start a War Fund on the opening of any fresh campaign, there should be established a National War Fund, the entire proceeds of which should be invested in times of peace, and the income only be expended during, and for a given period after, the close of each successive campaign. While neither officers nor soldiers have many opportunities for enriching themselves, the urgencies of foreign service and the losses sustained in war cause widows and orphans to be left to struggle in reduced circumstances, and in many instances, in penury and destitution. We commend the idea at the beginning of this short notice to the consideration of the charities we mention, in full assurance that if the suggestion is acted upon, many helping hands will be forthcoming, and that the effect will be a large increase to the funds.

NOT the least of the many factors to be taken into calculation when estimating the present efficiency of our national defence, is the extent of the assistance which the Mercantile Marine could render to the Regular Service in time of emergency. It is now some years since the late Mr. Ward-Hunt sanctioned a measure, one result of which has been, no doubt, the drawing together of the Admiralty and the shipowners, so that arrangements for making the property of the latter promptly available in time of war have been much simplified, and in the case of those vessels subsequently built, certain structural additions have been made, tending to render them more suitable for the purpose in view; but although considerable progress has thus been made in the direction of getting these ships in readiness, the preparations, valuable as they are, will not alter the fact that, from their necessarily fragile construction, no amount of subdivision, nor any number of guns which they may be enabled to carry, will make it other than utterly absurd to think of them tackling a foreign man-of-war,—unless in utter despair, and at the imminent risk of destruction to themselves, an attempt should be made to ram. While, therefore, it is highly improbable that our fast mercantile and passenger steamers can ever be of much assistance as a supplementary fighting line, their adaptability for such purposes as scouting, carrying coals, provisions, or despatches, and, in certain eventualities, running an enemy's blockade to supply necessaries to the country, may be fairly granted; but opinions differ widely as to whether they can be made to supply further and as urgent needs. Sir William Armstrong has recently said:—"As to adapting our mercantile steam fleet to act as cruisers in case of emergency, nothing could be more delusive; they would simply furnish victims for such war-vessels as the Esmeralda;" and Sir William Symonds writes:—"Merchant steamers are not speedily made ready for such service"—(i.e., to act as armed tenders to our ironclads),—"and in prospect of war they would only be purchased at fabulous prices." On the other hand, Sir Thomas Brassey considers "that the Mercantile Marine is capable, under wise administration and under judicious help and encouragement, of doing much for its own defence against the improvised cruisers of foreign Powers;" and Sir Edward Reed believes that "armed merchant steamers may, at all events, be relied upon to do whatever Esmeraldas can do." Possibly it will be found that amongst the faster vessels of the merchant service are some which may be able to assist the corvettes and frigates of the Navy as escort to the slower and weaker craft; for although it is likely that in the event of war many vessels would be protected by a change of flag, and all the sailing vessels and very slow steamers not so protected would be laid up, the ordinary cargo-boats of from seven to ten knots would require, if not convoying, some sort of protection en route, and at present we have but very few swift armoured vessels capable of doing that work and meeting the enemy's ships on fairly equal terms. It cannot be denied, however, that the general impression amongst the public is that another and more perilous duty may be required from the pick of the swift and magnificent liners of the merchant service. The altered conditions of maritime war have also destroyed many of the advantages England heretofore possessed upon the seas; the days when the personal prowess of our officers and men enabled them to render any vessel, however small, a formidable antagonist to encounter, have passed away; and although the same indomitable spirit and daring still exist in our Navy, and in at least the action of ramming everything will depend upon the nerve of our captains, still the circumstances and methods whereby our forefathers were enabled to thrash their enemies are as obsolete and useless as would be the taut and rakish little schooner, with her long-range gun and semi-piratical crew, whose doings in the Naval history of the old wars were so remarkable a feature, and which formed the type of all ideal privateersmen in the early part of the century. Nor do we anticipate that, should privateering be carried on—and there is little doubt that, in spite of the "Treaty of Paris," under some name or another, it will be attempted in future wars—such damage as the Alabama and her sister ships were able to effect is likely to be repeated, even if vessels of the Esmeralda type be employed therein, for it must be remembered all the captures were made among the whaling fleets and other sailing vessels that had not a chance against steamers comparatively independent of winds and currents. There are, therefore, many reasons why—although it is obvious that, even when armed with guns and torpedoes, and protected in the most vulnerable parts as far as may be by such makeshifts, as, for instance, blockade-runners have used, the merchant vessel is never likely to be a very formidable assailant to the man-of-war—every vessel of the mercantile marine of a certain tonnage and speed should be placed in a position to defend herself; and no doubt many circumstances will arise under which the 300 or more already upon the Admiralty lists, as well as others, may be made of great use.

The statement on Naval matters which Lord Northbrook promised to make last Tuesday has been postponed until Monday week, when he will also move for returns respecting the ships built and building for her Majesty's Navy during the last four years.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., formerly an iron merchant at Liverpool, succeeds Sir Thomas Brassey as Civil Lord of the Admiralty. He is Member for Scarborough, where he was elected in 1880, after unsuccessfully contesting Liverpool twice. He seeks a seat for Middlesex at the next election with Lord Kensington, in opposition to Lord George Hamilton, M.P., and Mr. Octavius E. Coope, M.P. We fail to appreciate at present the qualifications of Mr. Caine for the post. Sir Thomas Brassey has appointed Mr. G. B. Voules to be his private secretary. Mr. Voules acted in a like capacity to Mr. Campbell-Bannerman. Mr. George T. Lambert has been appointed private secretary to Mr. Caine on his assuming the office of Civil Lord of the Admiralty.

Portsmouth Dockyard at the present time presents an admirable example of Admiralty economy and Naval decay. There is not one ship, except the Camperdown, building, and but two unarmoured cruisers, the Emerald and Cormorant, repairing. The Shah, frigate, has now been waiting four years for repair.

Admiral Spencer Robinson, writing to a contemporary, feels assured that if any patriotic Member of Parliament will study the present condition of our naval defences; the near equality between France and ourselves in battle ships; the absolute insufficiency of unarmoured ships to protect our trade, even taking largely into account such aid as may be derived from the mercantile navy; the incontestable inferiority of our naval artillery; the unprotected state of our possessions abroad, and of our coaling-stations; the dangerously low numbers of our seamen and marines; the fewness and in a great measure the inferiority of our torpedo ships; the increased wealth of the country, the incredible amount of that wealth on the high seas,—if he will remember that all this and much more of the same painful nature is known to every foreign nation, and is felt by many as a temptation, he will hardly consider a large expenditure to restore our Navy to its once high position unnecessary, or deride all of us who urge the necessity of such measures as alarmists and panic-stricken.

The United States Naval Advisory Board's report, which will be laid before Congress in December, recommends that the Fleet will be increased by the building of 12 new cruisers at a cost of nearly £2,000,000.

Some interesting details of the cost of French ironclads building on January 1, 1884, are given in a pamphlet recently published by Admiral Gougeard. Excluding harbour ironclads and armoured gunboats, the following sums had been expended at that date on the fourteen battle ships building or on the point of completion, for material and labour:—Foudroyant, 9,416,000 fr.; Terrible, 6,431,000 fr.; Amiral Baudin, 6,023,000 fr.; Brennus, 132,000 fr.; Charles Martel, 13,000 fr.; Formidable, 3,798,000 fr.; Magenta, 977,000 fr.; Hoche, 2,716,000 fr.; Neptune, 1,302,000 fr.; Caïman, 4,021,000 fr.; Furieux, 5,047,000 fr.; Indomptable, 4,000,000 fr.; Requin (built at a private yard), 3,295,000 fr.; Marceau (also privately constructed), 2,260,000 fr. Total sum expended, 49,431,000 fr. (£1,977,240). Admiral Gougeard shows that before these ironclads are finished a total sum of 130,000,000 fr. (£5,200,000) will have been expended. This is at the rate of £371,429 each, and does not include their armament.

The Guardian, writing on the subject of the Navy, says:—"The Government are to make shortly their promised statement with regard to the Navy. If rumour is to be believed a vote of one million or thereabouts is to be submitted, and the money obtained is to be applied to the construction of ocean cruisers and torpedo-boats. If a tithe of the evidence which has been given with regard to the present condition of the Navy be true, a vote of one million will be ridiculously and notoriously inadequate to meet the necessities of the situation. It is scarcely credible that every naval officer who is at liberty to express an opinion, every scientific authority, every leading shipbuilder, every independent critic should unite in their estimate of our present deficiencies. There has been positively no contradiction of the mass of testimony which has been offered. If that testimony be correct, a million sterling will not suffice even to put our existing armaments into serviceable condition, much less to provide us with a full equipment which our extended responsibilities and our manifold dangers demand. According to every single authority outside the strictly official circle, we are at this moment dangerously deficient in every department of our naval defences. The main facts of the situation are scarcely realised by the public, or it would be simply impossible for a Minister to get up in the House of Commons and propose a vote of a million as sufficient under the present circumstances. There is not a single competent officer in the service who does not know perfectly well that such a vote is simply illusory. The obvious needs which lie on the surface demand something more like an expenditure of ten millions before they can be made good."

A propos to the question of the day, Sir E. J. Reed will lecture at the United Service Institution, next Wednesday, on "What are the most urgent measures that should be taken for increasing Her Majesty's Navy?" Admiral Fanshawe will take the chair.

Speaking of the Navy at Woolwich, on Wednesday night, Mr. Boord, M.P., pointed out that while in 1778 the proportion of English line-of-battle ships was 126 to 68 French, in 1884 the proportion was 46 English to 44 French, and of the new ironclads France had 16 to our 14; and of swift, heavy-armed cruisers we had only 18, while France had 25. He also animadverted strongly on the abolition of Deptford and Woolwich dockyards, and commended Lord Beaconsfield for the purchase of the ironclads Superb, Orion, Neptune, and Belleisle.

The dearth of ships in the Navy is so great, that the Admiralty have been obliged to attach the Seahorse as despatch-vessel to the Channel Squadron. The Enchantress, the Admiralty yacht, which is infrequently used, might, we should have now thought, have been utilised instead.

H.M.S. Hercules will take the place of H.M.S. Minotaur as flagship of the Channel Squadron. There will still be three perfectly obsolete ironclads in this command.

A correspondent reminds us that "the delay of weeks which has taken place between the commissioning of the ironclads Agamemnon and Dreadnought and their departure for sea, should convince the country of the small dependence that can be placed on ships of the First Reserve, and the total want of preparation that exists in our dockyards for war."

The Admiralty have decided to build a second torpedo cruiser, the Fearless, as sister-ship to the Scout. Each vessel is to be of 1,420 tons, and 3,200 horse-power.

Mr. James Cox, Paymaster, R.N., now acting as Secretary to Rear-Admiral Lethbridge at Queenstown, will, it is reported, be appointed Secretary to Admiral Phillimore, on his succeeding Admiral Sir Houston Stewart as Commander-in-Chief at Devonport.

The Austrian Minister of Marine lately declared his belief that the "torpedo-ram" was to be the war vessel of the future, and proceeded to ask, and obtained, sufficient funds to prepare for the coming monsters. General Newton, the Chief of the Engineers Corps, United States Army, says also:—"It is decided that the best gun of the future should be built up of steel in concentric tubes, or, as it now seems possible, of steel wire wound upon a steel tube and covered on the outside by tubes or jackets to afford longitudinal strength," and he goes on to ask, and will probably get, sufficient of the nearly £10,000,000 he wants to supply this "best modern type of gun;" and lastly, the Italian Government, after a costly series of experiments, have decided to adopt the "Schneider plate." Surely it is time that our own authorities came to some decision as to which of the above requirements they want, and took steps to obtain them without more delay?

It is strange the Admiralty do not send out armour-plated ships as flagships to the East Indies and the Cape, for at present that class of ship is entirely unrepresented on those stations.

An interesting letter from Admiral Elliot appeared in the Morning Post of the 19th inst., dealing with the City speeches delivered last week by Lord Northbrook and Sir Thomas Brassey, premising that from all quarters, and by all authorities, with the exception of the two Civil Lords of the Admiralty, the loss of our Naval supremacy has been fully admitted. He contrasts their "self-laudatory" utterances, containing "no acknowledgment of the great danger of our defenceless position, no expression of regret for past delinquencies, no promise of substantial reform," with the undisputed evidence of a contrary character which has lately filled the columns of the Press, and he believes that much disgust must naturally be felt in the Naval service at such an exhibition of "modern sophistical statesmanship." He considers, in view of Sir Thomas's assertion that Naval supremacy now exists, that the House of Commons should clearly define the numerical superiority which England is to possess in battle-ships over other Naval powers; and also answer the important question of whether the command of the Mediterranean and Suez Canal route in war time is to be secured, as that involves a much larger increase of our Navy than would otherwise be required. He concludes by asking that these matters be submitted to a joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament.

The Cobden Club have decided upon issuing immediately a new edition of Mr. Cobden's "The Three Panics," with a prefatory note in which the committee, "while admitting that the country requires our Fleet to be maintained in an efficient condition," desires to sound a note of warning against any hasty and ill-considered increase of our Naval estimates, and expresses its belief that the best security to our vast sea-going trade would be the adoption of the principle advocated by Mr. Cobden, that "all private property, not contraband of war, should be exempt from capture at sea." Considering that when Cobden wrote, our line-of-battle ships outnumbered those of France by nearly two to one, and we had 80,000 seamen afloat against 35,000 Frenchmen, and we spent £11,000,000 as against about £6,000,000 spent by France, whilst to-day France is almost equal to us in the number of her ships, superior to us in her guns, spends eight millions against our eleven, and has 66,000 seamen against 59,250 on board our ships, we are inclined to agree with the Pall Mall Gazette that "what the Cobden Club ought to do, if it is true to Cobden's principles, is to circulate broadcast 'The Truth about the Navy,' which is in reality the legitimate sequel to the obsolete publication of 1862."

A correspondent writes:—"Permit me to thank you for your excellent and courageous articles protesting against the fashionable doctrine that only public-school boys can make good officers. I have had considerable experience in the matter by this time, and have had many opportunities both as a regimental and Staff officer, and especially as a garrison-instructor, of observing and noting the different classes of officers. 'Woolwich and Sandhurst boys,' it may be said, 'often turn out excellent officers.' Yes; but they are not public-school boys. Lords Wolseley and Napier, Sir F. Roberts, General Gordon, and many others are not public-school men, and yet they have made good soldiers."

There are things some fellows can understand: other things no fellow can grasp; and among the latter, and not in the former category, must be put the rules, if any, and the principles (same hypothesis, please) on which the Queen's pleasure or approval of appointment is taken and announced in the Gazette. If, on the faith of universal report, or possibly of direct public statements, a man in the street turns in to the Horse Guards and asks when his brother-in-law, Sir Blank Charge—who has been appointed to command in the Pondo country—is to sail, he will probably be told by an urbane servant of the State that "nothing can be said on the subject," as the name has not "been sent back by the Queen," or "the name is still before the Queen;" but long after these stages of suspended powers and existence have been passed through, there are long delays before the Gazettes come out with the appointments, for which there appears to be no assignable reason. Whilst the Staff of Lord Wolseley are getting on half-way to Khartoum, the fact that they belong to the Staff at all is kept dark, and Lord Wolseley himself was in Egypt days before his appointment was gazetted in London. Now the names of his Staff are duly set. If they draw their pay only from the date of the Gazette, there would be good ground of complaint. It is no great matter or consequence perhaps, but the fashion is absurd, and it is not to the credit of those who have in hand the dispatch of public business. It is seldom, indeed, that the Queen queries an appointment or refuses a recommendation till better advised; but as her Majesty is the fountain of all honour, it would be well for the sake of appearances that these delays did not occur, or that the pretences which we have alluded to should be given up.

The payment of the indemnities awarded by a (very) mixed Commission to Egyptians, Europeans, &c., for the destruction of their property by the bombardment and by the soldiery and rabble of Alexandria when the defence was crushed, is matter of urgency; and the amount of these indemnities is no less than five-eighths of the £8,000,000 which is to be raised for the present necessities of Egypt,—that is, Egypt pays for the consequences of an act of war not declared, but nevertheless carried on against herself, a penalty of a very peculiar kind,—about £5,000,000. There was no declaration of war at all; but it was assumed that the Khedive, our ally, was under duress, and that he was virtually commanded by his Ministry; and to sustain him against them a fleet was sent to Alexandria to overawe the Egyptian Army and its leaders, without the request, leave, or licence of the sovereign of the country. The Egyptians very naturally set to work to strengthen the defences of the harbour which were under the guns of the fleet. In consequence of the refusal of the Egyptian Ministry to comply with certain demands for the disarmament and surrender of some of the works defending Alexandria, the fleet opened fire and silenced the batteries. But the refusal to disarm and surrender came from the Egyptian Government. It was given with the consent of the Khedive; it was by the Khedive's orders that the troops manned the batteries and fought them! Not only that—the Khedive, after Arabi had resolved that Alexandria was untenable, desired that the defence should be maintained; and it was in consequence of Arabi's retiring from the works, evacuating the city, and retreating to Kafr-el-Dowar, that the Khedive proclaimed Arabi to be a traitor. We are not aware of any previous case in which a country was made to pay its own subjects and to indemnify foreigners settled for losses sustained in consequence of warlike operations for which its Government was not responsible. We do not say there never have been such cases, but if there ever were such we are not aware of them; and we would feel obliged to any of our military jurists, like Dr. Franklyn, if they would state what the law of nations, if there be such a thing, has laid down in the premises. Mr. John Lemoinne has made an assertion ex-cathedrâ that the bombarding fleet could have averted the destruction by the landing of a detachment of sailors and marines, but no one who was on the spot would have counselled such a measure at the time; and although by what has been learned since it may be assumed that a force of a couple of thousand men could have been spared from the ships, we doubt if Nelson or any English Admiral would, under the circumstances in which Sir B. Seymour was placed, and in the state of his information respecting the city and the enemy, have dared to deplete his vessels, and to send his sailors and marines into such a city as Alexandria, when it was, for all he knew, in possession of a large army of soldiery and an immense hostile population.

Captain F. C. Morgan, R.A., Instructor of Gunnery at Shoeburyness, has just brought out a most excellent "Handbook of Army Matériel." The work is published by Clowes and Sons (Limited), Charing Cross, and is most carefully compiled. It should be in the hands of every artillery officer.

A correspondent writes:—"Passing through Leicester Square on Tuesday, I noticed a large number of men and boys waiting before the entrance to an office. On inquiry, I found that all these wanted to join the Cape Mounted Rifles, a corps which is once more being reorganised or re-formed. The great majority of the applicants were weedy youngsters, such as help to fill the muster-rolls of our 'Line battalions,' though they cannot fill even the small suits of uniform in which their appearance causes serious alarm to all who care for the safety and honour of the country. It was easy to distinguish those who had 'soldiered.' A fine-looking, smart fellow said he had served in the 56th, and an erect dapper man said he 'had done his 20 years, and wanted to go again.' I was told that some one came out of the office occasionally and selected old soldiers, preferably those who had served in the mounted branches, and stout men of not less than 5 ft. 8 in., and that the rest were not even looked at!"

The following are the items of the Estimate of the further amount that will be required during the year 1884-85, to meet the deficiencies in the Votes specified, caused by the additional expenditure arising from the Expedition up the Nile. Votes under which the amount will be accounted for:—Vote 1—General Staff and regimental charges, £100,000; Vote 4—Medical establishments and services, £15,000; Vote 9—Commissariat, Transport, and Ordnance Store establishments, wages, &c., £68,000; Vote 10—Provisions, forage, fuel, transport, and other services, £549,000; Vote 11—Clothing establishments, services, and supplies, £85,000; Vote 12—Supply, manufacture, and repair of warlike and other stores (£432,000), less sum to be appropriated from Vote of Credit (£300,000), £132,000; Vote 13—Works and buildings, £46,000; Vote 15—Miscellaneous services, £5,000; total, £1,000,000. Votes under which the amount will be accounted for in the case of the £675,000 required for the Bechuanaland Expedition will be as follows:—Vote 1—General Staff and regimental charges, £220,000; Vote 10—Provisions, forage, fuel, transport, and other services, £400,000; Vote 11—Clothing establishments, services, and supplies, £15,000; Vote 12—Supply, manufacture, and repair of warlike and other stores, £40,000; total, £675,000.

The Revue Scientifique publishes particulars respecting the employment of mountain artillery in Tonquin, which show some of the difficulties the French have had to surmount in their campaign. Two batteries of 8-centimètre (3·12-in.) guns, with 600 shot for each gun, were furnished by the War Minister to the Ministry of Marine. Their equipment consisted of 12 barrels, 14 gun-carriages, 260 ammunition and 28 store-boxes. The proportion of ammunition supplied was four shrapnels and one case-shot to each two shells. The men, drawn from the 12th Regiment of Artillery (Vincennes), for the two mountain-batteries, numbered 11 and 12 respectively, were trained for a fortnight before their embarkation (January, 1884) in serving, packing, and unpacking the guns. They were also exercised in carrying the latter in their arms, in view of the difficulties awaiting them in Tonquin. Thus, the guns of the 12th Battery, which had been brought on small junks as far as Haidzoung, had to be carried at once by the men, in the absence of mules, up to the citadel there, situated 4,920 feet above sea-level. Both batteries had all their material by March 1, even the harness, but no mules, in consequence of which the guns had to be dragged by the gunners and coolies on the march to Bacninh. This was effected in different ways by the two batteries. The 11th Battery sent the shafts back to the Reserve, fastened a bamboo across the block-trail, which was carried by two men, whilst a second bamboo was fastened with ropes to the carriage. Eight to 12 men (including relays) were required to drag the gun along, its muzzle pointing to the rear. The 12th Battery moved their guns, like wheelbarrows, with the muzzle forward, a man in the rear guiding the block-trail on the shaft by means of a strap, four men dragging the gun by ropes. For this mode of transport, three relays of five men each were required. The ammunition-boxes were carried by coolies; the 12th Battery, however, fastened one box to each gun with ropes. After a little training, guns moved in this manner made better progress than those of the Marine Artillery, which were drawn by horses, the narrow paths causing many stoppages. The difficult nature of the country required the most minute measures of precaution. The long range of the 8-centimètre guns, however, was a great protection against the enemy's fire, losses being much more frequent by over-fatigue than the latter. During the attack on the Do-Son Fort, the 12th Battery fired 110 shrapnels alone, the effect of which on the Chinese troops was excellent. A certain order was determined upon for later marches. The length of a battery column was 328 yards. Officers and sub-officers were on foot, whilst the men were eager in the performance of their several duties, consisting principally in dragging the guns, mending the roads, &c. The work to be done was most severe. Marches of 30 kilomètres (nearly 19 miles) had to be made in the most difficult country, up to the knees in water, or along slopes with an inclination of 30 degrees.

A correspondent raises a point which it would be well for the War Office to settle. It is this:—"Some years ago," he says, "I left the Militia service, and was gazetted out with permission to 'continue to wear the uniform of the regiment.' This was then a Rifle uniform, but under the new arrangement the corps has now become a Fusilier regiment. Moreover, since my resignation a special uniform has been prescribed for officers who have left the Militia with permission to retain their rank. I wish to know, then, what uniform I ought to wear when attending a levée,—whether my old Rifle uniform, or that which is now the regulation for my old regiment, or the 'prescribed uniform' which has been devised for retired officers." The present regulations are certainly very vague on the subject, and as there are many officers in the same position as our correspondent, a line or two in General Orders would set the matter right.

We note that tardy justice has at last been accorded to the few remaining Staff Officers of Pensioners as regards rank. By Army Circular 203 of the current month, a new paragraph (123-I.) is added to the Royal Warrant of June 10, 1884. It is to the following effect, and made retrospective from July 1, 1881:—"Staff Officers of Pensioners shall be granted honorary rank as follows: as Major after 20 years' service on full pay, and as Lieutenant-Colonel after seven years' service on full pay, with the brevet or honorary rank of Major." As the duties of Staff Officers of Pensioners and of officers of the Army Pay Department are analogous, we hope this concession of the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel to the former indicates that the authorities are prepared to include in the Estimates for the next financial year the paltry sum (about £140 per annum) necessary if the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel is granted to a dozen or 15 of the senior Staff Paymasters in the latter department. It has always been a matter of surprise to us that the Royal Warrant which assigned (in May, 1883) two ranks, Colonel and Lieutenant-Colonel, to Chief Paymasters, and two ranks, Captain and Major, to Paymasters, left the Staff Paymasters, who come in medias res, with only one rank, that of Major. Officers in the Commissariat, Ordnance, and Medical Departments, holding the same relative positions, have the two ranks, Lieutenant-Colonel and Major, for the analogous grade. Why not the Pay Department? As regards length of service, the first 20 Staff Paymasters vary between 40 and 20 years' service, and average over 27 years' service. Assistant-Commissaries-General in the Commissariat and Ordnance average about the same; and, of course, combatant Lieutenant-Colonels attain the rank years before,—Infantry officers in about 23¼ years, and Cavalry in about 20½ years. It has been rumoured that an officer in a high position objected to Staff Paymasters in Regimental Districts being Lieutenant-Colonels. This we can hardly put much credence in, as for many months three or four officers have been employed, retired officers of the Department who hold that rank in Regimental Districts. But even if such was the case, there would be no difficulty in allotting the senior Staff Paymasters holding the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel to General, Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and other District posts, irrespective of the 62 Regimental Districts. It is to be hoped, therefore, that this small matter of Lieutenant-Colonel's rank for a few of the senior Staff Paymasters will not be lost sight of in the Army Estimates now being prepared for the year 1885-6.

As it has been decided that the number of boys allowed to regiments shall be fixed, and not dependent upon the regimental establishment, special authority for the enlistment of qualified boys is no longer necessary. Such enlistments will in future be carried out by officers commanding regiments, battalions, or, on the application of these officers, by officers commanding regimental districts, auxiliary artillery districts, and assistant-adjutant-generals of recruiting districts. The total number of boys allowed for the Regular Army is 627, distributed as follows:—Training as bandsmen, drummers, &c., 401; tailors, 196, telegraphists, 30. The consent of the boys' parents or guardians is to be obtained in each case before enlistment, and no boy is to be enlisted who does not give fair promise of becoming, when he has attained the proper age, an effective soldier. The selection of boys for the Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and Departmental Corps rests with the deputy-adjutant-general or staff officer of the corps, whose authority will, therefore, be obtained in each case before a boy is enlisted for these arms of the service.

The Canadian Government has received the thanks of the Colonial Office for services rendered in connection with the Nile expedition.

Some new regulations have just been issued to the French Infantry, the nature of which may be gathered from the following extracts from the columns of L'Armée Française:—"Thank God, safety is no longer to be sought in open order and dispersion, which were carried to excess, and this at a moment when all the armies of Europe, and especially that of Germany, gave up the practice of searching order in disorder, and were intent on 'tightening the cords' which place the troops under the control of their chief." What the new regulations chiefly aim at is the abolition of a system of independent warfare, which consisted in getting under shelter and remaining there. Article 450 says:—"The art of taking advantage of the ground is simply a means; the real object of an engagement is to break the enemy, and to overcome, at no matter what price, all resistance." The next article sets forth that,—"A brave infantry, energetically commanded, can march under the hottest fire, even against well-defended entrenchments, and seize upon them." Another article directs that in the open country no skirmisher is to lie down without orders. It was one of the maxims of Napoleon that the best way to avoid being killed was to kill your enemies. The new regulations agree with this maxim, and think that the best way to carry it out is to attack boldly, and instead of indulging in independent potting from a sheltered spot always difficult to leave.

The Simla manœuvres, it seems, have fallen through. There has been a considerable amount of sickness among the troops who were to have attacked the summer capital; and in view of the uncertainty of the weather, and the fact that the troops were to have taken no tents with them, the idea has been abandoned.

General Cosseron de Villenoisy has just contributed half-a-dozen columns to the Débats on the subject of the French Army. After a few preliminary remarks, he observes that the war estimates have increased in an alarming fashion since the fall of the Empire. For 1871 the ordinary budget for the Army, voted in 1870, amounted to 371,551,177 fr., and the extraordinary to 2,870,000 fr.; total, 374,421,177 fr., say £15,000,000. How do the figures stand to-day? The Republican estimates for 1885 show an ordinary expenditure of 596,306,230 fr., and an extraordinary expenditure of 85,000,000; total, 681,306,230 fr., say £27,000,000. And the probability is that if certain projects for the formation of a Colonial Army be carried out, this sum will be greatly exceeded, and the military expenditure of France will be double that of the last year of the Empire. With all this, says the General, it does not appear that there will be any great increase in the effective next year. For 1871, the estimates provided for 400,000 men and 88,154 horses. The proposed strength of the Army for 1885 is 524,000 men and 130,646 horses; but a considerable portion of this increase would not be available in the event of a European war. The General deducts 5,700 soldiers' children, and the corps detached to Tunis and Tonquin, also 40,000 men absent from various causes; and if to these be added men liberated before the expiration of their term of service, he finds that the effective strength of the Army at home does not exceed that of 15 years ago. And yet the country has to pay 307 million francs more than under the Empire. This is what has happened in the way of augmentation, in round numbers. The Gendarmerie, which is a military institution, and is under the Minister of War, has been raised from 22,000 to 27,000 men; the Infantry, from 250,000 to 280,000; the Cavalry, from 61,000 to 67,000; the Artillery, from 36,000 to 69,000; the Engineers, from 9,000 to 11,000; the "Administration," from 8,000 to 18,000. According to the General, the increase in the Infantry is more apparent than real; a great number of non-combatants have been added to the force, and 3,300 serjeant-majors have been disarmed, and instead of shouldering the rifle have to carry huge registers. The augmentation in the Cavalry is also a fiction, so many men being employed in training young horses, which were formerly trained in the remount depôts. The increase in the Engineers is due to the creation of two battalions of railway men. "The increase in the administration," adds the General, "is enormous, and by no means justified." This is probably due to political or electoral causes, and a pretty general desire not to serve in the fighting portion of the Army. The writer condemns these bloated armaments, and says that the effective might easily be reduced by 24,000 men and 10,000 horses, which would be very advantageous for the taxpayer and the agriculturist. One of the plague-spots in the Army, he tells us, is the exaggerated development of schools which are not only costly, but absorb a great number of officers and men. As regards these schools, the General would abolish those for soldiers' children, because they are too expensive, and because he scouts the idea of training children to be non-commissioned officers and to command men. Maturity, tact, and experience are required for command. He afterwards draws attention to the "School of War," which, he says, has been got up regardless of expense, the permanent staff amounting to three times the number of pupils, each of whom consequently costs the State £400 a year! Among other items of the Budget to which General de Villenoisy objects is £1,200 for spectacles and wooden legs. He also observes that the number of pensioners is on the increase, and that the country has still to pay Egyptians who followed the fortunes of General Buonaparte on the banks of the Nile. The writer in the Débats would hardly advise the War Minister to cease paying the pensions of these venerable men, who appear to have escaped the massacre of the Mamelukes, which took place after the fall of the First Empire. Altogether, General de Villenoisy thinks that the French War Estimates might be reduced to the extent of 140,000,000fr.

It appears that the French Government intend creating a Colonial Army on the volunteer system, the inducement to join being smart-money and extra pay. The volunteers, if such be found, will serve from 21 to 36 years of age, and each man will cost the country an extra 2,547 fr. 50 c. If volunteers do not come forward, then the War Minister will take men from the annual contingent, which will be the obligatory volunteer system. Non-commissioned officers serving their country in foreign climes will be rewarded for their patriotism by receiving, at the expiration of their term of service, a civil service appointment or a patch of land,—in the Colonies.

Sir Henry Fletcher did good service to the Medical Staff of the Army by his question eliciting from the Secretary of State for War the fact that Surgeons-Majors of over 50 years of age will be examined, that there is no precedent for such examinations (we should think not), and that they have been instituted on the recommendation of the Director-General, in the teeth of the opinion of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. We must congratulate the Surgeons-Major in so far having carried their point, that the objectionable proposal to examine them in medicine and surgery has been abandoned. We would, however, now point out that the Circular instituting these examinations was published on August 1 last, three and a-half months ago, and that up to the present not a single particle of information has been given to those concerned as to when the examination is to take place. At the present moment, there are some nine or ten steps due, and the senior officers are losing pay and pension in consequence of not being promoted. The Secretary of State for War was only able to give one excuse for these examinations,—the difficulty of selection! We would ask—Is it more difficult to select a Medical officer for promotion to Brigade-Surgeon than to select for command of a regiment or division? Certainly it is an extraordinary admission on the part of the Director-General to make that he cannot believe his own administrative officers. Is there anything else behind?

Referring to a possible arrangement between France and China on the basis of the Tientsin treaty, and a small indemnity for the soldiers slaughtered at Bac-Lé, the Progrès Militaire writes:—"This is, perhaps, not all that we expected from an expedition which has already cost us so many millions and so many men, and for which new and important credits are at present demanded. On Saturday the Government asked for a sum of about £150,000 to pay for the cost of sending out reinforcements, while a short time ago the Tonquin Committee passed a vote in favour of over £500,000 being laid out in the creation of a new body of troops and the despatch of four cruisers." The Progrès hints that the country is tired of seeing these sums engulphed in distant expeditions undertaken by a nation which has no taste for colonisation. The same paper then adds the following curious bit of information, which shows that the sins of the late Empire were not buried with it, and that money voted for one purpose is still at times applied to others. It seems that the Minister of War has asked for a sum of £200,000 to cover expenses incurred in 1882! The four cruisers referred to above are the Canton, a very fine vessel launched in 1882, and the Cholon, Cheribon, and Chaudernagor, built in England.

The French appear to be getting more and more dissatisfied with the Tonquin Expedition. Admiral Courbet says that he is worn-out with fatigue; that the weather is too bad for him to attack Tamsui from the sea; that blockade-runners are making their appearance; that some of his ships want repair; that he requires 5,000 troops, and a Brigadier-General. With all this, General Campenon wants 16,000,000 fr. now, and 40,000,000 fr. for next year. In Tonquin, the French troops seem to have suffered from typhoid-fever and from heat, which is now declining. General Brière de l'Isle desires rations for 20,000 men—15,000 Europeans and 6,000 native troops, and 1,000 Blue-jackets. One French military writer puts the matter thus as regards the difficulty with China:—"1. The Chinese augment their forces in a proportion of four to one by degrees as we send reinforcements. The Chinese will muster 60,000 men when we muster 15,000. 2. The blockade of Formosa is useless, and has the inconvenience of immobilising 24 ships. 3. This state of affairs is in favour of China. 4. Were we to take Tamsui and Kelung, we should possess only an insignificant part of a country not to be occupied. 5. It would require 15,000 men and two years to take Formosa." Some gloomy prognostics are no doubt due to political passion; but the discouragement extends so far that some persons consider that M. Jules Ferry, with his colonial mania, is endangering the very existence of the Republic.

ARMY NOTES.

The British force in Egypt numbers 16,000 men, of whom over 9,000 are at or south of Assouan. The concentration of the troops employed in the Expedition will be effected at Debbeh.

The Times says:—"It is understood that, on the arrival home from India of Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught in April next, he will be promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general, and be appointed to the Staff at Army Head-quarters."

According to information which has reached Meshed, Col. Ridgway and the Indian section of the Afghan Frontier Commission have arrived at Kusan, on the Heri-Rud, all safe. They have probably before this time encountered Sir Peter Lumsden and the European contingent advancing from Meshed.

The bounty of 120 rupees for soldiers who volunteer to remain in India for ten years is still open. A Circular has been issued sanctioning this bounty on the old conditions until April 1 next.

There are serious signs of disaffection in the Turkish Army in consequence of its being deprived of pay and clothing. A recent traveller from Asia Minor states that many soldiers were without shoes, and were dependent for their clothing on what they could obtain from the inhabitants. Throughout the empire they are everywhere many months in arrear.

According to Gen. Torré's annual report on the Italian Army, the number of officers and men enrolled in the various branches of the service on June 30 was 3,250,000. Of these, about 900,000 belonged to the permanent Army, 350,000 to the movable Militia, and 2,000,000 to the territorial Militia.

An official at Milbank Prison, of an inquiring turn of mind, and being surprised at the large number of soldiers undergoing imprisonment for desertion (616), has managed to ascertain from each individual the causes that led him to be at present unable to change his residence, disagreeable though he finds it. Of these 616, 48 deserted through annoyance from comrades and harsh treatment by non-commissioned officers and others; one from marriage without leave; 114 from drink; 161 dislike of the Army; 72 persuasion by comrades or bad company; 12 refusal of leave; 100 to better themselves; 51 through going on the "spree," stopping over time, and not liking to return; 41 were absent, but did not mean to desert; and 16 ran away through debt.

According to a telegram from Mandalay, King Theebaw is represented to have expressed his satisfaction at the recent demonstration at Rangoon to protest against the Mandalay massacres, and to have declared that he had been longing since his accession to the throne to test the British strength. It is also asserted that the King has been assured by French residents in Mandalay that there is no reason to fear the English, who have too much on their hands at present in connection with the delimitation of the Afghan frontier, the Nile expedition, and another war impending in South Africa. It is understood that the majority of the Burmese Ministers are desirous of sending an embassy to the Indian Government. The Kachyen tribe are massing in the vicinity of Bhamo, and have announced their intention of attacking the town as soon as their preparations are complete. [We do not attach any importance to these reports, which we believe utterly untrustworthy.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

A telegram dated Teheran, Nov. 18, says:—"It is reported that Gen. Zelenoy, the Russian Chief Commissioner on the Afghan Boundary Commission, will not arrive at Sarakhs before the end of December. He is at present at Tiflis."

A telegram from Calcutta announces that "the Zhob Valley Force has been divided into two columns. One of these is returning to India by way of Dular. The other, with Sir O. Tanner and the Political Agents, is to march east, through the Khibzai and Musa Kheyl countries. All are expected to be back at home at the end of the present month."

It is announced that consequent on the appearance of a few Chinese blockade-runners of Formosa, Admiral Courbet has been obliged to extend the line of position of his squadron, and to remain on the defensive until the arrival of reinforcements.

Reviews.

With Hicks Pasha in the Soudan. By Colonel the Hon. J. Colborne. (Smith, Elder, and Co.)

Nothing can be more opportune than the publication of Colonel Colborne's account of the Sennaar Campaign in 1883, more particularly as its appearance authoritatively denies the truth of the rumour that this gallant officer had died at Dongola, the fact being that he is at this very moment in or about Debbeh, in good health and spirits. On the morning of February 17, 1883, the following party left Cairo for the front,—General Hicks Pasha, Colonel De Coetlogon, Colonel Colborne, Major Massey, Captain Martin Warner, Captain Farquhar, Lieutenant Evans, and Surgeon Rosenberg; Forestier-Walker being left behind to bring up the Gatlings. Every one was in high spirits, eagerly looking forward to the campaign, and little dreaming that only three of that devoted band would return from the Soudan. But so it was, and the annihilation of Hicks's entire army is read of even now by some with wondering sadness, by others almost with incredulity. The departure was a hurried one, and many inconveniences were submitted to; while gloomy forebodings as to the enterprise were freely indulged in in Cairo. Among those who came to say "God speed" were Baker Pasha and his brother, Sir Samuel. On the day previous the party were presented to the Khedive. Suakim was reached after three days' steaming, where the party was received by the Governor "with pomp and circumstance." Colonel Colborne writes very pleasantly about his experience:—

> "Suakim, until recently the principal port for the exportation of slaves, is likely, within a brief period, to become noted for more legitimate enterprise. Many English merchants are established there, and a French gentleman, M. Marquet, is erecting a ginning-house for the preparation of cotton growing within 15 leagues, and from his own statement he looks forward to retiring with a fortune in five or six years. Some Englishmen are also planning a line of rail to Berber, the Nile port which communicates with Khartoum. Should this work be carried out, the capital of the Soudan would be reached in six days, instead of from 15 to 20, the time now taken by the desert route and river. Swift dromedaries can travel from Suakim to Berber in an average of 15 days. Under existing circumstances, reinforcements for the Soudan will take a month between Suez and Khartoum."

Colonel Colborne thus expresses his opinion of the Soudan:—"The Soudan is a magnificent country, and it must never be allowed to relapse into slavery, but rather every effort must be made to back the Khedive's civilising influence." We must hurry on to scenes of active operations. At the battle of Marabia the undaunted bravery and reckless confidence exhibited by the enemy is described. "And what gallant men they were! Right up to the cannon's mouth, right up to the rifle muzzle, dauntlessly they rode. Onward they came, waving their banners inscribed with the Mahdi's own rendering of the Koran; but the Khedive's troops, encouraged by their English officers, had no fear." On May 1, Captain Massey, cousin of General Lord Clarina, commanding the Dublin District, was left behind by General Hicks to reconnoitre, with five Soudanese irregulars. They bolted, and Captain Massey proceeded alone, taking with him an Egyptian staff officer, Lieutenant Ali. After a few hours Captain Massey dismounted, afflicted with a raging thirst. He could only say, "We are close to the Nile; give me some water." The young Egyptian behaved most nobly. Captain Massey ordered him to leave, but he refused until he failed to find a pulse or detect the slightest breath of life. He at length left to seek for help. About 7 p.m., Captain Massey awoke from his long swoon, made a few more efforts to travel on, which were all in vain; he fell again, but finally was rescued by friendly Arabs who had been sent to search the desert for him. A few months later Captain Massey fell with his General at Kashgate. Of the terrible finale, Colonel Colborne thus speaks:—"One morning I am standing on the steps of Shepheard's Hotel. A little billet is put into my hand. It runs thus simply,—'Hicks's Army annihilated.'" "Of that last band of Englishmen who rode side by side through the Nubian desert, but three remain,—De Coetlogon, Martin, and myself, the last of an army of 12,000." (sic.)

Notwithstanding the number of years which have passed away since the suppression of the Indian Mutiny, a melancholy interest continues to be attached to it which may be termed almost unparalleled. The author of the work now published held, in 1857, the important position of "Magistrate of Muttra," a large city in upper India, situated on the high-road from Agra to Delhi. Those who have read with attention a work published by Mr. W. Tayler, Commissioner of Patna, can easily imagine the supreme importance and responsibility which in those troubled times attached themselves to the office of "magistrate" or "commissioner." The former of these writers was forced by circumstances which could not be avoided to enter on a tedious and complicated war with the magnates who then ruled in the India Office,—and even now, perhaps, we have not heard the last of this protracted struggle. In the latter case, the author did not take up his pen till long after the suppression of the Mutiny, and did so then from a feeling that the story he could tell of what he witnessed and knew would form a useful contribution to events which have since then become matter of history, and many of which have passed without record. Mr. Thornhill commences his contributions with a graphic description of the first phases of the Mutiny. At the end of January, 1857, he had returned from a short tour, and on proceeding to his office found four little cakes laid on the table, dirty little cakes of the coarsest flour, about the size and thickness of a biscuit. A man had come to a village and given a cake to the watchman, with injunctions to bake four like it, to distribute them to the watchmen of the adjacent villages, and to desire them to do the same. On the following day the news came into circulation that the cakes were being distributed in the same manner over all Upper India. An inquiry was held; nothing transpired, and all seemed forgotten, save by those who remembered that a similar distribution of cakes had been made in Madras towards the end of the last century, and had been followed by the Mutiny of Vellore. These cakes were the famous "chapatties." Mr. Thornhill tells his narrative in a manner so entirely free from a straining after effect, that his readers gradually become satisfied that his is a truthful story. In the first half-dozen chapters the reader will find described the events which took place when it had become morally certain that the commencement of the Mutiny was an accomplished fact, and that it was hourly gaining in its proportions. We also learn of the assembling of the Army, the march to Delhi, the mutiny of the guard, "rural disturbances," and "the flight to Agra." These events are cleverly described, one of the most curious and amusing being the visit paid to the great bankers, "the Seths," by the author and his friends. It is strikingly illustrative of the extreme simplicity of the habits of life of even the wealthiest Hindoos.

> "Our hosts were the richest men in India; they maintained an army of servants, they possessed whole chests of gold and jewels, and they resided in a house which for size and architectural beauty would compare with the palaces of the nobles of Europe. But in ordering our dinner I found that they were destitute of what to us are the most ordinary conveniences,—they had neither plates nor dishes, nor beyond a few teacups did their house contain either glass or china of any description. The supply of food was equally limited in variety. We had to make our meal on rice and coarse cakes of unleavened flour, and they were so saturated with oil and some perfume that it was with difficulty I could swallow a few mouthfuls. They could supply us with no drink but water and milk that had been simmered over a fire, and which had in the process acquired an overpowering flavour of smoke. There was no tea and no kettle, but there was an immense teapot of solid silver."

The author devotes several pages of the 11th chapter of his book to a description of Muttra, a city "full of temples," and remarkable as being the residence of the "Seth" family. The extraordinary prosperity that attended its members seemed to be miraculous, and is minutely detailed in the chapter referred to. The house they occupied contained hardly any furniture, but the jewels they possessed passes conception:—

> "Its vaults were crammed with stores of gold and silver. They had necklaces of emeralds, each stone the size of a large marble, enormous pearls, a ring of which the hoop and signet were cut out of a single ruby, a table-diamond about an inch and a half long, of proportionate depth, and smaller stones without number. The most precious ornaments were reserved for the women, but were never seen. Among them, however, was a small idol, carved out of a single emerald."

In the 13th chapter the author briefly describes the Kotah Contingent, which was under the command of Capt. Dennys, and had been sent to Muttra, ostensibly to restore order, really that it might be outside Agra and yet within call till the authorities there could make up their minds about admitting it. In the meantime, the contingent remained with the author, who thus describes the curious life they led:—

> "It was a life very quiet yet full of excitement. We received few letters, no newspapers, except by vague report, we heard little of what was going on beyond the horizon around us. This absence of news did not greatly trouble us. My interests were well nigh absorbed in the district, that of Capt. Dennys and his officers in their regiment. It was touching to see their confidence in their men, their pride in the fidelity they had as yet displayed, their trustfulness in their fidelity for the future. It was a confidence which I soon came to share, not from knowledge or conviction, simply from the effect of association. I had been warned against both the Sepoys and the troopers; the warnings which came from the most respectable and reliable of the natives had so far affected me, that on first joining the contingent I always went armed. At Captain Dennys's request and under the influence of his example I ere long, like him and his officers, laid my arms aside. He said, 'If the men are loyal, weapons are unnecessary; if they mutiny, weapons will not avail us.' So he and his officers lived among their soldiers unarmed, defenceless, and what they did, did all the other officers of the Indian Army. I think now that in doing so they were mistaken, but surely history records little more calmly heroic."

The author thus continues:—

> "Occasionally we heard sounds of firing in the daytime, but it was firing of a different kind—the dull boom of distant artillery. Where these sounds came from we could never ascertain; there were no armies near that possessed cannon; currents of air must have carried the reports from immense distances. The origin of the cannonading was, however, discovered to be nearer home. It would be thought that no two sounds could be more unlike than the report of a cannon and the noise of a horse shaking himself; nevertheless, it is almost impossible to distinguish between this last sound and that of distant artillery."

At length this state of repose was altered. The approach of the enemy was made known, and a state of excitement ensued. This was increased by the arrival of a dispatch to Captain Dennys, directing him to intercept, if possible, a certain body of mutineers. The author takes this opportunity of showing how the contingent appeared on the line of march, and at the same time describing what may be highly interesting to some future military historian, "for the Indian Army as it then existed is a thing of the past."

Handbook of Artillery Matériel. By F. C. Morgan. (Wm. Clowes and Sons, Limited.)—This is a useful little work on the subject of ordnance, ammunition, carriages, &c., and stores used in the service of artillery. The author deserves commendation for this useful compendium, and the large number of plates (19) with which it is illustrated.

A Vocabulary for the Lower-Standard in Hindustani. By P. Mulvihill. (W. H. Allen and Co.)—There can be no doubt of the value of a compilation such as this. It will lighten the task of many officers, and thus, perhaps, enable them to acquire a complete knowledge of Hindustani without labouring for years.

Persian for Travellers. By Alexander Finn. (Trübner and Co.)—Although the compiler says, "This is a work of no pretensions," the advantages it offers to students and travellers are too palpable to be questioned.

Harper's Magazine. The Christmas number of Harper's Magazine is a work of rare merit, both as regards its engravings and its letter-press. It contains a large number of stories and other contributions which are fully up to the standard of this admirable publication. The gem of the number is unquestionably the frontispiece, in which is represented "The Boy Jesus in the Temple." This work of high art has been engraved by W. B. Glosson from the painting by Professor T. M. Heinrich Hoffman of Dresden.

Cassell's Saturday Journal for the Homes of the People has just been published in annual form, and makes a splendid volume. It contains a vast amount of literature which will give joy to, and excite wonder in, very many youthful bosoms this coming Christmas.

THE MEDICAL STAFF.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The Army Medical Officers (or at least some of them) having at their own request become thoroughly departmentalised, are now discontented with their unified title, and are yapping to be designated "Royal." There is an inconsistency in this altogether incompatible with the language employed by the more zealous of the reformers before the change took place. They abused the old regimental system and their confrères who adhered to it. They were intolerant of their subordinate position to the commanding officer. They complained that their independence was shackled, and that if freer their recommendations would carry greater weight, and contribute more to the well-being of the soldier, and further, that unification would exalt them in the social scale. Their separation from their combatant friends is now complete. They are thoroughly under War Office control, and may they enjoy it! I am one of those who have maintained, and still maintain, that every one of the advantages which have accrued in connection with recent changes could have resulted and be carried out as efficiently without severing the regimental connection between the executive medical officers and the Army. These ideas may be erroneous, but as long as I indulge in them I respectfully subscribe myself a believer in the OLD REGIME.

Capt. Guien has been appointed to the command of the Duguay-Tronin of the French Squadron in China, in place of Capt. Muret de Pagnac, who has just been promoted Rear-Admiral. Capt. Le Pontois, second of the Villars, has been appointed to the Chateau Renaud.

The Reindeer, new composite gun-vessel of six guns, will, we understand, be shortly commissioned to relieve the Arab on the East Indies station.

The Ruby, 12 guns, unarmoured composite corvette, at Chatham, is ordered to be ready for foreign service by Dec. 30.

A Lay-Haight torpedo, which is to be submitted to Government for approval, is at present being manufactured in Hartford, Conn. A torpedo of this class was tried successfully some time ago in the Bosphorus. The Lay-Haight torpedo is a cigar-shaped vessel 30 ft. long, and about 30 in. in diameter in its central and largest part. It carries a charge of explosive in its forward end, sufficient to blow to pieces the largest and strongest ironclad afloat. In the after compartment and amidship are placed the generator, the engine, the steering apparatus, and the propeller shaft, and at the outer end the propeller. Adjustable rudders determine the depth under water, and direct the course of the torpedo. One of these destroyers can be sent from the shore or from an anchored ship a distance from a mile to two miles, being guided in its course by the operator, at the fixed starting-point, by means of wires and electricity. The new torpedo is being made of sheet copper instead of sheet steel, the material of which most of the Lay-Haight torpedoes have hitherto been constructed. The engines which are to drive the propeller are six in number, or rather the engine is a group of six cylinders working synchronously with a speed that will develop about 1,000 revolutions of the screw propeller per minute. It is calculated, and confidently believed, that the velocity of this torpedo will be almost, if not quite, 20 miles an hour, or about a distance of two miles in six minutes. The motive-power of the engine is carbonic acid gas.

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF THE ARMY.

Slowly and by degrees the British Army—at least, such a portion of it as is contained within the four seas of Great Britain—is waxing smaller and beautifully less. On the despatch of the Egyptian Expeditionary Corps, the regiments called upon for service were recruited up to their full standard, or as high as was found necessary, by the linked battalions being stripped of their best men, and in some cases by volunteers from other regiments being called for. This we may consider as the first process of denudation. The next step is one which is far more important, and is one which will be found to have exercised a very marked and prejudicial influence over the morale of the Army generally. On Lord Wolseley reaching Egypt he found it necessary to select a picked body of men for the Camel Corps. He knew perfectly well that the state of the home regiments was such that no single battalion or regiment could be depended upon to give him exactly what he wanted. He therefore sent for a detachment of 44 men each from all the cavalry regiments at home, and also from each regiment of the Foot Guards. Of course, Lord Wolseley was aware that the latter was probably the only branch of the home army that could spare 40 or 50 men from each regiment without serious difficulties arising. The cream, therefore, of the cavalry regiments and of the Foot Guards was swept away to form a camel corps, naturally reducing the average quality of the men left behind. We now find that a corps of irregular cavalry is to be formed for service in Bechuanaland, and that it is proposed to locate a remount establishment at the Cape. This necessarily demands men and horses. Invitations are being issued to the cavalry to furnish shoeing-smiths, farriers, &c., for the purpose of working this remount station. We learn also that a detachment of picked signallers from the Foot Guards are to be selected and sent out for South African duty. The ordinary medical staff corps is reported to have at least one-third of its strength in Egypt at the present moment, and so strained are the resources of this branch of the Army that it has been found necessary to make demands upon the militia, so as to provide some kind of reserve in case of future contingencies. Thus we find, little by little, that the very best men of all branches of the Service are gradually being picked out for service both in Egypt and the Cape, with what result upon what we may call the residuum may easily be imagined. Now, let us suppose (and we do so with bated breath) that some slight European complication should arise, or even that it became necessary to strengthen the garrisons in Ireland by three or four regiments. What position would Great Britain be in, and what kind of a show could she make, unless, driven at last by stern necessity, the Government reluctantly embodied a dozen or so regiments of militia? We are drifting rapidly in this direction, and it is very easy to see that, with the slightest extra pressure at any point, or the least mishap or temporary check in any part of the globe, our present system of military organisation will tumble down like a house of cards. It is the duty of the Secretary of State for War, under these circumstances, to review the situation, and on the facts being as we have stated, place the matter unflinchingly before the Cabinet as a matter of public policy.—Volunteer Service Review.

THE GANGES COURT-MARTIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Without questioning the justice of the sentence on Mr. Edward Robinson, the late Paymaster of the Ganges, I cannot help, as one having some knowledge, expressing an opinion that an accountant officer of a training ship, in the face of the extra duties (duties, I may add, without emolument, and interminable and ever increasing), connected with the boys, cannot personally check everything, or rather he must trust to the loyalty of his subordinates, though it is undoubtedly his duty to see that a system of cross-checking is carried out, and that the steward does not delegate his duty. If this watching of the steward be carried to a cat-and-mouse degree, the quasi-responsible officer (who should be more acknowledged) loses his self-respect, while the paymaster has to neglect the other and really more important interests connected with the health and welfare of the boys.—I am, &c.,

RINQUIDOTTE.

Orders have been received at Devonport that the Black Prince is to be ready to hoist the pennant on April 30 next, as flagship of the Channel Squadron.

A large quantity of a new pattern star-shell is being sent out to Egypt. These, exploding over the enemy's position at night, will light it up, and expose it in all its details.

Mr. Marriott's proposal to meet the expenses of an increase of the Naval Forces by a temporary suspension of the Sinking Fund will not be supported by the Conservative leaders.

HOGE'S HOREHOUND HONEY.—What is known as the "Bee Belt" of Southern California is one continuous bed of honey-bloom, one sweet bee-garden throughout its entire length; but there is one part of it which the plough has not yet invaded, that is the region where the Horehound plant flourishes in one glorious blaze of purple and gold. The tropical luxuriance of these plants is so profuse that they brush against the feet at every step, and close over them as if you were wading in liquid gold. The air is sweet with its fragrance, and tuneful with the humming wings of the bees gathering this precious panacea: this honey-full horehound is a great favourite with the bees, and is one perpetual feast for them. They revel in its bloom long after the flowers of other countries have withered and gone to seed. A single plant will at times be visited by a whole hive of bees at once; the grand hum of such a multitude of wings impresses the listener with the fact that the winning of more than ordinary honey is going on. The product of a dozen or two of these plants is sufficient for the wants of a whole hive. In this perfect paradise for bees the petals of the continuous sheet of blooms drink in the vital sunbeams, and the bees hug this favourite flower with profound cordiality, and push their blunt polleny faces against them, like babies on their mother's bosom; and fondly, too, with eternal love, does Mother Nature clasp her small bee babies and suckle them, multitudes at once, on her warm Californian breast. The Horehound Honey so gathered by these little almoners of Nature is put up in bottles, and retailed by all Chemists, &c., at 1s 1½d each. W. L. Bright, Esq., son of the Right Hon. John Bright, M.P., says:—"Hoge's Horehound Honey cured his father of a bad cough."

ROYAL HORSE GUARDS. The Committee of the Royal Humane Society has unanimously awarded its medallion to Trooper J. Dawkins, attached to the Heavy Division of the Camel Corps, for a gallant attempt to save Trooper Clements on the 14th ult. in the Nile at Assiout. It appears that on the day in question the man fell into the river from a boat towing astern of a barge on which troops were proceeding up the river. The current was very strong, and Clements, though able to swim a little, only rose once to the surface, owing to the under-tow. Dawkins, without any hesitation, jumped overboard, but after remaining in the water several minutes could not find any trace of the drowning man, and was unable to rescue him. Dawkins was much exhausted by his exertions, and was picked up soon afterwards.

6TH DRAGOONS. Lieut.-Col. Wirgman, formerly of the regiment, died at 4 Hyde Park Mansions, on the 4th inst., in his 76th year.

3RD HUSSARS. Capt. Barlow, quartermaster of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, and formerly of the regiment, died suddenly at Banstead Railway-station, on the 12th inst., aged 58 years.

11TH HUSSARS. A correspondent of the Times writes:—"An unkind fortune has decreed the cutting-short of a life of promise by the murder of Col. Donald Stewart, now confirmed beyond the reach of doubt. He leaves behind him a name that will be remembered for the high courage and signal devotion to duty with which at a moment's notice he undertook a task of extreme danger and apparent hopelessness. The writer of these lines had the good fortune to possess the intimate friendship of Gen. Gordon, and an acquaintance with Col. Stewart, to which the latter officer's admiration of Gen. Gordon, long before they knew one another, lent an unusual significance. Of Col. Stewart's energy and skill in supplementing Gen. Gordon's exertions in defending Khartoum there can be no doubt. The strength and simplicity of Col. Stewart's character are shown most clearly by the unhesitating manner in which he at once placed himself at the service of the officer under whose orders, by a chain of unique and fortuitous circumstances, he found himself called upon to serve. Other men who had written what was considered the Report on the Soudan, would have chafed at a position of subordination, and would have wished to carry out their own views; but Col. Stewart was at all times content to be the lieutenant of Gen. Gordon. His loss to the now solitary defender of Khartoum will, therefore, be the more irreparable. Col. Stewart leaves a name, rather than the material for a biographical sketch; and perhaps it is well that it is so, although too many recent instances have occurred among Englishmen of fates similar to those which befell Stoddart and Conolly 40 years ago, in the Wells of Bokhara. But surely sufficient sacrifice has now been made to the policy of tergiversation and procrastination in the land of the Pharaohs. The name of Stewart is added to the names of Gill and Palmer; and England is the poorer by the loss of a subject who combined the simple faith of a soldier with something of the enthusiasm of a paladin of romance." The minstrel troupe has just given the first of a series of entertainments in the regimental theatre at Ballincollig, when an unusual amount of talent was produced.

12TH LANCERS. Capt. J. B. Hayes, formerly of the regiment, died at The Beacon, Kingswear, on the 18th inst., of pneumonia, aged 35 years. He was a son of the Rev. Sir J. Hayes, Bart., of Arborfield, Berks.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major-Gen. Smyth, commanding the Woolwich District, inspected H Baty. 4th Brig. on Tuesday, previous to its departure for South Africa. The battery numbered 273 officers and men. The General told them that they had a long voyage and journey before them, but he was sure they would do their duty manfully and loyally. Their guns—a 7-pounder mountain train battery—had been sent on to the ship, and 200 mules would await them on their arrival out. He wished them "God speed!" and a safe return. The battery sailed on Wednesday.

The following changes of stations are announced:—No. 4 Baty. 1st Brig., Scottish Division, from Sheerness to Landguard Fort, Nov. 28; No. 2 Baty. 1st Brig., Northern Division, from Dover to Devonport, Nov. 21; I and O Batys. 1st Brig., from India to Shorncliffe and Athlone; No. 6 Baty. 1st Brigade, Western Division, from India to Aden; No. 5 Baty. 1st Brig., South Irish Division, from India to Aden; No. 8 Baty. 1st Brig., Eastern Division, from Aden to Sheerness; No. 7 Baty. 1st Brig., London Division, from Aden to Portsmouth.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major-Gen. Scratchley, the first High Commissioner of New Guinea, was entertained at a banquet on Tuesday, at St. Stephen's Club, by Mr. Henniker Heaton. The following gentlemen were also present:—The Right Hon. Lord George Hamilton, M.P., Sir Arthur Blyth (Agent-General for South Australia), Sir Charles Tupper (High Commissioner for Canada), Gen. Sir Collingwood Dickson, K.C.B., V.C., Major-Gen. Lowry, C.B., Sir Hugh Low, K.C.M.G. (British Resident, Perak), Lieut.-Col. Hon. Edward Legge, Mr. W. Newzam Nicholson, M.P., Sir Francis Smith (Chief Justice of Tasmania), Sir Eardley Wilmot, M.P., Hon. J. F. Garrick, Q.C. (Agent-General for Queensland), Hon. William Wilson (Victoria), Mr. Edward Whitley, M.P., Mr. Simon Fraser, M.P., Hon. John Douglass, M.P. (Queensland), Mr. W. P. Cowlishaw, Mr. R. Seymour Guinness, Hon. Howard Spensley (Victoria), Capt. Tully, Mr. James Corry, M.P., and Mr. C. H. Bromby. Major-Gen. Scratchley left England on Thursday for New Guinea.

The correspondent of the Times at Alexandria writes:—"With reference to my previous telegram as to the inadequacy of the force of Royal Engineers at the front, I hear that this is undoubtedly the case. The amount of labour for such men up country is excessive. Excluding a few men, chiefly drivers, with the field park, and the telegraphists who are only available for their special work, there remain only 260 men of this corps with the expedition. Considering that the Royal Engineers are trained boatmen, it is astonishing that so small a number of them is employed. One field company, 100 strong, specially sent out and equipped for the expedition, is doing nothing in Cairo. Why should not these be used ?"

1st, or Royal Scots. H.M.S. Orontes, with 1st Batn., arrived at Gibraltar on the 7th inst., from the West Indies. The regiment, which was en route for Egypt, now proceeds to South Africa, probably to take part in the Bechuanaland Expedition. The following is an extract from the Gibraltar Chronicle of the 10th inst. :—" His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by Major-Gen. Walker, V.C., C.B., and the officers of the Staff, to-day inspected the 1st Batn. Royal Scots, which was drawn up on the New Mole Parade at 10 a.m. in column of companies. The men were in their sea-kit dress. After going down the ranks, his Excellency addressed the regiment as follows :—'Col. White, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Royal Scots, it is a great pleasure to me to meet the regiment again. I had the honour of being associated with it long years ago in the Crimea, and also during its service in India. I am afraid there are but few officers or men in the battalion now who were with it in those days ; but I feel sure, from what I hear, that it still maintains the high character of this old and distinguished regiment. When you left the West Indies a short time ago, I believe that you anticipated serving in Egypt, but orders were received by me that, on arrival here, you were to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope. This sudden change is an exemplification of the varied and arduous duties which ever fall to the lot of the British Army. As the great Duke of Wellington said, in his days the British Army was ready to go anywhere and do anything. It is so still, and I have confidence that whether you are called upon to serve or to fight in the north of Africa or in the south, the battalion will ever maintain its justly-earned reputation for courage and discipline, and I heartily wish you all success.' Col. White in reply thanked the Governor for the kind words he had addressed to the regiment. By desire of his Excellency, the regiment was then marched off, headed by its band and pipers, through the town and out to the North Front, in order that the men might have an opportunity of seeing the place before their departure for the Cape, which will take place soon after the arrival of the P. and O. steamship Nepaul, which is bringing them out a draft of 200 men." The battalion left Gibraltar on Nov. 12, numbering 26 officers and 842 non-commissioned officers and men. The married families have been sent home in s.s. Poonah. Ten thousand rounds of ammunition were taken on board for use of the battalion.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). The following appears in the London Gazette :—" Capt. H. M. Wade to be Major, vice L. C. F. Thompson, seconded as an Adjt. of Auxiliary Forces (dated Oct. 10)," Major Thompson having taken up the duties of Adjt. to the 15th Lancashire R.V., at Liverpool, since that date. Orders have been received at the Curragh for the 1st Batn. to prepare a draft of 120 men to join the 2nd Batn. in the East Indies ; they sail in February next, under the command of Capt. Brereton. The 2nd Batn. are under orders to leave Ranikhet for Fort George, and have received instructions to proceed by march-route the whole way, which will occupy them some couple of months. Col. Tanner, C.B., has obtained leave of absence until Jan. 30, prior to vacating the command of the 1st Batn., in which he will be succeeded by Lieut.-Col. Williams.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Capt. and Adjt. Mills, 1st Batn., has embarked for South Africa for service in Bechuanaland.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. The death is announced, in his 44th year, of Sir Joseph Napier, late captain of the regiment, son of the late Sir Joseph Napier, first Bart., ex-Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

25th King's Own Borderers. Lieut.-Col. F. H. Pender, who formerly commanded the 1st Batn., died at Budock Vean, Cornwall, on the 12th inst.

38th South Staffordshire Regiment. A telegram dated Wady Halfa, Nov. 16, says :—" The passage of the advanced detachment of the 1st South Staffordshire Regt. up the Ambigol Cataract was not effected without mishap. Col. Eyre's whale-boat struck on a rock while it was being taken up the rapid and sank, all the stores and kits being lost. Only two Canadian boatmen were on board at the time of the accident, and they were rescued. Two other whale-boats were damaged near the same place, and a serjeant was drowned." The Standard correspondent at Dal writes on Nov. 20 :—" Twelve of the whale-boats, containing 108 officers and men of the Staffordshire Regt., arrived at the foot of the cataract yesterday. They left Tanjur on Monday morning at eight o'clock, and Akaska on Tuesday at two. The progress of the regiment has, hitherto, been very slow, but this was caused partly by the fact that it has come up a wing at a time, consequently any delay to one of the boats hinders half the regiment. In future they will push forward to Dongola in companies independent of each other, and not only will the delay be less from the smaller number passing up at a time, but the emulation excited among the different companies will aid the progress of all."

48th Northamptonshire Regiment. Col. Trent is about to retire, and will be succeeded in the command by Lieut.-Col. Bally.

53rd King's (Shropshire Light Infantry). Major D. J. K. Sangster, formerly of the regiment, and afterwards adjutant of the East Kent Rifle Volunteers, died at Dover on the 12th inst.

74th Highland Light Infantry. There is still living in the district of Cupar-Angus an old 74th man who was at the siege of Badajoz.

76th West Riding Regiment. Capt. Thomson is en route to South Africa for service with the Bechuanaland Expedition.

90th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). A memorial window has just been erected in St. Mary's Church (Episcopal) at Hamilton, to the memory of the officers and men who fell in action or died during the South-African campaign in 1878-79. The window contains four large panels, which are filled with warlike figures representing Old Testament heroes—Joshua, Gideon, Jonathan, and David—while two smaller panels above are filled with the arms of the regiment. Underneath is the scroll,—" To the glory of God, and in memory of Capt. G. Sandham, Lieuts. A. H. Saltmarshe and A. T. Bright, Colour-Serjt. T. H. E. McAllan, and forty-one rank and file, 90th Light Infantry, who fell in action or died from wounds or sickness in Kaffir War, 1878, or Zulu War, 1879, this window is given by their comrades of all ranks." The window is by Powell and Son, Whitefriars.

92nd Gordon Highlanders. John Downie, a Peninsular veteran, has died at Cupar-Angus at the ripe age of 95 years. When a mere youth he entered into the 92nd, and when barely 20 he was present at the battle of Corunna in January, 1809. He was also at the battle of Fuentes d'Onor in 1811, at Vittoria in 1813, and at Waterloo in 1815, where he was slightly wounded. On the treaty of peace being signed, in November, 1815, he returned home with his regiment, and some time afterwards received his discharge, with a pension of 1s. a day, which he has enjoyed for about 70 years.

108th Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers. Capt. Gibbings is a candidate for the Pay Department, and has been ordered to join the pay-office in Dublin for duty, on probation.

Ordnance Store Department. The death is reported of Deputy-Controller A. Gun, on the Retired List of the Ordnance Dept. The deceased entered the Army in 1831, served for 23 years in Ceylon, when he was posted to Stirling. In 1856, he was appointed Chief Ordnance Store Officer on the Staff of Sir Fenwick Williams, K.C.B., in Canada, and served in that Colony until 1865 ; Chatham, 1865-70 ; Chief of the Ordnance in Ireland, on the Staff of Gen. Lord Strathnairn, G.C.B., 1870 ; and retired 1871. The following changes have taken place :—Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. of Ordnance G. E. March, Woolwich Arsenal, to Eastern District, vice S. L. D. Smith, to the Cape ; H. J. Mills, Egypt, to Jersey, vice T. Pease, to Egypt ; Deputy-Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. of Ordnance E. Houghton to be Assist.-Comy.-Gen. of Ordnance, for service in Egypt ; F. O. Leggett, to Gibraltar, vice J. Jones, to Chatham ; G. O. Warren, Portsmouth, to Jamaica ; T. J. Kernaghan, from unattached, to Weedon ; W. F. Wright, Enniskillen, to Egypt ; C. W. Tate, Jamaica, to Woolwich ; C. H. Ozanne, Malta, to Egypt ; A. Sadler, China, to Woolwich ; T. Heron, Portsmouth, to Sheerness, vice E. H. S. Calder, to the Cape ; Qrmr. G. Harris (captain), Portsmouth. Conductor of Stores C. F. Hunter to be Qrmr., for service in Egypt.

Medical Department. The following changes in stations &c., have occurred in the Madras Presidency :—Surg.-Major Dick, senior medical officer, Theyetmyo, to be senior medical officer of the station hospital, Rangoon, when relieved. Surg.-Major Robertson, senior medical officer of the station hospital, Rangoon, to be senior medical officer of the station hospital, Bellary (to accompany the 2nd Batn. Bedfordshire Regt. when relieved). Surg.-Major Kilroy, senior medical officer of the station hospital, Tonghoo, to do duty at the station hospital, Secunderabad (to accompany the 2nd Batn. Bedfordshire Regt. when relieved). Surg.-Major Heather doing duty at the station hospital, Rangoon, to be senior medical officer of the station hospital, Tonghoo. Surg.-Major Bennett, doing duty station hospital, Secunderabad, to be senior medical officer of the station hospital, Theyetmyo (to accompany 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers). Surg.-Major Browne, doing duty station hospital, Secunderabad, to do duty station hospital, Bellary, on arrival from England (to accompany Head-quarters, 2nd Batn. Royal Fusiliers on line of march from Bellary to Cannanore). Surg. Smith doing duty station hospital, Theyetmyo, to do duty station hospital, Bangalore (to accompany 2nd Batn. Bedfordshire Regt). Surg. Williamson, doing duty station hospital, Tonghoo, to do duty station hospital, Madras (to accompany 2nd Batn. Bedfordshire Regt). Surg. Baker, doing duty station hospital, Rangoon, to duty station hospital, Kamptee (to accompany 4-1st R.A., North Irish Division). Surg. Carleton, doing duty station hospital, Secunderabad, to the medical charge of the station hospital, Calicut, on arrival from England. Surg. Macnamara, doing duty station hospital, Cannanore, to do duty station hospital, Bellary (to accompany 2nd Batn. Hampshire Regt.). Surg. Kerin, in medical charge of the station hospital, Calicut, to do duty station hospital, Secunderabad (to accompany 2nd Batn. Hampshire Regt.). Surg. Nealon, doing duty station hospital, Kamptee, to do duty station hospital, Rangoon. Surg. Burton, doing duty station hospital, Secunderabad, to do duty station hospital, Theyetmyo (to accompany 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers). Surg. Pechell, doing duty station hospital, Secunderabad, to do duty station hospital, Tonghoo (to accompany 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers). Major H. B. White, in medical charge of station hospital, St. Thomas' Mount, Madras, died of cholera on Oct. 10. Surg.-Major White only came out here last November : he was a very popular officer, and his death is much regretted. The three batteries at the Mount followed him to his grave. Surg.-Major W. Keir, M.D., in charge of north station hospital, Secunderabad, has been appointed senior medical officer, station hospital, St. Thomas' Mount, vice Surg.-Major White. The medical officers of the Allahabad Division gave a farewell dinner, on the 16th ult., at the North-West Provinces Club, Allahabad, to Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Hendley, C.B. Surg.-Major Boileau, A.M.D., presided, the vice-chair being occupied by Surg.-Major Cleghorn, I.M.S. Among the gentlemen present were Major-Gen. Sir H. Macpherson, Col. O. R. Stokes, R.A. ; Col. Hudson, C.B. ; Col. C. A. Dodd, B.S.C. ; the Hon. Justice Dr. Duthoit, Judge of the High Court ; Mr. Lawrence, Commissioner of Allahabad, &c. The Army Medical and Indian Medical officers mustered in great strength. The health of the guest of the evening was proposed by the chairman, who, speaking on behalf of the medical officers of the Division (including Allahabad, Benares, Cawnpore, Dinapore, Segowlie, and Chunar), bore testimony to the high regard in which Dr. Hendley was held, and the regret which was felt at his approaching departure. The toast was most cordially responded to, and Dr. Hendley acknowledged, in a short but appropriate speech, the compliment paid to him by his hosts. Various other toasts were drunk, the health of Gen. Macpherson being especially received with enthusiasm. The band of the 28th N.I. played during the evening. Consequent upon the drain upon the Medical Staff Corps, nearly one-third of its entire strength being now in Egypt, and in anticipation of other emergencies, instructions have just been issued from the War Office for the formation of a Militia Reserve of 1,200 men.

Medical Staff. The Union Company's steamer Trojan sailed from Southampton on Thursday with 13 officers, 6 warrant officers, 3 first-class non-commissioned officers, and 108 rank and file of the corps for service in Bechuanaland. Among the officers were :—Surg.-Major Maunsell and Surgs. G. A. Hughes, J. B. Emerson, J. J. Morris, T. J. O'Donnell, W. J. Johnston, G. P. Coates, A. J. Robins, and J. Mulrenan.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Honourable Artillery Company. Recognising the need of another lifeboat on the Essex coast, the regiment generously presented one to the National Lifeboat Institution, to be stationed at Walton-on-the-Naze. The ceremony of launching the boat took place on Tuesday, in the presence of several thousand spectators. The Baroness Bolsover, who was accompanied by the Duke of Portland, named the boat "The Hon. Artillery Company," and the launch was very successfully effected to the north of the Custom House, several members of the Company being on board in full uniform. The Duke of Portland afterwards presided at a luncheon.

2nd Volunteer Battalion, Royal Fusiliers, so ably commanded by Lieut.-Col. Routledge, again returns this year 100 per cent. of efficients, its enrolled strength being 798. The prizes will be distributed to the battalion by Mrs. Routledge, at St. James's Hall, on Dec. 11.

Col. Sir Owen Lanyon presented the prizes to the head-quarter companies of the 1st Hants Artillery Volunteers, on Monday, and in doing so remarked that the corps was one of the oldest in the kingdom, having been established early in 1860, since which time it had increased in numbers and in efficiency. There were not in the Army so many men as they could wish for in case of war, and they must therefore, to a large extent, depend upon their volunteer forces for the safety and protection of the fortifications surrounding Portsmouth. He would rather that the whole of the volunteer forces in that town were artillery. He should like to see them fire bigger guns than they did at present, because they would have to do so in actual warfare. The extra time that would have to be devoted to their drill would be well repaid. Gen. Sir G. Willis, commanding the District, remarked that in the present temper of Europe they might have to defend themselves at any moment, and who was to come forward but the volunteers. He impressed upon the volunteers of Portsmouth the importance of making the garrison so smart that they could defy any hostile force.

The Liverpool Courier says :—" In some Volunteer corps there has been uncertainty as to the number of officers, &c., they are now allowed to have. This arises from an extraordinary blunder in the Volunteer Regulations of 1884, wherein all the tables of establishments in pages 9 to 13 inclusive are incorrect. Two examples may be given. First, an artillery corps of eight batteries is ordered to have 21 officers, 36 serjeants, 32 corporals, 16 trumpeters, and 531 gunners, and the total is said to be 640 of all ranks, but the correct addition is 636. The mistake here is in the number of officers, which should be 25. In an 8-company rifle corps, the establishment is put down as 21 officers, 34 serjeants, 40 corporals, 16 buglers, and 675 privates—total, as per War Office calculation, 800, but by ordinary arithmetic 786. In this case there is an error of 4 officers and 10 serjeants. In making up the numbers for a troop of light horse, viz., 2 officers, 5 serjeants, 4 corporals, 1 trumpeter, 1 farrier, 1 shoeing-smith, and 45 privates—total, 60—the War Office are very nearly right, the correct addition being 59. The accurate maximum establishments will be found in an Army Circular, dated May 21, 1884, which came out some months before the incorrect version as given in the Volunteer Regulations."

The Italian Ministry of Marine has decided that Schneider armour-plates shall be exclusively adopted in future for war vessels in the Italian Navy.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree ; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver ; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked " Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1884.

THE "instructions" from the Colonial Office given to Sir Charles Warren, to guide him in his proceedings in Bechuanaland, and which have been published as a Parliamentary paper, may be thus briefly summarised. The objects of his mission are,—to remove filibusters from Bechuanaland, to restore order, to reinstate the dispossessed natives on their lands, and "to hold the country till its further destination is known." In political affairs, he will be subordinate to Sir Hercules Robinson, but with "a very large discretion as regards local matters." In military affairs, he will receive his "instructions from the Secretary of State for War and the General Commanding in South Africa, and will not be accountable to the Colonial Government or to the High Commissioner." He will, however, apply to the High Commissioner when in want of funds. It is "sincerely trusted" (!) that the Cape Government will be able to effect an amicable settlement of all difficulties, and the quiet annexation of Bechuanaland. Here are ample elements of friction between divided, if not conflicting, authorities and responsibilities. If Sir Charles Warren can steer his course clearly between the Scylla and Charybdis of Imperial and Colonial functionaries, his tact and discretion must be pre-eminent. A Memorandum by Sir Charles Warren, with which Lord Kimberley expresses his entire concurrence, and on which it would seem that the "Instructions" have been based, contains the following significant passages. "The policy, as I understand it from the advice from Cape Town as enunciated by the High Commissioner, is,—there is room for all. It is impossible to ignore the fact that in process of time the white colonists will extend throughout the country, wherever the natives are, no matter what impediments are put in their way." A policy beneficial to the natives "can only be carried out by Imperial officers, who must have no stake whatever in the commercial interests and speculations of the country." "It is considered that when it is fully understood by the white colonists that the British Government does not wish simply to hem them in and prevent their further expansion, but is willing to further it, under due control and without violation of native rights, properties, and privileges, the sympathies of the better classes in the Orange Free State and Transvaal will become lukewarm towards the filibusters, whose actions they will understand are damaging their own prospects in the future. This will be more particularly the case when they understand that the British Government is firmly resolute in its action, and is determined to employ force in the cause of justice whenever it may be necessary." From all this, and from its action in other instances, there can be no doubt that the present Government—the Government, professedly, of peace, retrenchment, and limitations—has committed itself to a policy of annexation of small or weak states, and of continual concessions to those which are powerful or aggressive; and that the course which is shadowed forth in the documents from which we have quoted is likely to involve us in a succession of little but expensive wars, in which victories over comparatively insignificant enemies are rewarded with extensive promotions and a profusion of honours and decorations.

Many officers of all arms of the Regular Forces, in excess of the number required, have volunteered for service with the Bechuanaland Expedition, and further names are being still submitted to the Horse Guards, and there recorded. Several officers have been fortunate enough to find employment with the expedition who would otherwise, in accordance with the inexorable rules of the service, have been shortly placed on the Retired List, although they are still in the prime of life.

One wing of the handsome new infantry barracks at Portsmouth, containing quarters for 400 men, is now completed, and has been occupied by the 2nd Battalion, Irish Fusiliers. The other wing of the barracks and the officers' quarters are being proceeded with.

Colonel E. Markham, R.A., lately in command of the Artillery at Gibraltar, succeeds, we understand, Colonel Woolsey as Director of Artillery Studies.

Now that the drill season has terminated at Aldershot Camp, the "mudlarking and camp improvement season" has set in with a vengeance, and all the energies of the Camp authorities are being concentrated on the task of destroying the ancient boundaries and landmarks of the Camps. The South Camp general parade, near Divisional Head-quarters, the finest drill-ground at Aldershot, which has been spared by the spoilers for many years, has at length fallen into their hands, and an army of fatiguemen and firemen-artificers has been let loose upon it, with sad results. Slowly, but surely, the open spaces within the two Camps are being fenced in for private use, and unless steps are speedily taken to conserve the few open spaces yet remaining, it will soon be a difficult matter to find sufficient room in the Camp to drill a battalion.

The War Office do not appear to intend to proceed with the fortification of Mauritius, Sierra Leone, St. Helena, Port Royal, and St. Lucia, as recommended by the Royal Commission and War-Office Departmental Committee. It seems extraordinary Esquimault, our only Naval depôt in the Pacific, and the important neighbouring coal-field, should have been omitted from the list of colonial defences absolutely necessary for the preservation of our trade. If these places are to be fortified at all, it seems folly to wait for an outbreak of war to carry out the works.

The War Office have, we believe, determined to remove the magazines at Priddy's Hard, Gosport, to Upnor, at the head of Portsmouth Harbour

The services of the few members of the Metropolitan Police, stationed at Aldershot during many years past, have been so fully recognised and appreciated by the military authorities, that strong efforts are being made to retain them at the Camp, where they have always heartily co-operated with the military police, and rendered invaluable assistance in the detection and suppression of crime.

The new regulations with respect to the Army Pay Department have evidently proved a success, for we learn that the number of probationers who have come forward for the department are sufficient to fill the whole of the existing vacancies.

Up to the present time, nothing is settled as to the Chaplain-Generalship.

The authorities have decided to include the fortifications at Simon's Bay and Trincomalee in the works to be undertaken at once, and to spend an additional £100,000 in the total armament. We presume the proposal of sending out, therefore, obsolete guns to our coaling-stations has been reconsidered.

One of the Aldershot Brigades has, during the past drill season, been drilled and exercised in parade movements without "the touch," i.e., with the ranks extended slightly, so that each man is untouched by his right or left-hand neighbour. This experiment has not been very successful. Although in the presence of the enemy, and during the minute operations of war, the touch is often lost, and each man acts more or less as an independent unit, it would be found impossible to teach recruits even the rudiments of drill without the touch, and it must be retained until they are dismissed drill at least.

Captain E. G. Bennett, 48th Regiment, will act as Assistant-Inspector of Army Signalling during the absence in Bechuanaland of Captain A. Davidson, 60th Rifles.

The guns at last mounted in Fort Widley have recently been tried with success. Fort Wallington and Fort Nelson, on the same line of hills, are being similarly armed. At the present rate, the Portsmouth defences will not be complete for upwards of thirty years.

The new pattern infantry great-coat, now being worn experimentally, seems to be as little to the liking of those who wear it as the khaki frock and small clothes. The large pocket behind, intended to hold the "fighting kit" and "iron rations," has been fitted with an oddly-shaped block of wood, which in bulk is supposed to represent the kit and rations to be carried on service. This wooden-headed invention has caused much amusement in the battalions to which the experimental great-coat has been issued.

The deficiency of gunners in the Royal Regiment of Artillery still continues. It is believed the War Office will further reduce the establishment of the regiment next year.

It has been notified from the War Office that field allowance for 91 days has been authorised to be paid on application from themselves or their regimental agents, by the Chief Paymaster, Home District, Horse Guards, to officers who have been ordered to proceed with Sir Charles Warren's expedition to Bechuanaland. This is not to be regarded, however, as a general authority for the issue of an advance of field allowance to officers ordered to South Africa, as officers not under special orders to join Sir Charles Warren's force would only become entitled to the advance if, after arrival in that country, they were ordered to the front.

The General Orders and Army Circulars for November show no sign of diminishing bulk or increasing interest. The desire for excessive centralisation, and for regulating the minutest details of everything everywhere, which actuates the officials in Pall Mall, prevents their productions from being concise. But the orders of this month contain some features which call for special notice, in addition to the usual items of microscopic interest. The Army Circulars end with an appendix of twelve pages containing only the values assigned to worn-out articles of uniform! This appendix has so many needless repetitions that it would require considerable ingenuity to make it cover a single page more, while any clerk of average ability could condense all the information it gives into a third of the space it now occupies. From this list of old clothes, we learn that the bearskin caps of the Foot Guards are valued at a shilling each, and those of the Greys, which are very similar, for some mysterious reason, at only threepence; and that bags "of sorts" for containing helmets, &c., are valued at one-sixth of a penny each. Those who have time or inclination to wade through such minutiæ will find many other items equally ridiculous. In the form of an appendix to the General Orders, we have a tabular return relating to Army Schools which actually occupies a space equal to 64 pages. This prodigious expansion is partly accounted for by the Royal Artillery in consequence of its wondrous organisation, filling 24 pages, and by the names of all the schoolmasters and schoolmistresses being given. These teachers may be very estimable people, doing good work faithfully and well, and it may be requisite that their names should be recorded in the Military Education Department, but there is no more reason for inserting them in the General Orders of the Army than for giving the names of all the staff-serjeants, tailors, shoemakers, and pioneers in the service. Lord Palmerston was, we believe, the originator of the definition of dirt as "matter in the wrong place." Applying this definition to War-Office publications, we would urge on the authorities in Pall Mall not to encumber the pages of General Orders with lists of schoolmistresses, nor to fill Army Circulars with valuations of old clothes. Such "matter" may have its uses elsewhere, but in "wrong places" it is only rubbish.

The intention of the authorities to defend our coaling-stations abroad only from "lightly-armed cruisers" may necessitate a change of battery, at, of course, considerable extra expense, in another year.

Three detachments from the 1st Battalion, 17th, 1st Battalion, 21st, and 62nd Regiments—177, 171, and 137 strong, respectively—are being prepared at Aldershot for embarkation on Wednesday next, for India, to join their linked battalions. With the departure of these drafts, upwards of 1,300 of the best men, such as they are, will have been drafted from the infantry battalions at Aldershot alone during the past six months to the linked battalions abroad. It is this ruinous system which plays havoc with our home battalions, and has made them mere depôts or training-schools for the preparation of the raw material for foreign service.

Major W. A. Bridge, 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, has been appointed to act as Brigade Major, 3rd Brigade, Aldershot, vice Lieutenant-Colonel W. C. T. Molyneux, 22nd Regiment, proceeded to South Africa.

Yet another detachment of the Medical Staff Corps has been sent to the front during the week. The non-commissioned officers and men composing the draft which left England on Thursday morning last, en route to the Cape, were drawn from out-stations, and concentrated at the head-quarters of the corps early in the week. The drain on this small corps is at present so great, that trained men in sufficient numbers are not available for service at the various station hospitals from which the older hands are being withdrawn to proceed on active service, and the vacant places have perforce been temporarily filled by men from the ranks of the attenuated Line battalions. The formation of a Militia Reserve for the Medical Staff Corps, to consist of 1,200 men, has recently been sanctioned. This Reserve, however, cannot be formed for a considerable time; and even if completely organised, it could not be utilised to relieve the pressure which now exists, as under present regulations reinforcements could not be drawn from it.

The khaki experimental clothing is now generally in a dreadfully seedy condition. Many of the garments look as if they will go to pieces if worn much longer, and we hear that the authorities are about to take steps to remedy this unsatisfactory state of matters. It is manifestly very unfair to charge against the men the cost of renewing this clothing, which, we hear, has been done in some of the worst cases of wear, especially as regards the nether garment. This experimental dress has certainly produced unfortunate results in the battalions wearing it.

The quartermastership of Chelsea Hospital is vacant by the death of Captain W. Barlow, who has held the appointment since July 17, 1872.

It is erroneously stated that a site has been fixed for the re-erection of the Duke of Wellington's statue at Aldershot, near the head-quarters of the division. It is true that some months ago the Commander-in-Chief, when at Aldershot, was shown this site, as one of several that had been proposed by the General Officer Commanding, but nothing has yet been decided. It is generally admitted at the Camp that the statue should be placed near the head-quarters of the Division; but as Camp reconstruction is now going on, and will ere long be proceeded with on a much larger scale than heretofore, it is more than probable that new divisional head-quarter offices will soon be erected, not on the site of the present hut offices. It is, indeed, quite possible that divisional head-quarters may be moved to the north side of the Basingstoke Canal, and it would, therefore, be premature to select a site for the statue while the Camp is in its present transition state.

"Dogs in office" do not bark, it seems! It is only when they are out on the loose that they give tongue. We read letters every week from able and energetic men, as well as from energetic men who are not able, on the dangerous state of our Navy, and we are obliged to remember that they were, most of them, mute as the grave when they were employed or were in service.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 14, 1884.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of April 1, 1881, Deputy-Inspector-Gen. of Hospitals and Fleets T. J. Breen has been placed on the Retired List, with permission to assume the rank and title of Inspector-Gen. of Hospitals and Fleets (Nov. 14).

Forward, Lieut.-Com. Furlonger, was at Assam on Oct. 21, and would remain for the present. The boilers of this ship are said to be in a very bad state, although they were placed on board new last year. Their present deteriorated state is believed to be due to her having been kept constantly moving at full speed when with the Channel Squadron, so that no opportunity was afforded for their cleaning or examination, as directed by the Instructions.

Foxhound, Lieut.-Com. McQuhae, was in the Gulf of Tonquin on Sept. 26.

Frolic, Com, Parr, has been sent to Angra Pequina.

Garnet, Capt. Hand, was at Newfoundland on Nov. 2; expected to be relieved by Tenedos shortly.

Goshawk, Lieut.-Com. Blennerhasset, has proceeded to the Cape of Good Hope, to be at the disposal of Rear-Admiral Salmon.

Griffon, Com. Davies, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday from the North American and West Indies station, after an absence of seven years. Near Plymouth, about 2 o'clock in the morning, when shortening sail, a man named Mahoney fell from the mizzen-top to the deck, and sustained such a severe fracture of the skull that he died a few hours afterwards. The Griffon was commissioned at Devonport in 1877, and the first three years were spent on the South-East Coast of America and in the West Indies. She was recommissioned at Bermuda in 1881, and was subsequently on the coast of Newfoundland. She was also employed during the Haytian revolution in protecting British interests along the coast.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, sailed from Portsmouth on Thursday afternoon with relief crews for the China station. She will call at Queenstown for drafts for the Cape.

Humber, Com. Errington, was at Suakim on Nov. 6, and would probably leave for Suez on Nov. 7.

Linnet, Com. Hill, left Hong Kong on Oct. 9 for Chefoo.

Malabar, Capt. Harris, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday with drafts, time-expired men, and invalids, numbering 1,235 altogether. One of the crew died on the voyage.

Merlin, Lieut.-Com. Brenton, left Amoy on Oct. 4 for Amping.

Midge, Com. Hotham, was at Foochow on Sept. 7.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, was at Halifax on Nov. 5, about to leave for Bermuda.

Opal, Capt. Brooke, was at Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 29; when relieved by Rapid, she would proceed to Australia viâ Tristan d'Acunha and the Cape.

Pegasus, Com. Bickford, was at Singapore Oct. 19, and would leave for a month's cruise to Sarawak and Penang on Oct. 25.

Philomel, Com. Lang, was at Aden on Nov. 5 under orders to proceed to Berberah about the 19th.

Sapphire, Capt. Kinahan, was at Amoy on Oct. 14, under orders to proceed to Pagoda Anchorage, River Min, when relieved by the Audacious.

Sphinx, Comdre. Molyneux, was at Suakim on Nov. 19.

Stork, Lieut.-Com. Blennerhasset, was at Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 29; when relieved by Watchful, she is under orders to proceed to South-East Coast of America.

Swift, Com. Bromley, was at Canton on Oct. 14.

Tenedos, Capt. Drummond, was at Halifax on Nov. 3; will leave for St. John's about Nov. 15.

Tyne, Capt. Cochrane, was at Suakim on Nov. 6.

Vigilant, Lieut.-Com. Maxwell, is to be ready to leave Hong Kong for Amoy on Oct. 20.

Wanderer, Com. Churchill, was at Singapore on Oct. 4, and is ordered to Hong Kong.

Watchful, Lieut.-Com. Goodrich, was at Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 21, and would remain there until the arrival of the senior officer in the Opal.

Wrangler, Lieut.-Com. Farr, has been ordered home from the South-East Coast of America.

Zephyr, Lieut.-Com. Hope, was at Sharp Peak, River Min, on Oct. 6.

NAVAL ASSURANCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I shall be most happy to correspond with any officers of the Navy who may be willing to do so, and see whether or no it is possible to start a Naval fund out of which annuities may be provided to widows and orphans. In addition to the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, the Royal Marines have a widows' fund. It has often occurred to me that much might be done by officers themselves to provide for their widows in addition to the pensions to which they may be entitled; and I feel confident that the question has only to be put before the officers themselves, when many would gladly avail themselves of becoming subscribers to a fund that would augment the pension to their widows, or compassionate allowance to their children.—I am, &c., A Naval Officer.

[We shall be happy to put any officer, who may so desire, in communication with our correspondent, who has given his name and address for that purpose.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

Two of the new torpedo-vessels, which have been built by private contract, arrived at Sheerness on Monday.

Orders have been received at Sheerness for the Rifleman, which recently returned from the South-East Coast of America, to be overhauled and repaired for foreign service.

A telegram from Foochow, under date Oct. 30, states that the English residents are greatly alarmed at the continued increase of the French squadrons, and at the supineness of the English Government in neglecting to provide vessels sufficient in number and weight of metal to keep our fleet on a nearly equal footing.

Prince Waldemar of Denmark has left Gibraltar for Malta on board the Danish gunboat Fylla.

Lloyd's telegram from Shanghai says that the blocking of Woosung Harbour is being rapidly effected. The channel is 250 ft. wide.

The burst gun belonging to the Active was dismounted on Tuesday afternoon and conveyed to the Gun-wharf, Portsmouth, whence it will be forwarded to Woolwich for examination.

The Naval Attaché to the Russian Embassy, Commander Linden, has been at Devonport for some days inspecting the vessels there, and the new docks and shops at Keyham.

The fittings of the Amphion, sister-ship to the Leander, at Chatham, are to be proceeded with at Keyham, and, if possible, she is to be in readiness for a trial of machinery in a few days.

Lord and Lady Dufferin, at Gibraltar, on their passage to India, paid a visit to the Duke of Edinburgh on board the Minotaur, and were shown round the ship.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

Madeira, Nov. 12.

The Squadron left Gibraltar on the afternoon of Monday, the 3rd, and arrived here the following Friday afternoon. We experienced fine weather all the way, and were able to carry sail most of the time. On Tuesday we fired away our quarter's ammunition; the Squadron did not spread, but dropped a line of targets, and fired at them while steaming up and down in line ahead. The next two days we had steam tactics. On each day the usual evening drills were carried out, reefing topsails, shifting topsails, and shifting topsail yards. On Friday forenoon, while approaching the land, we had "ram-on!" from plain sail, and made sail again, after replacing gear; we then furled for harbour. We arrived off Funchal at 2 o'clock. When abreast of the town the 2nd Division came too to the eastward of Loo Rock; the 1st Division anchored, the Minotaur off the Loo Rock, and the other two to the westward of it. All the time we have been here fires have been kept banked, and for part of the time steam has been ready at short notice. It has been blowing rather hard from the eastward, which has caused a good deal of sea and has rendered landing and embarking very unpleasant work. On shore it is difficult to realise that it is winter. To-day the wind has all gone, and the sea is quite smooth. The massed bands of the Squadron played in the gardens this afternoon, and a great concourse of the good people of Funchal were attracted. There are very few English visitors here yet. The hotels are nearly empty, except that they are just at present daily invaded, especially those with lawn-tennis grounds, by officers from the Squadron. H.M.S. Lily, which was here when we arrived, left on Saturday for the West Indies. A German squadron, consisting of two frigates, the Bismarck (flagship) and the Gneisenau, and two corvettes, the Ariadne and Olga, have just arrived. We have not had boom-boats out owing to the heavy sea; but this forenoon we hoisted them out, manned and armed, and hoisted in again. We got a mail this forenoon with papers, &c., up to the 7th. We leave for Gibraltar tomorrow.

Gibraltar, Nov. 17.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, has arrived here from Madeira.

THE FRAUDS ON BOARD THE GANGES.

A court-martial was held on board the Royal Adelaide at Devonport, last Wednesday, to try John Henry Roff, ship's steward's assistant, of the Ganges, training-ship at Falmouth, for having knowingly made false entries in the daily account-book of the ship relating to the remains of fresh beef on board, and in the daily account-books and numbers and contents-books as regarded the remains of spirits. The following circumstantial letter contains the particulars of the charge:—

"In submitting the accompanying charge for trial by court-martial of John Henry Roff, ship's steward's assistant, I have the honour to make the following report. The daily account-books and weighing-book were written up by him. On June 30 last he showed by both books that no fresh beef (men's) remained in the ship. On July 1 he entered in the daily meat-book 666 lb. as remaining from the previous day and in the weighing-book none. On August 20 Roff entered in the weighing-book that no (boys') fresh beef was on board, but in the daily account-book that 459 lb. remained, which would have been about 30 days' supply at the then daily rate of issue. This large balance is being carried on day by day, and continuous supplies were being drawn from the contractor to meet the current wants. On June 30 he entered in the daily account-book 270 pints of spirit as remaining on board, but the remains brought forward by him on July 1 in the daily account-book are 16¾ pints. This man has passed for ship's steward and must have been well aware that no instructions received by him justify his conduct in making these and similar false entries in the ship's steward's books.—I have, &c.,

"G. P. Martin. Deputy-Judge-Advocate."

After a lengthy hearing, the prisoner said he had kept the books to the best of his ability. The Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to six months' imprisonment with hard labour, and at the expiration of that term to be dismissed the service.

The Court reassembled for the trial of Mr. E. Robinson, paymaster, of H.M.'s training-ship Ganges, stationed at Falmouth, who was sentenced to lose one year's seniority, to be dismissed his ship, and to be severely reprimanded for having failed to exercise such reasonable supervision over the accounts of the vessel as would have prevented their manipulation, and the embezzlement of a large quantity of meat and spirits. The prisoner attributed his default to over-confidence in the steward, Mr. Hicks.

With reference to the shells that were dug up recently at Stoke Newington, it is stated that many years ago the house near the cowshed in which the projectiles were found was occupied by a retired commander of the Royal Navy, who constructed a grotto, which was mainly composed of warlike missiles, from some of which the charges had probably not been drawn. A few of the shells have been sent to Woolwich for examination.

The London and China Telegraph is responsible for the following, under date, Hong Kong, Oct. 14:—"The Admiral is said to be very indignant at British vessels having been overhauled for contraband while France has declared that she is not at war with China, and he is reported to have sent the Champion to Formosa to ask for explanations."

A report from Queenstown states that the s.s. Gardenia, while leaving the harbour, ran into the Revenge and carried away about eight feet of her port lower boom; the merchantman proceeded on her way apparently uninjured.

The Admiralty have determined to sell the Royal Sovereign, the first turret-ship that was built for the British Navy, and seven other old ships now lying at Portsmouth.

The Chinese frigate Nue-Yue, which has been undergoing repair in the Kiang Nan Arsenal, has arrived at Woosung. Her armament consists of 20 broadside breech-loaders and 10 1½-in. and 1-in. Hotchkiss and Nordenfelt machine-guns. She carries a crew of 580 men.

Rear-Admiral Lyons has left Esquimalt in the Swiftsure for San Francisco. Mails are to be sent to Panama.

THE DEFENCE OF COALING-STATIONS.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, on Monday, replying to Sir M. Hicks-Beach, said that a small sum had been sanctioned for the defence of certain coaling-stations, and would be submitted to the House next session.

THE NILE BOATS.

In reply to Mr. Marriott, Lord Hartington stated that 800 boats had been sent from this country for the Nile Expedition at a cost of £85 each, delivered at the port of embarkation. It would cost £20 each to send them to Alexandria, and £40 to send them to Dongola.

TRAINING-SHIPS.

Sir Thomas Brassey, interrogated by Mr. Macfarlane, said the Government could not undertake to station a training-ship in the vicinity of Stornoway. The Admiralty could not increase the number of training-vessels.

ARMOUR-CLAD CRUISERS.

In reply to Mr. Gourley, Sir T. Brassey said a return as to these vessels was furnished last session, and it supplied partially the information asked for by the hon. Member. He could not anticipate the statement which would be made on Monday next with regard to the Navy.

NAVAL EXPENDITURE.

Mr. W. H. Smith, speaking on the subject of Mr. Childers's financial proposals, declared that no provision whatever had been made for an increase in the strength of the Navy. He was not one of those who desired that a large or a panic expenditure should be made in respect of that portion of the public services, but he believed that it was necessary, in the interests of the country, that some expenditure upon the Navy should be provided for now, and that such provision should not be postponed until next year. By the course which had been adopted this session they were ignoring a subject upon which he felt convinced that the country felt very deeply, and with regard to which he honestly believed it was necessary to make some provision.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

Lord Northbrook, on Thursday, in the House of Lords, expressed his intention to postpone his statement on the Navy until next Monday week, and Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, said:—"I am obliged to state, on the part of the Government, that it would be extremely difficult for them to fulfil as to time the engagement which we gave to the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. W. H. Smith) and to the House, to make a statement with regard to naval affairs on Monday next. It would really not be possible for us, with the time we have had at our disposal, to give the requisite attention to that subject. I am advised that it would be more agreeable to members and more for their convenience, if it does not come on on Monday, to postpone the statement for a week." The Chancellor of the Exchequer also, in reply to Mr. W. H. Smith, said the Government did not propose during the present autumn sitting to take any further vote in supply for the Navy.

ARMY MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

In reply to Mr. Sheil, the Marquis of Hartington stated on Thursday in the House of Commons, that he could not undertake to give a return of marks made at the last two examinations for the Department.

SERVICE IN BECHUANALAND.

Sir G. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for War on Thursday whether the notice inviting candidates for service in Bechuanaland to call at 8 New Coventry Street, Leicester Square, was authentic; for what period and on what terms young gentlemen were being enlisted for this service; and whether any expectation of land grants was held out to them. The Marquis of Hartington said:—"The state of the case is this: Sir Charles Warren has been commissioned by her Majesty's Government to raise an irregular force in South Africa for service in Bechuanaland should circumstances compel a resort to force. Finding that many young men in England wish to join this force, he, I understand, appointed an agent in this country to give information to intending recruits and to facilitate their going to the Cape, where, if approved and they still desired to enlist, they would be enrolled in the force. The period for which men of this force are to be engaged is left open for the present till Sir Charles Warren tests the feeling of the class from which he hopes to recruit; but it will not exceed six months. The pay for a private is 4s. a day, with 1s. a day deferred pay and free rations. No expectation of land grants has, so far as I am aware, been held out to them."

The Accountant-General's Department of the Admiralty gives notice that agents or other persons having any just and legal demand unliquidated against the award for salvage services rendered to the Royal Mail steamship Nile, between January 3 and 9, 1884, by H.M.S. Foam, are required to transmit the particulars of any such demand to the Registrar of the Admiralty Division of her Majesty's High Court of Justice as soon as possible.

London Amusements.

The "Féerie Orientale," in three acts and three tableaux, brought out at the COMEDY THEATRE on Monday night, under the title of "The Grand Mogul," is a version by Mr. H. B. Farnie of "The Snake-Charmer," framed by MM. Chivot and Duru, and produced, with music composed by M. Audran, a few years since in Paris. In the present adaptation, though the story follows pretty closely the original outline, several vocal pieces have been interpolated. A pearl necklace, bequeathed by a grand Mogul to his son and heir, and alleged to turn black on his becoming faithless in love, is subjected to a trickery of manipulation eventually revealed. Mr. Bracy is the inconstant lover, Prince Mignapour; Mdlle. Latour is his betrothed cousin, the Princess Bengaline; and the snake-charmer Djemma, who diverts his affections, is an English girl, represented by Miss Florence St. John, who has accompanied her cousin to India, and assisted him in the feats he has performed as a conjuror and showman. This character is impersonated by Mr. F. Leslie. To Mr. Wyatt and Mr. Arthur Roberts are assigned the humorous personages of this fantastic, operatic extravaganza, and to their fun and activity much of the success obtained was undoubtedly owing. Miss Farebrother as Clara, the maid-servant, had a well-merited encore for her effective rendering of the legend which serves as the ground-work of the story. M. Audran's music is pleasing, though not strikingly original, and much of the gratification of the spectators was derived from the picturesque costumes designed by the accomplished artist known as Wilhelm. The anticipated great effect of the real snakes twining about the arms and neck of Miss Florence St. John proved repulsive. A nautical dance in the second act was advantageously introduced. Mr. A. Van Biene conducted the orchestra, and after the usual compliments had been paid to the prominent performers, Mr. D'Albertson came forward to announce that Mr. Farnie, the adapter, was not in the house to receive their congratulations. As a mere matter of theatrical history, it may be mentioned that real snakes were exhibited at Drury Lane Theatre in an Eastern spectacle, called "Hyder Ali," produced in October, 1831, and that the experiment proved equally distasteful to the playgoers of that period.

To the programme of French Plays at the ROYALTY has been this week added Sardon's diverting comedy of "Les Pattes de Mouche." Madame Gerfant proved an excellent Suzanne, M. Lanjier an effective Prosper Block, and Madame Rosa Lion as Clarisse and Madame Sante as Martha were very efficient. On Monday next the farcical comedy of "Tricoche et Cacolet" will be performed.

At the IMPERIAL THEATRE, Westminster, a series of performances, under the direction of Mr. H. St. Maur, commenced on Monday last with "Hamlet." Mr. Hermann Vezin, as the Prince, was as good as those who know and admire his acting could have anticipated. For Miss F. Delaval, as the Queen, we have nothing but praise, except that she looked too youthful for Hamlet's mother. Mrs. D. Willoughby, as Ophelia, was singularly pathetic in the mad scene. The part of Laertes was well sustained by Mr. Cannam; Mr. St. Maur, as the complaisant courtier, was simply perfect; and the Gravedigger made us regret that his name was not announced. The performance, on the whole, was admirable; but the effect was marred by preventible causes. The ventilation was—well, excessive; the "supers" wanted drilling, and the doors wanted oiling. A full house showed that good acting was expected; and the great numbers that remained, till close on midnight, for the last scene—in which everybody kills everybody else, proved that their expectations were realised.

On Thursday evening a farcical comedy, called "Lottie," was brought out at the NOVELTY THEATRE, in association with the brief burlesque of "Gentle Gertrude," in which Miss Lydia Thompson resumed her original character.

A new comedy, called "The Candidate," attributed to a Member of Parliament, will be produced this (Saturday) evening at the CRITERION THEATRE, the principal character being played by Mr. Charles Wyndham.

A new vaudeville, called "Old Knockles," written by Mr. Arthur Law and composed by Mr. Alfred J. Caldecott, will be introduced next week into the programme of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

HENGLER'S CIRQUE, in Argyll Street, Regent Street, is being entirely reconstructed, and it is understood the new building will be ready for the reception of the public at Christmas.

Mr. David James, having recovered from his late severe indisposition, will positively resume the part of Perkyn Middlewick, in "Our Boys," at the STRAND THEATRE, on Monday evening next.

The Army and Navy Journal states that the model of an apparatus for "lifting vessels over shoals," for which a patent was issued in 1849 to Abraham Lincoln, will form a portion of the Patent Office exhibit at the New Orleans Exposition.

Summary of Events.

NOVEMBER 15.—Lord Wolseley left Dal on a tour of inspection down the Nile, and to discuss matters with Sir R. Buller.

NOVEMBER 16.—A message received at Cairo from Mudir of Dongola announces the receipt of a communication from Gen. Gordon conferring upon him the rank of Mushir. Lieut.-Gen. G. St. P. Lawrence, K.C.S.I., C.B., died in London, aged 79.

NOVEMBER 17.—Lord Derby's instructions to Sir C. Warren for his mission and military expedition to Bechuanaland issued. The Chancellor of the Exchequer announces in House of Commons that the Government propose to add 1d. to the Income-tax, to meet expenses of Nile and Bechuanaland Expeditions.

NOVEMBER 18.—Appointments of Sir C. Warren and Staff of Bechuanaland Expedition gazetted. Meeting held, under presidency of Right Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., at Westminster Palace Hotel, to promote federation and proper defence of the Colonies. Lord Wolseley left Wady Halfa for Dongola. Nizam of Hyderabad created a G.C.S.I.

NOVEMBER 19.—Appointments announced of Sir Thomas Brassey as Secretary of the Admiralty, vice Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, and Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., as Civil Lord.

Obituary.

The death of Gen. Sir George St. Patrick Lawrence, in the 80th year of his age, removes the last of a famous brotherhood, among whom the names of at least Lord Lawrence of the Punjab and Sir Henry Lawrence will be handed down to the remotest posterity of Englishmen. George Lawrence joined the Bengal Cavalry as far back as 1821. It was not, however, until the Afghan campaign 17 years later that he saw any active service, and then he joined the Army of the Indus. His Afghan experiences culminated in the treacherous murder of Sir William Macnaghten—an act of which he was an immediate spectator, and which he has fully described in his interesting work "Forty-three Years in India." On that occasion he was seized and made prisoner, and he owed his escape again to the fleetness of his horse and to the intervention of an Afghan chief. During the first Sikh war he came to England, and at its close was appointed Political Agent at Peshawur; and when the second war broke out it was his misfortune to be a prisoner for a second time in the hands of the Afghans until the liberation of prisoners which was effected after the battle of Goojerat. On the outbreak at Meerut and Delhi in 1857, Col. Lawrence had to reckon up his resources, to mark his enemies, and to make the best front he could to the numerous dangers that confronted him. He held a province of ten millions with a native garrison of 5,000 men and less than 30 English officers. His first care was to provide for the security of the arsenal at Ajmere, and he succeeded in protecting that place not merely against hostile attack, but also against a treacherous garrison on the point of breaking its faith. In the last year of the Mutiny he took the field against the Thakore of Awah, and a few months later he also dealt out well-merited chastisement to the ruler of Kotah. His last service was to take part in the pursuit and capture of the arch-rebel Tantia Topee after the dispersal of his troops round Gwalior. After a short visit to England in 1861 he retired in 1864.

Lieut.-Gen. R. Richards, on the Retired List of the Bombay S.C., died at Southsea on the 13th inst. He served with the Bombay column, Army of the Punjab, in 1848-9, at the siege and surrender of Mooltan, battle of Goojerat, and pursuit and surrender of the Sikh army. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a medal and two clasps. He afterwards served as staff officer with the field force which penetrated into the country north of Peshawur in order to chastise the hill tribes on the Swat border. Gen. Richards retired in 1881.

The death is announced, in his 86th year, of Capt. Alexander John Græme, R.N. He belonged to the ancient family now represented by the Duke of Montrose, a descendant of William, the First Earl. The deceased officer entered the Navy on April 6, 1813, and served on different stations until 1825, soon after which, in consequence of the weakened circulation, produced by the great variety of climates in which he had served, and the exposure to which he had been subjected, he had the misfortune, during a moderately frosty day, to lose, from the effects of the cold, the last two joints of the forefinger of his left hand. He remained unemployed till 1840, when he was appointed to the Victory, flagship at this port. Since 1842 he had been on half-pay.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—ENFEEBLED EXISTENCE.—This medicine embraces every attribute required in a general and domestic remedy. It overturns the foundations of disease laid by defective food and impure air. In obstructions or congestions of the liver, lungs, bowels, or any other organs, these Pills are especially serviceable and eminently successful. They should be kept in readiness in every family, being a medicine of incomparable utility for young persons, especially those of feeble constitutions. They never cause pain or irritate the most sensitive nerves or most tender bowels. Holloway's Pills are the best known purifiers of the blood, the most active promoters of absorption and secretion, whereby all poisonous and obnoxious particles are removed from both solids and fluids.

95 out of 117 Candidates have passed at the last Three Examinations.

At the Eight Examinations held under the present regulations, the FIRST PLACE has been taken FIVE TIMES.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS. — LIEUTENANTS of MILITIA PREPARING for the MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION can be RECEIVED by the Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A., Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath, whose pupils for some years past have continuously maintained a steady average of success, second to none. This year fifteen have been sent up, seven of whom have passed; four in March (one taking first place on the list), and three at the recent Examination. Very few pupils are taken, and there are two resident Military Instructors of high qualifications constantly at work, with a third in reserve in case of pressure. Thus very great individual attention is guaranteed, and the system of lecturing classes entirely avoided. Batcombe is a country village, near no town, but affording opportunity for shooting and other healthy amusements in moderation. References are permitted to the Earl of Harewood, Sir John Adye, G.C.B., General Elmhirst, C.B., General Thompson (late 7th Dragoon Guards), Colonel A. H. King, R.A., A.D.C. to the Queen, the Bishop of Bedford, and many others, all parents or near relatives of successful pupils.

JERSEY HIGH SCHOOL for GIRLS (Limited).

PATRONS.

The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of WINCHESTER.

Head Mistress—Miss M. E. POPE,

Certificate of London University General Examination for Women, with honours, and distinction in French, Scholar of Girton College, Cambridge, and Second-Class Natural Science Tripos in the University of Cambridge.

This School has been established for the purpose of giving a high-class education, on the principles of the Church of England. The school buildings are situated in a healthy suburb of St. Helier's, near the sea. The climate of Jersey is mild and healthy. Special facilities are provided for the acquisition of the French language. Ordinary fees—board (washing included), sixteen guineas per term; tuition, three, four, and five guineas per term.—Application for prospectuses may be made to the Secretary, R. CREWS, Esq., Wyvil House, Georgetown, Jersey.

CONNAUGHT MILITARY COLLEGE, WOOLWICH COMMON.

Principal—SAMUEL H. WINTER.

The Pupils of this Establishment have been uniformly successful. In July, 1882, Mr. F. Close was SECOND on the Woolwich List, being FIRST in Mathematics; in July, 1883, Mr. G. Close was TENTH and Mr. R. F. Edwards TWELFTH, all at their first trial. Mr. Winter has prepared more than 200 Pupils for various Military Examinations.

MILITARY EDUCATION, GERMANY.—Colonel BERDOE WILKINSON, late R.E., formerly in charge of the Ordnance Survey in Ireland, and Lieutenant-Colonel WILKINSON SHAW, M.A. (Staff College), late Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, prepare Candidates for Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for Line Commissions through the Militia.

At the seven MILITIA COMPETITIONS which have taken place since September 1, 1881, Colonel WILKINSON and Lieutenant-Colonel SHAW have secured for their Pupils FIFTY-NINE COMMISSIONS, although they have only Prepared and sent up a very Limited Number of Candidates.

Also Lieutenant J. A. Rainsford took 76th place with 1,531 marks, being only one mark out.

At the recent WOOLWICH and SANDHURST Examinations NINE PUPILS competed, and EIGHT CADETSHIPS were obtained (one Woolwich, seven Sandhurst); Mr. H. D. Radcliffe taking SIXTH PLACE on the Infantry list for Sandhurst, with 7,308 marks, and making the highest score of any candidate in German—1,855 marks out of 2,000.

For the Staff College, Captains G. F. C. Mackenzie and C. E. de la P. Beresford have been successful; no other candidates sent up.

The general score now amounts to ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN SUCCESSES, obtained by Pupils since September 1, 1881.

AN ARMY SECTION IS NOW ADDED. PUPILS PREPARED FOR SANDHURST AND WOOLWICH.

At the late Competitive Examination in June for Assistant-Clerkships in the Royal Navy, ONE of the Five successful Competitors was a Pupil of this Establishment. Two others qualified, one taking sixth place. In June, 1883, of the four who passed, the First and Third were from this School.

CHARDSTOCK COLLEGE, CHARD.

Beautiful country; remarkably healthy. Special Preparation for Army, Navy, Public Schools, Universities, &c. Terms moderate. Cricket, fives, gymnastics, &c.

TO OFFICERS, ANGLO-INDIANS, and OTHERS.—First-class School, established 15 years, where boys are prepared from an early age for the Army Examinations. Numerous Staff of Experienced Graduates in Honours. System pursued has resulted in 35 successes and no failures. Indian children received. Highest references.—C. V. GODBY, M.A. (Oxon.), Bute House, Petersham, S.W.

CAVENDISH COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

This College has been founded by the County College Association, Limited, under the Presidency of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K.G., in order to enable students at the earliest practicable age and at a moderate cost to take the University Degree, whether in Arts, Law, or Medicine.

Students are admitted at 16, and a Degree may be taken at 19.

The College charges for Lodging and Board (with an extra term in the Long Vacation), including all necessary expenses of tuition for the degree of B.A., are £84 per annum.

For further information apply to the WARDEN, Cavendish College, Cambridge.

SANDHURST and WOOLWICH.—(Candidates for the Final Examinations preferred.)—A FRENCH and ENGLISH UNIVERSITY MAN, late Modern Language Master in Haileybury, Wellington, and Winchester Colleges, prepares Twelve Pupils for the above. Hunting with the Hambledon and Hursley Hounds. Local reference to Colonel H. P. Montgomery, late commanding Rifle Depôt; or to Lieutenant-Colonel C. T. Bunbury, late Rifle Brigade. Names of successful Pupils and other particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL, Wellington House, Winchester.

MILITIA MILITARY COMPETITIVE.—MAJOR de THOREN'S very remarkable success with Classes of Militia Officers, strictly limited in number, and to whom he gives his individual and sole attention, continues as usual. The fees at this establishment are extremely low.—For particulars, address Bellefield, St. Helier's.

ROYAL SCHOOL for DAUGHTERS of OFFICERS of the ARMY.

Under the patronage of her most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.

CHAIRMAN—Major-General J. T. BOILEAU, R.E., F.R.S.

Applications from Candidates for admission to this School, either by Election, by Votes at £12 per annum, or at £80 per annum without votes, should be forwarded without delay to the Secretary.

The Daughters of all Officers on the Active and Retired List in her Majesty's Army, inclusive of the Royal Marines, are eligible; but the Daughters of Officers who have severed their connection with the Army by having sold out or commuted their pensions, are eligible only if born before the date on which such officers quitted the service.

Office, 20 Charing Cross, corner of Craig's Court, London.

By Order,
G. W. FORSTER, Secretary.

ARMY.—LINE and MILITIA.

IMPORTANT to STUDENTS.

Captain DUMARESQ DE CARTERET BISSON, M.A., Author of "Our Schools and Colleges" (graciously recognised by the Queen and H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief), sends, free by post, a selected List of Prospectuses of all the most SUCCESSFUL ARMY TUTORS, and gives his Counsel on Military and Civil-Service Education free of Charge. References kindly permitted to the late Secretary of State for War.—Apply by letter only, No. 69 Berners Street, London, W.

Lieutenant-Colonel G. M. CARDEW (passed second from Staff College) PREPARES SIX PUPILS for MILITARY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION. Also Officers for Promotion, &c.—14 Observatory Avenue, Kensington. In July, five passed out of six; in September, three passed out of four.

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS and GENERAL EDUCATION.—AVRANCHES.—A GENTLEMAN, for many years successfully engaged in preparing Candidates for the Military Competitive Examination and Universities, wishes to RECEIVE PUPILS. Great facilities for acquiring the French language. Terms moderate. Highest references to Parents and Guardians of former Pupils, and to Clergymen and Country Gentlemen.—Apply to Captain CHAWNER, Bois-Guerin, Val-St.-Père, Avranches.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS.—Mr. J. WINDER, M.A., Cranworth House, Eastbourne, Sussex, PREPARES SEVEN PUPILS for WOOLWICH and SANDHURST. Special Masters for French, German, and Science. In 1880, of FOUR Candidates for Woolwich, ALL of whom passed, one was 6th and another 29th. In 1883, of THREE Candidates for Sandhurst, TWO were successful.

KING EDWARD VI.'s SCHOOL, BERKHAMSTED, HERTS, 28 miles from Euston.—Twenty-seven School Scholarships. Four Exhibitions from the School. Laboratory, heated Swimming Bath, Fives Courts, &c.—Address, HEAD MASTER.

MILITIA CANDIDATES for the LINE.—TUITION in MILITARY SUBJECTS for the COMPETITIVE ARMY EXAMINATION.

Lieutenant-Colonel FITZROY WILSON, late Rifle Brigade, a Graduate of the Staff College, and afterwards Garrison Instructor of the Eastern District, offers the above. Careful individual attention. A Class now at work for the March Examination. References permitted to Colonel Aylmer, S. Cameron V.C., Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen. (Intelligence Branch), War Office; and Colonel C. W. Robinson, Rifle Brigade, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., Aldershot.

For prospectus, containing terms, testimonials, and references, address, East Bergholt, Colchester.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.—MILITIA OFFICERS are prepared in all the subjects for the above Examinations by Lieut.-Colonel N. STEEVENS (late 20th and 88th Regiments and Staff), and Colonel F. J. HUTCHISON (late 64th Regiment, seven years Garrison Instructor at Devonport, and for several months Acting Professor of Fortification at the Staff College).—For further particulars, apply to Lieut.-Colonel STEEVENS, 1 Wolseley Terrace, Cheltenham.

ARMY (PRELIMINARY, FURTHER, and COMPETITIVE) LITERARY EXAMINATIONS.—The Rev. WALTER BAKER, M.A. (Cantab), late Scholar of his College, &c., offers an unusual combination of advantages. A few Pupils only received. All work is done by individual teaching. No lectures to Classes, but a resident Tutor to every three Pupils, and each Tutor first-rate in his own subjects. For fourteen years, up to and including the last Sandhurst Competition, a steady average of successes, second to none, has been maintained. No town is near, but there are plenty of country amusements, and a liberal establishment is kept. The highest references can be given to noblemen, officers high in the service, and other parents of successful Pupils.—Address, Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech, Bath.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.—The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, or the Colonies. Sixty Students will be admitted in September, 1885. For competition the Secretary of State will offer Fifteen Appointments in the Indian Public Works Department, and Two in the Indian Telegraph Department.—For particulars, apply to the SECRETARY, at the College.

ARMY and UNIVERSITY EXAMINATIONS.—J. WEST, Edinburgh University (two First Classes), F.R.Hist.S., F.A.S., and F. G. BRABANT, M.A. Oxford (three First Classes), RECEIVE a LIMITED NUMBER of RESIDENT PUPILS, to whom they offer special individual attention and a pleasant country home. Long and varied experience, especially in Sandhurst Preliminary and Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitive. Highest references. List and terms on application.—Address, Heathview, Storrington, Sussex.

HINDUSTANI TAUGHT, Cito, Tuto, Jucunde. Officers prepared for Examinations. Correct Idiom guaranteed.—PUNDIT, 7 Beechholme Road, Clapton.

HINDUSTANEE TAUGHT by a RETIRED OFFICER, Bengal Staff Corps. Has passed High Proficiency Examinations in both Hindi and Urdu at Calcutta.—Address, Captain HAYES, Junior Army and Navy Club, St. James's Street, S.W.

NEWTON COLLEGE, S. DEVON.

President of Council.—Earl of DEVON.
Head Master.—Rev. G. TOWNSEND WARNER, M.A., Trin. Coll. Camb. (appointed, 1875.)
Twelve Resident Masters.—First-Class Honour Men are at the Head of each Department.

The New Buildings lately built accommodate 200 boys, to which number from its present limit of 150 it is proposed to increase the School. The advantages offered are—

1. A large staff of Masters, of undoubted calibre and experience, so that the teaching is careful and thorough.
2. Small Classes so that all can be taught properly.
3. Supervision in study to prevent idleness as far as possible.
4. Complete subdivision into Classical and Modern Sides, Non-Latin Divisions, Junior and Preparatory Schools; so that boys can take up any branch of education, scientific or otherwise, and be thoroughly taught in it.
5. Large airy class-rooms where teaching is carried on at the least pressure to master and boy.
6. Excellent situation and playing fields, large swimming-bath, gymnasium, carpenter's shop, &c., with all kinds of appliances for keeping boys employed and so out of mischief.
7. A system of Scholarships, entrance and others, open to all.
8. A regular succession of annual public Examinations, so that parents can judge for themselves how their sons stand in comparison with those from other schools.
9. Comfortable and well-arranged accommodation, &c., in the houses, &c.
10. Opportunity for that friendly intercourse between Masters and Boys in out-of-door games, which is so conducive to the good tone of a school.
11. The Head Master has had great experience in dealing with delicate boys, and makes special arrangement for those who desire school life and yet require careful watching.
12. Army Candidates trained without the aid of a Crammer, if entered in fair time.
13. The Preparatory School is specially provided for in a separate House, with Fives' Courts of its own, &c.

The School offers SPECIAL TERMS to the Sons of Clergy, Officers, Professional Men, &c., and the fact that Six Entrance Scholarships have been won since 1882 at Winchester and Marlborough bears testimony to its excellence in the Preparatory School, while the List of other Honours is no less satisfactory.

THE MANOR HOUSE, LEE, S.E.

The SPECIAL CLASSES for the MILITIA COMPETITIVE, the STAFF COLLEGE, and PROMOTION EXAMINATIONS commenced October 15, under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel J. L. NEEDHAM, P.S.C., late Professor of Fortification, Tactics, &c., at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and formerly Garrison Instructor. Each Class limited to eight.

At the MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION, held in September last, out of FIVE Lieutenants of Militia sent up by Mr. WOLFFRAM, the following were successful :—

From A. H. MACARTNEY, Esq., Newera Elliya, Ceylon, April 25, 1882:—"The 12-bore 'Forsyth' Rifle you sent me was an excellent weapon, none could be better; it did such execution as has never before been equalled. The first time I went out I saw three rogue elephants of enormous size, one shot sufficed for each of them. Then I went out with Lieut. Hannay, R.E., now in England; we saw twenty-one elephants, and killed them all between us, fourteen falling to your rifle. Once it saved our lives; a charging rogue falling dead to it within six feet of where we stood."

From H. T. SHUBRICK, Esq., 13th L.I., 39 Onslow Gardens, London, S.W., October 8, 1884.—"After nearly five years' experience of the ·577 Express Rifle, No. 5,514, you built for me, I have much pleasure in stating that it has from first to last given me entire satisfaction. In my last jungle trip I killed four bison and a bear, each with a single shot. The penetration and killing power is something enormous, as the following particulars will show. Bison, No. 1: Shot in the throat end-on; the piece penetrated the muscles of the neck, broke one of the breast ribs, pierced the heart and lungs, and finally there were six holes in the diaphragm; further we did not trace. Bison, No. 2: Shot through the right shoulder while lying down, showing the right shoulder broken; left appeared to be so also, but had not time to skin sufficiently to make certain. Bison, No 3: Shot behind the shoulder; bullet broke up into five pieces, two of which went clean through. The above I think is enough to show what the penetration is like. I have recommended several gentlemen from you, and in each case they were as well served as I was."

THE KHARTOUM EXPEDITION.

Diary of an officer at Assouan:—Wednesday, Oct. 22, 1884.—Capt. Lovett, E.A. (Lieut. Lovett, 13th Somerset L.I.), took over the duties of staff officer at Shellal, Capt. Verner, R.B., remaining at that place in charge of boats. Thursday, Oct. 23.—Chief Pymr. Olivey, C.B., and Major Webber Smith, South Staffordshire (38th) Regt., embarked for Halfa. Monday, Oct. 27.—Two companies 2nd Duke of Cornwall's L.I. (46th Regt.) left this station en route for Halfa, one commanded by Lieut.-Col. Forster with Lieut. Harvey, the other by Capt. Vigor. A large number of artificers for the Yarrow steamers, under command of Lieut. P. J. Livingston, the Black Watch, embarked for Halfa. These men have been collected from the different regiments stationed here; they numbered about 40. Oct. 28.—The heavy division of the Camel Corps arrived. Oct. 29.—D Comy. 2nd Batn. Essex (56th) Regt., under command of Capt. Cruickshank, with Lieut. Colvin, 4th Essex, as subaltern, proceeded to Shellal, to await embarkation for Halfa.

A letter has been received from Gen. Gordon which confirms the reports of the death of Col. Stewart. He says that he has sufficient provisions to hold out until our expedition arrives to his relief. The news of Gen. Gordon's safety has, it is said, much raised the spirits of the men. The thought that all the toil they are undergoing might be useless, and the rumour that Khartoum had already fallen, were disheartening; but now that they are assured that the General is still safe, and has provisions which will last him until they arrive to his rescue, every man will work with even greater zeal and energy. Col. Trotter has arrived at Dal, and relieves Col. Maurice of the command. The latter has proceeded to Hannek.

The Mudir of Dongola has telegraphed to the Khedive that he has received a letter from Gen. Gordon, dated Khartoum, Nov. 4. Gen. Gordon appoints him Mushir, and adds, "Khartoum is all right."—[It is scarcely clear under what authority Gen. Gordon confers the high rank, which the Khedive himself has to refer to the Sultan; but it is clear Gordon intends to be absolute in the Soudan.]

The Mudir of Dongola telegraphs that he has had a conversation with the messenger who brought down to Debbeh the last letter from Gen. Gordon. He says that Khartoum was illuminated when the news arrived there of the coming of the British expedition. Every one in the city reveres Gen. Gordon, and every order is obeyed with implicit faith and confidence in him. Thirty-one boatloads of grain arrived at Khartoum while the messenger was in the town; it sold at the rate of thirty francs a bushel.

The Yarrow boat left Cairo on Wednesday, towing two barges containing railway plant intended for use at Sarras.

Eight mild cases of small-pox have occurred among the troops at Dongola. Every precaution against the spread of the disease has been taken, and the camping-grounds where it appeared have been changed. The Nile is falling rapidly, thus rendering large nuggurs useless at the cataracts. "The military authorities," it is declared by one correspondent, "have under consideration the eventuality of deferring the return of the Nile Expedition until the next rising of the river."

The Guards' detachment of the Camel Corps, marching by the desert route, is expected at Dongola on Monday.

The difficulties of the Dal Cataract have been greatly diminished by establishing fixed hawsers at the most difficult points.

Lord Wolseley was to have returned to Dongola yesterday.

Major Sandwith proceeded to Haffir, situate 30 miles north of Dongola, on Thursday, in order to ascertain the feasibility of establishing a ferry to the west bank of the river. This would enable the troops on the march to cross the Nile and follow the short caravan route to Dongola.

The Mahdi has announced to his followers that he does not intend to make any attack upon the city during the present month of Moharrem, as to do so would be contrary to the law of the Prophet.

Writing from Dal on Thursday, a correspondent of the Standard says:—"The Canadians, Indians, and soldiers work well together. The labour at the tow-ropes is incessant and most toilsome; but, hard as it is, the men prefer it to the harassing work of constantly loading and unloading the boats and carrying the baggage across difficult places. It is doubtful, indeed, whether any time is saved by these portages, although the empty boats are, of course, towed up much more rapidly than those that are laden, often requiring but little aid beyond their sails, which are far too small to assist them greatly when they are loaded. A serjeant was drowned on the 11th, and a boat upset at Ambigol, and some arms and provisions were lost. The continuous fall of the river has so changed the Cataract, that the Channel on the Western side, which is the one generally used, is completely cut up by reefs and rocks above water, and the boats will go up, henceforth, the Eastern side, which will, it is thought, be easier. The boats will probably take two days to get up the Cataract. Col. Trotter came down yesterday, and shot the rapids. The Canadians took him safely through the very worst of the rapids, and the boat did not ship a drop of water, or touch a rock. This was due partly to the skill and nerve of the crew, partly to the fact that the boat had no cargo. Its light draught of water enabled it to pass where a laden boat would have been shattered into fragments."

THE BECHUANALAND EXPEDITION.

"Downing Street, Nov. 10, 1884.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Earl of Derby to inform you that you have been selected by her Majesty's Government for the appointment of Special Commissioner in Bechuanaland. 2. The general object of your mission is as stated in the memorandum submitted by you to the Secretary of State for War—to remove the filibusters from Bechuanaland, to restore order to the territory, to reinstate the natives on their lands, to take such measures as may be necessary to prevent further depredation, and, finally, to hold the country until its further destination is known. You have also correctly defined the outlines of the policy to be adhered to, and your own duties as Special Commissioner. 3. You will, as Special Commissioner, be under the directions of Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of the Cape Colony, and her Majesty's High Commissioner in South Africa, who will, moreover, be requested to leave you a very large discretion as regards all local matters. I approve of your proposal to communicate as soon as possible with the President of the Orange Free State, and with residents in the Colony and elsewhere. 4. In regard to all operations in the field, and the organisation of the Mounted Volunteer Force, you will receive your instructions from the Secretary of State for War, and the General Commanding in South Africa, and will not be accountable to the Colonial Government or to the High Commissioner. Should you require assistance in the discharge of your civil and political duties which cannot be rendered by the military officers on your staff, you should apply to the High Commissioner to sanction any necessary payments from the fund at his disposal for the purposes of the Bechuanaland Protectorate. 5. You will, of course, clearly understand that her Majesty's Government have agreed that the Cape Ministers shall, in the first instance, endeavour to effect a peaceful settlement of the difficulties in Montsioa's country, and that active military operations shall not be commenced until a r[illegible]nable time has elapsed. It is not possible to judge h[illegible] much time may be so occupied, but in a recent teleg[illegible] of the 31st ult. Sir H. Robinson has indicated that six weeks might be required. Her Majesty's Government sincerely trust that the Cape Government may be able to propose such a settlement as can be honourably accepted; but it is obvious that in the unfortunate event of their failing to do so, no time should be lost in removing from the protectorate those who have violated its independence and seized the lands of the protected Chief. 6. The Cape Government have stated that (if their mission be successful) they think they will be in a position to submit to the Colonial Parliament as soon as it meets a scheme for the government of the country pending its annexation to the Colony. Should their expectations be fulfilled, it will become a question for the consideration of Sir H. Robinson, after consultation with you, whether you should continue in charge of the protectorate until the necessary measures for taking it over have been adopted by the Cape Parliament. If, on the other hand, the annexation of the territory to the Colony should for the present prove impracticable, it will be necessary to maintain within it a sufficient armed police force, and, if it is necessary, to increase the force now in Bechuanaland; suitable men for this purpose will doubtless be procurable from among the Mounted Volunteers whom you are about to enrol. 7. Your full knowledge of the affairs of Bechuanaland renders it unnecessary to give you detailed explanations respecting the circumstances and the persons with whom you will have to deal, and Lord Derby only desires to add, in conclusion, that he will always be glad to receive, and will attach much value to, any recommendations or observations with which you may favour him from time to time on questions of policy and civil administration.—I am, &c., Robert G. W. Herbert.

Sir C. Warren, K.C.M.G."

Then follows Sir C. Warren's Memorandum:—"Mission and Military Expedition to Bechuanaland. Memorandum by Sir C. Warren, K.C.M.G. London, October 29.—1. The object of this mission and expedition is to remove the filibusters from Bechuanaland, to pacificate the territory, to reinstate the natives on their lands, to take such measures as may be necessary to prevent further depredations, and, finally, to hold the country until its further destination is known. 2. It is to be understood that although the filibusters are for the most part whites, they are in the habit of employing natives in their pay. The pacification of the country, therefore, will extend not only to the whites, but also to the native population, and will render necessary an armed native police, similar to that established with success in 1879, during a portion of which time the number of native police was in excess of that of the white police. 3. The first object of the expedition is to remove, expel, or capture the filibusters, and in order to do this successfully, it is desirable to limit as far as practicable their powers of recruiting their strength from the neighbouring territories of the Transvaal and Orange Free State. It will be therefore necessary, as far as is practicable, to alienate the sympathies of all the respectable whites from these filibusters. With this object in view, I propose to visit the Dutch-speaking population about the most important centres, and to explain to them personally the object of the expedition. These centres are the Paarl District, Cradock, and the Orange Free State. I would visit President Bland at Bloemfontein, with whom I am on intimate terms, and confer with him on the subject. I would also propose to call together, provided that the Transvaal Government sees no objection, a few of my old friends among the inhabitants of the Bloemhoff district, and explain to them the object and policy of the British Government. 4. The policy, as I understand it from the advices from Cape Town, as enunciated by the High Commissioner, is,—There is room for all. It is impossible to ignore the fact that in process of time the white colonists will extend throughout the country wherever the natives are, no matter what impediments are put in their way. All classes appear to agree to this, from the aggressive filibusters on the one side to the natives themselves on the other. The only question is,—How is this to come about? (a.) It can be done in a manner actually beneficial to the native. (b.) It can be done by violence and by the destruction of the native races. The first policy is that of a Government which has the interest of the natives at heart. The second is that of the filibusters. The carrying out, however, of such a policy as that under (a) is a matter of the greatest delicacy. It can only be carried out by Imperial officers, who must have no stake whatever in the commercial interests and speculation of the country. 5. There is land in Bechuanaland which may be occupied by whites, and reports were sent in 1878 and 1879 as to how these lands might be given out. But no spoliation of the natives should take place; no farms should be taken from them; and their waters should be left entirely in their hands. The natives should be confirmed, after due inquiry, in what they rightfully possess, but there are thousands of acres of arid land, 'called dry farms,' which may well be given out to white settlers under due supervision under the occupation clause, where water may be stored by means of dams, or where wells may be dug at their own expense. The native chiefs fully recognise that the white population will extend over the country; all they seek is a policy of 'give and take'—that is to say, they are quite willing to give up portions of their dry land provided they in their turn are able to enjoy the protection of a powerful and just Government. 6. It is considered that when it is fully understood by the white colonists that the British Government does not wish simply to hem them in and prevent their further expansion, but is willing to further it under due control and without violation of native rights, properties, and privileges, the sympathies of the better classes in the Orange Free State and Transvaal will become lukewarm towards the filibusters, whose actions, they will understand, are damaging their own prospects in the future. This will be more particularly the case when they understand that the British Government is firmly resolute in its action, and is determined to employ force in the cause of justice whenever it may be necessary."

Our Woolwich correspondent, writing last night, says:—"Sir Charles Warren is in advance of the stores for his Expedition, the bulk of which are only now being prepared. A quantity exceeding 1,000 tons will be taken to the Cape in the Pembroke Castle, which sails next Wednesday with the mounted volunteers from London, and the Expedition, although on a small scale, will be completely equipped in every detail, and in proportion to its numbers on the plan laid down for a full army corps. The Commissariat officers at Woolwich Dockyard sent yesterday 300 tons of provisions to the Pembroke Castle in the East India Docks, and the Ordnance Store Department is loading barges at the Royal Arsenal with bales of blankets, pioneer and entrenching implements, and all the paraphernalia embraced under the head of camp-furniture and utensils for shipment in the same vessel. The Royal Laboratory Department has been called upon to supply signal rockets, with the usual ammunition, and several tons of gun-cotton slabs will be taken for blasting and breaching purposes, this explosive being carried wet in small tanks, for its better protection from accident. The Expedition will be speedily provided to meet the skirmishing tactics of the Cape freebooters, should they resist, the artillery batteries having double issues of shrapnel, shell, and case-shot for searching irregular ground and brushwood; and four Gardiner machine-guns were yesterday dispatched to assist in such operations. Four 7-pr. guns for mountain service were also shipped, and a train of water-carts, store-waggons, and ambulances will follow. Lieut. Huntingford, R.N., late of H.M.S. Tyne, who has been appointed transport officer at the Cape on behalf of the Admiralty, sailed in the Lydian Monarch, which left the Thames at daybreak yesterday. He will superintend the landing of the troops and the stores at Durban. The volunteer cavalry will not be sent out as ordinary troops; but arrangements have been made with the owners of the Castle Line of steamers for their conveyance as passengers. The Pembroke Castle will probably go no farther than Cape Town, where the Taymouth Castle, or some other coasting steamer belonging to the same company, will reship them for Natal. The Admiralty transport officers, although taking no part in dispatching the volunteers, will provide quarters in the same ship for some men of the Royal Engineers who are going out to form the telegraph section of the Expedition.”

The following officers have been selected for special service in Bechuanaland:—Brevet Major Barker. Capts. Conder and Leverson. Lieuts. Bythell, A. E. Haynes, and Mackay, R.E. Capts. Thornton, Rifle Brigade; Trotter, R.A.; Johnson, 2nd Dragoons; and Watson, Suffolk Regt. Lieuts. Wemyss, West York Regt.; Davidson, King's Royal Rifle Corps; and Churchward, North Lancashire Regt.

The first contingent of the South African irregular force will leave London on Wednesday morning for Tilbury, where they will embark on board Messrs. Donald Currie's mail steamer Pembroke Castle, for conveyance to the Cape. This contingent will number about 300 men and 10 officers. Several doctors accompany the force as troopers, but will act in the capacity of surgeons when occasion demands. A second contingent of about equal strength will leave Gravesend on Dec. 4, under the command of Col. the Hon. Paul Methuen, in one of the Union Company's mail steamers. Besides this irregular cavalry force, Sir Charles Warren will raise an irregular artillery corps at the Cape, numbering about 100 men, who will be horsed and provided with guns as soon as the force is complete. The regular force to be engaged comprises two regiments of cavalry, one battery of artillery, one regiment of infantry, and several companies of engineers and commissariat corps.

Several Militia officers have applied for permission to join the expedition. It has, however, been decided that no such officers can be permitted to leave the United Kingdom for this purpose, but any applications for ordinary leave to travel abroad will be granted.

With the departures of the additional troops to supplement the forces at the disposal of Sir Charles Warren, a tolerable estimate, based on official details, of the composition and strength of the troops may be formed. The 13th Hussars, now en route from Bombay (where it embarked on the 11th inst.), is the only cavalry regiment at present ordered to South Africa, “for temporary service,” as their orders state, “on their way home.” This regiment has been away from home ten years, having embarked for Bengal in 1874, and has an establishment of 476 of all ranks. The 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons, now in Natal, have acquired considerable experience of the country, having arrived there in 1881. Their establishment is 493 of all ranks, and 300 troop horses. Of artillery there are at present only two batteries in South Africa, C Baty. 1st Brig. (Major F. H. French) and No. 8 Baty. Western Division, Garrison Artillery (Major A. G. Dugdale); but two more batteries from England are to be despatched, H Baty. 4th Brig. (Major C. H. Atchison) and No. 1 Baty. 1st Brig. South Irish Division (Major E. A. Ollivant). The former embarked on Thursday, viâ the Suez Canal, and the latter yesterday, for Capetown. There is only one company of Engineers (the 32nd) in South Africa, and to strengthen this force No. 7 Compy. embarked on the 12th inst. In infantry the command has only recently been strengthened by the arrival of the 58th Regt., and with the 1st Batn. Royal Scots, the total strength of this arm in South Africa is about 3,500,—viz., 1st Royal Scots, five companies of the 41st Regt., 58th and 82nd Regts., and 91st Highlanders.

The authorities having decided on despatching a balloon equipment to Bechuanaland, orders have been received at Chatham directing a party of the Royal Engineers to be in readiness to embark. The officer selected to proceed in charge of the equipment is Major H. Elsdale.

The conditions under which the remaining 600 volunteers are being raised for the Cape are so liberal and attractive that already the services of the requisite number have been secured. The “six hundred,” on their arrival at the Cape, will be attested and formed into a regiment of Mounted Infantry. The uniform will be of yellow corduroy breeches and gaiters, and a short tunic, and a “slouch” hat. There will be very little difference in the dress between officers and men, so that it will be difficult for the filibusters to single out those who may be in command. Troopers will be paid 4s. a day, and 1s. a day will accumulate as deferred pay, so that there will be a considerable sum for each man to receive at the close of the campaign. Amongst those who have already joined are numbers of men who are known to be good “all-round shots,” who have been trained either in the Militia, Yeomanry, or the Volunteer Forces. Equestrianism is not absolutely necessary in its highest form; but “handy sportsmen, men who can handle a double-barrelled rifle,” are preferred.

The Brigade of Guards has been called upon to furnish a number of men to form a signalling party to proceed to Bechuanaland.

It is contemplated to re-form the Diamond Field Horse, which rendered signal service in the Griqualand West rebellion.

It being the intention to form a remount depôt at the Cape for the mounted corps in Bechuanaland, a number of experienced non-commissioned officers are required for this service, and volunteers have been called for from various Cavalry regiments on the home establishment.

It is understood that all the English horses now in Egypt are to be sent from that country to the Cape for the use of the Cape Mounted Rifles.

The following are the rates of pay for officers serving with irregular force in Bechuanaland:—Colonel, £1 10s. per diem; major, £1; captain, 15s.; subaltern, 11s. Free rations will be issued in addition. The officers of the Mounted Rifles are to be dressed like the men, and their rank will be shown, as in the Royal Navy, by rings of braid of the same colour as the jacket, round the sleeves—one for a lieutenant, two for a captain, three for a major, four for a lieutenant-colonel, and five for a colonel.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND ARMY EXAMINATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE “ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.”

Sir,—Having held appointments during so many years at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and having, therefore, had ample opportunities of observing the successive changes made in military examinations and those in the methods of preparing for them, I have read with interest the articles in the Army and Navy Gazette on these examinations and the tutors arising out of them. I must confess that the writer of your articles does not appear to make sufficient distinction between the different kinds of Public Schools as respects the means they take to meet the requirements of the competitive examinations for the Military Colleges; nor does he seem to me to give the credit they deserve to those schools which long ago shook off the mere classical tradition. Some 20 years ago or less, but few cadets entered the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, without the assistance of a crammer, unless they had been educated at Cheltenham, which for 30 years or more has always been very successful in preparing candidates for the Army; and it was noticed that those who got into the Royal Military Academy from this school, usually succeeded in greatly improving their position while passing through, showing clearly that the education they had received was suited to the purpose. Other public schools of the same class as Cheltenham, Wellington, and Clifton, have followed its example, and have been notoriously successful in preparing candidates for the Royal Military Academy, while the old public schools, such as Eton, Charterhouse, Marlborough, Harrow, &c., which have of late years established classes for preparing for the Army, have been more or less successful. I could, if necessary, give statistics, taken from the records of the Royal Military Academy, to prove this statement. As regards the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, the results from these schools have not been so satisfactory, and the chief reason for this has always appeared to me and others to be,—that as less is generally thought of a place gained at Sandhurst than of one at Woolwich, on account of the examination for the latter being much more difficult than that for the former, the credit of passing a boy into Sandhurst does not rebound so much to the tenor of the school, and that less encouragement is given to boys to prepare for Sandhurst. In short, an entrance into Woolwich is considered, like a scholarship at a college of a university, an honour, and is recorded as such by the school; whereas an entrance at Sandhurst is not placed on the same footing. Mr. Wilson, the headmaster of Clifton College, gives another reason for the great number of candidates getting into Sandhurst from “crammers,” viz., the greater age of admission, up to 20 years, instead of 18 years old, as for Woolwich; and this, no doubt, tends to increase the number of those sent to “crammers,” who can send candidates up a year or more later than those from public schools. It is not, however, fair to give the whole credit to a “crammer” for a success gained by a pulpil who has been only a few months with him, but has had some years' training at a school previously. On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that, as a “crammer” once said to me, they have a number of “lame ducks,”—that is, those who have been declared unfit by the schools where they have previously studied, and those who have put off preparation until but a short time before they have to go up for examination. A comparison by statistics of successful candidates is not altogether satisfactory, as no account is taken of the large numbers of the unsuccessful ones, some of whom are better men than many of those who pass. It can hardly be denied that “crammers” have taught something to public schools, especially on two points,—inducing boys to work hard and giving constant individual instruction. The weak point of the “cramming” system is well-known to be the want of control or discipline in leisure hours; and if, as the writer of your articles appears to think will be the case, the raising of marks for French and German will tend to force boys abroad to train for military examinations, the evils arising from lax supervision will undoubtedly be increased. As respects the new scheme for the examination for Sandhurst, it appears to me to be in most respects satisfactory; and as it assimilates very nearly to that for Woolwich, it substitutes one for two kinds of training for the Army, a great advantage to boys preparing for it. The literature examination has always appeared to me more or less of a sham, for how can a boy of 18 be supposed to possess a critical knowledge of plays and poems. A classical training gives an unfair advantage for Woolwich, as a candidate can take Latin and Greek as one subject, and so has five instead of four subjects to obtain marks from, while those not taking up classics are limited to four subjects only. This is not the case for Sandhurst. There is a great deal of nonsense talked about cramming. Competitive examinations have certainly necessitated a certain amount of cramming at the last, whether at school or with a tutor or crammer. Is there no cramming for honours at the Universities.—I am, &c.,

Whale Island in Portsmouth Harbour having been abandoned as a site for Naval barracks, it is proposed to plant the part not required for Naval purposes with trees. It is also in contemplation to convert the Convict Barracks into sailors' quarters. Meanwhile, the state of the Duke of Wellington continues to give great dissatisfaction in the service.

THE LAW OF NATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE “ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.”

Sir,—As many of your military readers may not realise the respective positions of British and French interests in China, will you allow me, so far as I can, and as shortly as possible, to elucidate the laws affecting them? These are—(1), jura naturæ; (2), universus consensus gentium, which led to the adoption in the twelfth century of that remarkable and equitable compilation called the “Consolato del Mare,” it is supposed by St. Louis of France. But we shall see farther on in what legal position France has placed herself vis-à-vis to us and other nations, since the Crimean War. At this epoch Great Britain agreed to the Declaration of Paris, making all cargoes safe in neutral vessels, Lord Clarendon having, at the Conference, in March, 1856, at the invitation of Count Walewski, turned the waiving of British rights during the Crimean War into a final surrender, not with the consent of Parliament, but by the undoubted prerogative of the Crown to make Treaties with foreign Powers. Now, what occurred? The Russians sent their cargoes by land to Königsberg and Memel, shipped them in Prussian or Swedish bottoms, where they were perfectly safe under the Queen's Order in Council of March 28, 1854, viz.:—“In order to preserve the commerce of neutrals, her Majesty is willing, for the present, to waive a part of the belligerent rights appertaining to her by the Law of Nations.” Rule IV. of the Declaration of Paris puts an end to all paper, or what may be termed ocean, blockades, or those ordered in Council after a declaration of war by cruisers in the open sea; and this limitation by the Declaration of Paris is further increased by improved communication between countries; for if Formosa, Canton, and the other ports be blockaded, the Chinese have still a perfect right to transport all their merchandise by land to the nearest neutral harbour, say, Macao, or Hong Kong, overland or in small crafts, as the Russians did to Königsberg, and then ship them in neutral bottoms, where they will be perfectly safe from capture under the Declaration of Paris; and this, supposing that war be declared between France and China, and a Marine Ordinance issued by the former corresponding to our Orders in Council. France could not sequestrate the property of the Zollverein, amounting to over £4,000,000 afloat in 1870-71. She is now for the second time about to reap the fruits of her own cultivation in China. Finally, this last shows us how we stood on the brink of a grave danger, in respect to the Channel Tunnel, when those who were for its construction spoke of the necessity of a declaration of war prior to warlike operations, which was disproved by the examples given by Col. Maurice, bringing before every thinking military man the truth, “that to defend England and India territorially, without the command of the sea, and constituted as Continental armies now are, is a simple strategical impossibility.”—I am, &c.,

SUPPLY AND TRANSPORT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE “ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.”

Sir,—The vexed question of supply and transport has recently been the subject of a considerable amount of discussion, both in the Army and out of it. Comparatively little attention has, however, been bestowed on one most important branch of that question, viz., the present organisation of the Commissariat and Transport Corps, on the officers and men of which devolves the arduous duty of conveying the various supplies from the base of operations to the required points in the theatre of war. This corps is divided into companies, and it may not be out of place to say a few words as to the manner in which the commanders of these companies are selected. They may be briefly divided into two classes. The first consists of infantry officers, who, after five years' service, are allowed to volunteer for the Commissariat and Transport Staff; the second of officers formerly belonging to the defunct Control Department, who, after having performed commissariat (i.e., purely non-military) duties all their lives, are suddenly pitchforked into the command of a transport company consisting of 86 men and 63 horses, and liable to be augmented to double that strength at a moment's notice on the outbreak of war. With regard to the first-class, it is obvious that, however efficient they may be as infantry officers, they can have no experience in the management of horses in large numbers, in fitting harness, and in other purely transport work. Of the second class, it is no disparagement to say that to the inexperience of their brethren of the Line, in transport work in particular, they must add a complete ignorance of military things in general. It is true that both classes of officers are, before assuming command of their companies, hurried through a short course of transport work at Aldershot; but most of the time devoted to this is wasted in practising the officers in recruits' drill (which the probationers from the Line do not require) and in the cavalry sword exercise, which is useless for officers in a non-combatant service. The above system, faulty in itself, is rendered still more so by the perpetual friction which goes on between the seniors in the department and the probationers from the Line, the former availing themselves of every opportunity to make things unpleasant for their unfortunate juniors, a fact which is pretty well understood throughout the Army, and which is fully attested by the difficulty which is experienced in getting volunteers from the Line for the Commissariat and Transport Staff, and by the number of resignations amongst those who have been induced to volunteer. Such a system could scarcely have been successful, even if a fair trial had been given to it; and most assuredly it has not been given a fair trial.—I am, &c.,

THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I must beg your indulgence once more to allow me a small space to answer the severe criticisms on my letter of the 18th ult. of "Fusilier" and others, which have appeared in a recent issue. Your correspondents are severe, and not altogether complimentary; but let me assure them I am not the wilful or thoughtless detractor of the Militia they seem to imagine, but one like themselves, who has served long, and I hope not without credit, in a force he was proud to belong to. One thing I have observed and admired during my long connection with the Militia of more than a quarter of a century is the zeal, the devotion, and loyalty of its officers to their branch of the service; but it is often this very loyalty which blinds them to its defects, and makes them unwilling to listen to a word not in its favour; and to these laudable qualities I attribute the outbreak of wrathful indignation which I trace in every line of their letters. I am afraid the expression, "a sham military service," has given mortal offence, and yet it is true; and I feel sure the majority of thinking men in the Militia, as well as in the Regular Army, hold the same view. I have given my reasons for saying so, and I adhere to them, and still maintain that to this cause must be attributed the serious want of officers in the force. I may be mistaken, and I shall be only too glad if it can be shown that I am so, and that the Militia does occupy its true position, that of the National Army for the defence of the country, and that it is capable and ready to enter upon its duties, strong in numbers and complete in organisation and equipment, because that is the real question, and the question the country and the taxpayer is interested in having answered. I will now, as briefly as I can, meet the charges of your correspondents. First, with regard to "Fusilier's" objection to my statement that —"The Army quite understands the position assigned to the Militia," &c., I am afraid his argument is rather weak, for it amounts to this,—that because officers of the Army, when associated with those of the Militia on duty, behave towards them as gentlemen, it is a proof that they acknowledge their military status to be on a level with their own. Now, I have been a good deal mixed up on duty with officers of the Army, and it is with genuine pleasure I recall their uniform kindness, courtesy, and good-feeling; but I hope I was never so simple as to suppose that because they were always pleasant and agreeable, they placed me on a military equality with themselves. I am certain they did not, and that "they quite understood the position assigned to the Militia." With regard to his second charge, I cannot help saying he is wanting in courtesy, in so far as he does not hesitate to throw discredit on my positive statement that "It is within my own knowledge that an officer commanding a brigade depôt was once censured," &c. This he, knowing nothing of the case, calls a wild statement; but it is, I repeat, a fact, however much he may wish to disbelieve it. To your correspondent "Sphinx," I will only answer that abuse is no argument, and that among gentlemen and officers such accusations as "sacrificing truth to sarcasm" is happily of rare occurrence. Coming to my statement that Militia officers have no military authority outside their own regiments—I do not refer to embodied Militia, to Militia adjutants, Reserve officers, or to Militia officers specially attached to Line regiments, but am dealing with the Militia as we all understand it—if I am wrong, things must have changed very much since I left the force, and I am quite open to correction, and to be told on authority that the colonel of a Militia regiment on duty with his corps at a brigade depôt does, in the absence of the officer commanding the Regimental District, assume as a right entire command of the whole station, and issue his orders from the orderly-room of the depôt; or that, should he chance to be the senior officer in any garrison or camp, he would pro tem. assume the command of the whole force, Regular as well as Militia, and give out the garrison orders. If not, then I maintain I am right, and to quote an instance where a Militia colonel was allowed to drill a Brigade of Regulars and Militia on a particular occasion, no more proves that I am wrong than does the fact of Lord Ranelagh being placed in command for the day of a mixed brigade on Easter Monday. With regard to my saying that in no case can "a Militia officer sit on a court-martial to try soldiers," I have been told on high military authority I am wrong, because that, under certain conditions, he can; I therefore frankly accept your correspondent's corrections, but, at the same time, if it is the rule, I am at a loss to understand what I have known to happen once and once again when up for duty with my regiment at the brigade depôt, where, although a score of Militia officers were available, none were summoned on courts-martial to try soldiers; but the Militia and Volunteer adjutants were sent for from all parts of the regimental district, at inconvenience to themselves and expense to the public, for this duty. But these are minor points, and scarcely affect the main question, which is this,—Is the Militia under the present system such as the country requires to protect it from the danger of a foreign invasion?—I am, &c., Monitor.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "Monitor," having made for himself a well-fitting fools'-cap, may be left in his obscure corner like any other ignoramus who has not learnt his lesson; but joking apart, have we not heard enough of the petty sarcasms and questionable inuendos anent the position of Militia officers? Are they not "men and brethren?" And is not want of opportunity the only reason why they have not so far run in the race of medal-hunters? Is it really worth while for any outsider or cornered dunce to discuss the question of our military position, without probably ever having taken the trouble to make the most casual investigation; and would it not be far better for the public to form their own judgment by visiting any of the camps during the annual training? The force is melting away, and until steps are taken to remedy the present system of recruiting, the vanishing point may be reached sooner than is expected; but what, meanwhile, are those in authority about? And where, oh, where! is the Inspector-General of Militia that a committee is not formed to take evidence on a subject second to that of the Navy only? Suggestions in the Press are "as transient as the inconstant's sigh." They should carry the weight of officialism.—I am, &c.,

Lieutenant-Colonel.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I have read with interest and satisfaction, in the paper of Nov. 12, an account of the Bechuanaland Expedition, giving its officers, its composition, and the accoutrements of the force. This, I believe, is the first time, after a lapse of many years, that the system of gentlemen volunteers has been adopted; and, considering the recent conduct of our soldiers under circumstances similar to those that may be expected on this expedition, nothing could be wiser, speaking only from a military point of view. Our private soldiers of the ordinary type fight well and doggedly when in large numbers and shoulder to shoulder, but they have no power of forming any plan, and little of sticking to any course of action if isolated, or split-up, or on duty in small parties, and especially are they at sea in a strange and uncivilised country. Now, this is where we may fairly anticipate a great improvement in the forthcoming war. Gentlemen volunteers will be able to act independently, having more self-reliance, and being less accustomed to mechanical obedience than to intelligent furthering of the orders or wishes of their superiors. Altogether, if we may give an opinion, the force, as it is composed, is far better qualified to contend against a barbarous enemy in a strange land, or even against the semi-civilised Boers. We observe, too, with pleasure, that shooting has been an essential element in the considerations which have weighed with those who have organised the force; and here, again, the chances of good shooting are far greater amongst the classes from whom the men have been selected than amongst the classes from which our Army is generally supplied. To myself, as the writer of a letter in your valuable paper a few weeks ago, on "Cavalry Weapons," it is particularly pleasant to notice that the armament of this force or part of the expedition is very similar to what I then suggested, although, of course, the letter is too recent, to mention no other impossibility, to make it at all possible that there is any other connection than mere similarity between the two facts. I refer to the statement that there is to be a cavalry corps called the "Lancer Pioneers." I notice that beyond the lance they are to carry a saw-backed sword. Nothing could be more useful in an unreclaimed country, and the manner of its carriage—in a scabbard attached to the saddle—leaves the cavalryman much freer and more fit for action even on horseback, unspeakably so on foot. The only improvement on this novelty would be to attach the sword almost diagonally across saddle or saddle-cloth and under the thigh or flap, as is done by the Mexican rancheros and some of the Egyptians, pashas and others,—Zebehr Pasha, for instance. This is generally considered more "ship-shape," and does not get in the way of the horse so as to irritate him, or impede his motion by knocking against side or leg. However, the whole arrangement of the expedition, so far as it is publicly known, perhaps, excepting the astonishing innovation of a field printing-office, seems to be smart and businesslike, and contrasts strongly with the dilatory, cumbersome, and almost useless Nile Expedition; and whoever he may be that has had the organising of this matter, he must surely meet with unqualified approval at the hands of the public and those to whom he is responsible. Further, if the Fates are not against it, the Expedition should meet with the success which has been the one lacking element of our recent campaigns in South Africa.—I am, &c., Subaltern.

[We by no means agree with our correspondent. The experience of gentlemen volunteers in the Zulu Campaign was disastrous, and we regret the whole force is not "regular."—Ed. A. & N. G.]

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—I have read with much interest the criticism in your leading articles of the last two weeks on the new War Office edict concerning the future education of our Army officers. This document, we are informed, was framed upon the advice of the head masters of our Public Schools. What, may I ask, can be the knowledge possessed by those gentlemen of what is necessary to a soldier for a successful prosecution of his career, when they deliberately ignore, and to all intents and purposes bar, science and freehand-drawing as qualifications, and place a knowledge of Latin and Greek in the first rank? And again, what are we to think of the advice of these gentlemen on questions of education, when they devise schemes which, again, to all intents and purposes exclude our own history and literature from the curriculum? The new Warrant, should it come into force, means a reversion to the old Public Schools' course of study pure and simple. To me this new departure furnishes the climax to that tissue of absurdities to which the British Army has been subjected of late years at the hands of ignorant civilian would-be reformers. Your articles go to the root of the whole matter in pointing out that the question at issue seems not to be, "What is required for the public services?" but "What will the authorities of our Public Schools condescend to teach?" It is for the public to decide which side is to prevail, whether our public servants, as you so tersely put it, are to be abreast and ahead of those of other nations, or whether the serenity of the pedagogue, and his fossilated curriculums, are to remain undisturbed? This appears to me to be the main question for the public to decide. As regards Army candidates, the remedy is very much in their own hands. The statistics quoted by you are important, and prove conclusively that some of the more modern schools, such as the Oxford Military College and Westward Ho School, have already acted upon the advice tendered by you; namely, they have entered upon a competition with the crammer, and have beaten him simply by the adoption of a rational curriculum.—I am, &c., C. Wyndham, Major.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—By last mail from India the colonel of a regiment I commanded for over a dozen years writes that his corps, now stationed on the North-West Frontier, is, as usual, some 300 under its strength, with the prospect of being still weaker when 60 more time-expired men go home this season. It is to be feared it is "Ex uno disce omnes" as regards the state of our European battalions, for Col. Chapman, the Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India, has very ably put forward a scheme for strengthening them. Amongst his suggestions is one to establish some county organisations to provide men discharged to the Reserve with employment, and some regiments in India have already warmly responded, as recorded in your paper of the 25th ult. If a committee, formed in each regimental district under its colonel, with the officers commanding Militia, Volunteers, and the depôt as members, and gentlemen of influence in the county as patrons, succeeds in interesting the large public companies and the great employers of labour around into showing a little true patriotism by encouraging with employment those who have already served their country and are ready to do so again, we may hope for a higher class of recruits, and more of them, when they see that their future is, to a certain extent, assured on their returning home from serving with the colours. And, with better recruits, we should have an improvement in the Army morally and physically. Surely, the temporary troubles connected with employers having a fair proportion of old soldiers and Reservists in their service is a very small assurance-fee for the wealthy to pay for the greater security it will give them against an enormous Income-tax to make our Army fit for a real big fight? If these suggestions are approved by the authorities, the first point will be that men coming home from India and the Colonies should be discharged at their regimental depôt, instead of at Gosport and other places, where they now drop a good deal of their deferred pay and ready-money. "Homes" may be established at the depôts, where men of good character may be lodged at as little expense as possible whilst awaiting employment, and the large profits made by regimental canteens might partially be used in paying the expenses connected with them. Much may, perhaps, be done with this proposed county assistance for our Reserve Army and recruiting, and, with genuine loyal zeal on the part of Regular, Militia, and Volunteer officers to accept and work out the established system, notwithstanding their original dislike to it; still more may be done towards welding together these various branches so as to form a common interest in the newly named organisation; that may gradually implant into more thousands than of yore that esprit de corps in a territorial designation that for the last century has been felt in a dear old number.—I am, &c., Folkestone, Nov. 5. J. H. Dunne, Major-Gen.

Sir,—I see by the papers that Col. Chapman, R.A., Military Secretary to Sir Donald Stewart, gave a lecture at Simla the other day, on employment of soldiers in civil life, on discharge or removal from the service. In his lecture the following paragraph appeared:—"The changes which have been introduced into Army administration during the last 14 years have been authoritatively made, and have been endorsed by national approval. For the most part they have been unacceptable to the officers of the Army, and it is not too much to say that the resistance to their introduction which officers throughout the service have systematically practised has been sufficient to prevent all chance of vitality in a new system." In the first place, it may be asked what direct connection is there between the changes in the Army of the last 14 years and the subject of the lecturer? Why, therefore, has this offensive paragraph been dragged in, as it were, by the hair? If the above quotation has any meaning at all, it clearly means that the reason why the changes introduced into the Army the last 14 years have signally failed (as has been undoubtedly demonstrated) is on account of the resistance of the officers to these measures, which, according to Col. Chapman, they have "systematically practised." In making this assertion, Col. Chapman is not only guilty of stating what is not the fact, but of gratuitously publishing an uncalled-for, gross, and infamous libel on the officers of the Army. It is quite true that the changes referred to have not been to a great extent approved of by the officers, because they foresaw that they would fail, and, moreover, curtail a vast amount of mischief, as regards the well-being of the service. At the same time, the officers have done their best under the new Army organisation to make the service efficient, and to turn into soldiers the raw material with which they have been supplied. Col. Chapman deserves credit for the trouble he has taken with regard to the employment of discharged soldiers, although I think the lines which he has laid down to that end are to a great extent visionary and unpractical. The idea held by him that the Government cannot legislate to give soldiers a priority for employment by the State over civilians cannot hold water for a moment. So also the expectation that the nation will, in the form of employers of labour, voluntarily, except perhaps in isolated cases, submit to an indirect tax (for that is what it amounts to) by employing discharged soldiers at a disadvantage to their business, is in my opinion destined to meet with disappointment. It is the duty of the State to lead the way by reserving berths for discharged soldiers; such action may then, more or less, be assisted by private individuals, especially by those having any connection with the Forces, either Reserve or Regular. Col. Chapman, at any rate, has raised a good deal of smoke, though but little fire be underneath, and has succeeded in bringing his own name before the public. Unfortunately, the rôle Col. Chapman has adopted of traducing his own cloth, whilst at the same time he gives support to the so-called Army Reform of the last 14 years, may lead honest men, who are well aware of the rottenness of those changes, to think, and with some reason, that he is bidding for favour from the political magnates at the War Office who introduced these new measures, and who at the present time virtually command the Army.—I am, &c., An Old Soldier.

A Royal Warrant has been issued granting to staff officers of pensioners honorary rank as follows:—As lieutenant-colonel, after seven years' service on full pay, with the brevet or honorary rank of major; as major after 20 years' service on full pay.

The St. Petersburg Journal says that the Militia, or territorial army, was up till the other day very badly armed, and that in the event of its being called out it would have had only muzzleloaders of a very old pattern, being looked upon as nothing more than a substitute for troops generally employed for ordinary service at home. The new military law provides for the Militia being constituted into a force capable of meeting the enemy in the field in the event of being required, with permanent formation and armed accordingly. The muskets now used are, therefore, to be replaced by rapid-firing Berdan rifles, while the non-commissioned officers are to be armed with Smith and Vesson revolvers. Each legion is to be ready for the field within a month of being called up.

The following regulations for the classification and disposal of military prisoners have been issued with the General Orders for the present month:—A soldier sentenced to imprisonment (termed in the Army Act, 1881, a military prisoner) will be classified and dealt with as follows,—Class (a). A prisoner convicted of offences under the Army Act, Sec. 17 and 18 (4) (5), or of any offences of a similar character, under Sec. 41, will be committed to a public prison. Class (b). A prisoner convicted of an offence constituting a breach of discipline only will be committed to a military prison; but if the term of imprisonment to be undergone does not exceed the limit from time to time prescribed for sentences to be passed in cells attached to barracks, or in garrison provost prisons, the imprisonment may, if the General officer think expedient, be inflicted in those places of confinement. A military prisoner whose sentence exceeds the aforesaid limit may be committed to a provost prison as a temporary measure, pending commitment to either a military or public prison. In those districts that are without public or military prisons, or where the military prisons are full, or not available on account of a prisoner's religious denomination or other cause, application will be made to the Quartermaster-General for instructions as to the disposal of prisoners on Army Form A25, "Application for Route," on which should be stated the classification and religious denomination of the prisoner, and the sentence awarded.

The British Pure Ice Manufacturing Company, Limited, held their first general, or statutory, meeting at the works, 54 Bankside, on the 14th inst., when the chairman stated that more than sufficient capital had been subscribed to enable the company to commence operations, and also drew attention to the very favourable prospects of the undertaking. The shareholders, after having passed a vote of thanks to the chairman, proceeded to inspect the works, which are now in progress.

Rowland's Macassar Oil is universally in high repute for its unprecedented success during the last eighty years, in promoting the growth, restoring, improving, and beautifying the human hair. It may now also be had in a golden colour, and is especially suited for fair-haired children. Ask anywhere for Rowland's Macassar Oil, and avoid spurious imitations. Sizes, 3s 6d, 7s, 10s 6d, and 21s; sent by post for 3d above these prices to A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20 Hatton Garden, London.

IF a man, being in well-grounded apprehension of an attack of burglars, were to publish an exact account of all the approaches, of the position of the windows, of the state of the fastenings, of the keys, locks, and bolts, to his house, and to enumerate his means of defence, with the view of showing that he was helpless, and could not be helped from outside, it might be suspected that he was, if not in league with the burglars, at least interested in encouraging their attack on his premises. "See," he cries, "there is the road from Merv to my hall-door quite uncovered! The avenue from Pulakhatun to my kitchen is open! My hall-door will give way at a kick! I have millions of gold in my back-parlour! But there is only Mongol Pandy, a notorious coward, to keep watch there. There is only a sick gardener, whom I suspect of leaning towards burglary, in the outhouse! The lock is off my fowling-piece! My revolver has no ammunition! The police are distant and inefficient! Oh, dear! what am I to do?" This, published in the "Thieves' Gazette," ought certainly to be followed by instant action on the part of Bill Sykes. But is it wise to publish it? The only excuse for such criminal folly would be found in the natural disinclination of the burglars to act on such suspiciously candid confessions. Criminal and foolish it is on any plea to place at the disposal of possible enemies—nay, under the eyes of the very enemy most to be feared—such information as the St. James's Gazette supplied last Wednesday to the Military Attaché at Chesham House, from sources we need not indicate. The only hope we have is that he will not believe it,—that he will regard it as being, from his point of view, too good to be true. It may be all true; and if it be so, and if the tendencies of our great Asiatic antagonist could be encouraged by opportunity, it is evident that the cries of alarm and distress of our contemporary would encourage the burglar to try to cause the catastrophe our contemporary so much dreads. To invoke the names of Sir Donald Stewart, Sir F. Roberts, and Sir C. Macgregor as authorities in such a connection is deplorable. What may be well called "patriotism" is certainly not vindicated or exemplified in such an extraordinary exposure of our weakness, if it be well founded. If the choice lies between the demonstration to our rulers of the existence of a great danger and the direct encouragement of those from whom the danger may be expected to come, we think that it is far better to keep the matter quiet. We must believe that those on whom the responsibility of defending our Indian Empire rests may be credited with as much intelligence and knowledge as the editor of the very best newspaper, and we would rather leave them to adopt measures for our security than paralyse their action by inviting, at such a critical juncture as the present on the Afghan frontier, the enemies we fear to make the utmost of the alleged weakness of our defence. Lord Wolseley recently deprecated the publication of news which might encourage the Mahdi; but the rescue of Gordon and the safety of Khartoum, dear as they are, must be esteemed of infinitesimal importance in comparison with the interests involved in the preservation of the Empire of India.

CONSIDERING the extremely divergent opinions quite recently expressed upon the subject by different authorities, our rulers and representatives have been pertinently asked to define, once and for all, what, in their estimation, is the numerical superiority in battleships over other Powers the country requires to insure that supremacy upon the seas it is universally admitted we must maintain? Any complete answer to this question—if given—must undoubtedly embody some explanation of the policy which guides the administration of the Navy, or, at all events, be accompanied by a revelation of the plan which it is in contemplation to carry out, with our eyes open to the fact that all the conditions and circumstances of the next war will be totally different to those of the last. Does such a programme exist? and are the additions to, and alterations in, our Naval forces based upon any well-matured and decided plan of action? There is no evidence to lead us to believe so; in fact, everything points to a happy-go-lucky and utterly impolitic procedure in our modes of construction, armament, and equipment. Notwithstanding which, it would be manifestly unfair, should such prove to be the case, to throw blame or discredit upon the different Boards that have ruled at the Admiralty in late years, cramped as they have been by the extremely narrow limits fixed by the Estimates, and with the certainty we feel that, if more money had been allowed, we should now possess a more powerful, a more efficient, and a comparatively better-proportioned and more homogeneous Fleet. Lord Northbrook has lately told us the three principles which have actuated the proceedings of himself and his colleagues at the Admiralty in such steps as they have taken towards keeping up our Naval strength, and they are such as cannot fail to meet with general approbation although there are those who confess themselves at a loss to discover wherein a practical recognition of these principles has been shown. But, anyway, more is wanted than a bare statement of principles; and nothing will tend so much to reassure the public mind and allay the very natural alarm which indubitably exists, if, in the discusssion we are promised in Parliament next Monday, some statement be forthcoming as to the programme, in accordance with which it is determined to what extent, and in what fashion, the Navy is to be increased and administered in the future. Nor is it unnatural for the country to ask, seeing how widely different have been the uttered opinions of those presumably best qualified to judge, respecting the present lamentable condition of our maritime defences,—Has it ever yet been decided, since the Naval forces of other nations commenced to attain their present development, of what types the craft, large and small, which go to make up the Navy, shall consist, and what number of each type is absolutely necessary to establish on a firm basis our supremacy afloat? If so, it surely will not be difficult or out of place to explain the system, and state the approximate expense by which continually, and with the least possible loss of time, not only can those vessels already built be kept in adequate repair, but others added constantly, to secure the normal establishment required; and further, to supply readily sufficient trained men and the best modern armaments. Such a programme is imperatively dictated by common-sense; and, once determined upon, would, when fully endorsed and authoritatively settled, be considered ample justification by the nation for any expenditure that might be shown needful to carry it out; besides, in all probability, if based upon some comparison with the proceedings of foreign Powers, be the means eventually of considerably reducing the Estimates. For example: Sir Thomas Symonds has proposed that we should "follow France; imitate the vessels of every class in her Navy; have the ditto, ditto, of her every description of war-vessels in all possible ways, and merely double the number. If she has one A, we should have two A's, as in the days of our forefathers." And without expressing approval or otherwise of his scheme, can any one doubt that if such a plan was to be authoritatively declared necessary, the money found, and steps taken to set about it, but that in a very short time a limit would be reached, in all probability the very certainty that such was our intention would be sufficient to check the expenditure of other nations; and it is quite possible that a few years might see the needed annual amount for Naval affairs considerably under what it is at this moment. However that may be, nobody believes that such a programme has been laid down for the last ten years or more, and this at a period when attention is being constantly directed to the Naval projects of foreign Powers. France, Italy, and Germany are steadily carrying out proposals which have been accepted by their respective governments. In Austria, and also in the United States, large sums have been asked for to develop declared and definite purposes. Even the smaller States, as the Brazils and Chili, are working on stated and approved lines in the additions they make to their Navies; while we stand alone among maritime nations, cheerfully singing "Britannia rules the waves!" with a dwindling Naval expenditure, a Fleet partly obsolete and wholly inadequate, and without any fixed policy by which our measures of maritime defence are regulated, except it be to spend as little as is compatible with making a fair show on paper. It is true that were the money voted to-morrow, the present Board and their advisers would be quite ready with counsel as to what is immediately required; but, given that in certain branches progress should be made at once—notably cruisers and torpedo craft—without wishing to say anything to derogate from the undoubted ability and reputation of these gentlemen, we are disposed to believe the most material conclusions can only be reached after a confidential and exhaustive inquiry into the facts by a thoroughly representative Committee, competent to deal with the whole of the subjects embraced in the national and colonial defences of the Empire, and furthermore assured of commanding the confidence of the country.

GENERAL MILLOT, who was recently recalled from the command of the Tonquin expedition, gave some interesting information the other day to a Parliamentary Committee before which he was called. After giving a description of his first successful operations, the General added:—"The importance of the Chinese troops must not be exaggerated. In all, China does not possess more than 40,000 armed men. A considerable portion of this force is immobilised by our Fleet, which threatens the Chinese coasts. Even should the Chinese invade Tonquin with all their available troops, there would be no reason for anxiety; their troops are devoid of courage, have no military value, and would never be able to take our fortresses. The Delta is impregnable." The General then spoke of the service rendered by the flotilla, adding, "Behind our fortresses is a population of 10,000,000 inhabitants, anxious for our success, and attached to our domination through hatred of the Chinese domination." Questioned as to the possibility of a march upon Langson, General Millot said:—"It is impossible in the rainy season. Yet it was during this season that Colonel Dugenne, in obedience to the imperative orders of the Minister of Marine, was obliged to march. He took twelve days to get over fifty miles. It was under these conditions that the French column ran up against a column of the enemy which marched from Langson to meet it. There was an engagement, because the Chinese would not fall back without an order from their Government, and because Colonel Dugenne, instead of referring to me, as he should have done, wished to push forward. The Chinese were posted upon inaccessible heights. The result was inevitable. I have been very unjustly blamed in this matter. I gave all the orders which it was my duty to give. The column was preceded by an advanced guard and skirmishers, and even by half a squadron of cavalry. If my orders had been strictly carried out, no difficulty would have happened. The fault of Colonel Dugenne was not warning the General-in-Chief when he heard of the approach of the Chinese. If I had been warned I should have gone to the front myself, and there would have been no engagement." It appears that Colonel Dugenne had precise instructions to refer to head-quarters in the event of meeting with any unforeseen obstacle. After thus showing that the ambush of Bac Lé, which M. Jules Ferry is still bent on revenging, was no ambush at all, and that the loss inflicted on the French column was due to orders from the Minister of Marine and the obstinacy and disobedience of Colonel Dugenne, General Millot gave some information as to the value of the country. "The population of the Delta," he said, "is so dense that there is no room for more occupants." "If you want mines," he added, "you must go beyond the Delta. . . . . When in command, I received a number of letters asking me for concessions." Now, the chief object of the expedition has always been supposed to be to gain possession of certain mines, and the probability, therefore, is that operations will be extended until the land of promise be reached. What so sober and Republican a paper as the Débats has to say about this French adventure in the East amounts to this,—Formosa is not worth taking. Nothing has been accomplished at Tamsui. The French are unable to work the coalmines at Kelung. The destruction of the arsenal at Fou Tcheou has been of no avail. General Brière de L'Isle is obliged to stand on the defensive. As for the Bac Lé ambush, its responsibility, according to the Débats, must be shared by General Millot, Colonel Dugenne, and the Home Government. Taking into account all the circumstances, the Home Government is, perhaps, the most to blame, as Captain Fournier, who concluded the treaty of Tientsin, must have informed his superiors that Li Hung Chang was afraid to promise the immediate withdrawal of the Chinese troops, lest his Government should refuse to ratify the treaty.

It is expected that the Channel Squadron will arrive at Portland on Monday. His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh will probably be in time to hear what the Government proposes to do for the improvement of the service in which he is so deeply interested.

We wonder whether the signs of activity exhibited during the last few days, by the orders received at the various Naval ports and elsewhere, have any connection with the statement forthcoming next week. An ironclad to be pushed on with all speed at Chatham, a cruiser to be laid down immediately at another dockyard, designs for torpedo-craft given to the private shipbuilders, an additional grant of £3,000 for repairs at Devonport, and other movements, certainly would seem to lend an air of probability to the idea.

The position of Commander-in-Chief at Queenstown will, it is stated, be conferred on Rear-Admiral Edward Howard, the late Vice-President of the Ordnance Committee, on the expiration of Rear-Admiral Lethbridge's command.

Sir Algernon Borthwick must be much more sanguine than the majority of us are, if he believes, as he told his hearers at the City Carlton Club, that "the Government are going to add considerably to the Navy and to our defences." We can only trust that when he hears their statement next Monday, he will not be disappointed.

Three weeks ago, Lord Northbrook, addressing the Marines detailed to form part of the Camel Corps, expressed his high appreciation of the gallant and good service rendered by the battalion in the Red Sea and Egypt, and added that the Admiralty would without doubt remember it in their favour. Yet, by the treatment the Marines at Suakim are receiving, one would hardly imagine so. It appears that the authorities out there having sanctioned the payment to the officers of a certain rate of pay to which officers of the Army are not entitled, and therefore do not receive, the authorities at home on hearing this not only directed the discontinuance of the remuneration, a proceeding no doubt justifiable, and possibly based upon excellent and unquestionable reasons, but they actually ordered also that all sums so paid should be recovered from the recipients, at the rate of £4 or £5 a month. Mr. James Lowther promptly brought the matter under the notice of the House, and Sir Thomas Brassey has assured Sir J. Hay that the opinions there expressed should be carefully considered; but the mistake has been made, and although it will, we trust, be at once rectified, nothing can excuse the shabbiness of such an order, or prevent the unhappy feelings to which it gives rise.

The Admiralty have issued instructions for the twin-screw, steel armour-plated turret-ship Hero, building at Chatham, to be got ready for launching as soon as possible, and nearly a thousand hands are now employed upon her. The Hero is 6,200 tons and 4,500 horse-power. She will have 12-in. armour, and carry two 43-ton breechloader, two 6½-ton muzzle-loader, and 12 light guns.

The rumour said to be flying about the House of Commons on Monday night, that Lord Northbrook was about to resign his seat in the Cabinet, and that Mr. Goschen would succeed him, has not been confirmed.

Sir J. Hay, writing in reference to some remarks he made in the House on the state of the Navy, says:—"I alluded to the distress in the shipbuilding trade, not only in the Clyde, the Humber, the Thames, and at Belfast, but also in the Mersey and the Tyne. I alluded to these centres of shipbuilding industry because of the fact that the shipbuilding trade there had been encouraged to make expensive preparation in all of them some 20 years ago for the appliances for building armour-clad ships, and to hope that they would be employed in the construction of such ships for her Majesty's Navy."

Her Majesty's ships in the Persian Gulf have, it seems, been evincing considerable activity lately in the suppression of the slave-trade. A correspondent writes to us:—"The boats are constantly away cruising, and have been so far successful, the Philomel having captured a large dhow with 154 slaves on board; and the Dragon, although she has not met with the same luck yet, has been able by her presence at Muscat to release a few fugitive slaves who swam off to the ship." The officers and men expect even more occupation next year, as it is currently reported and believed amongst the Arabs that England has been ordered by the Mahdi to allow slave-trading again, and has been forced to comply. Only the other day some Arabs actually started from Oman to join the victorious standard of the new "Rasul-al Allah," messenger of God.

A correspondent writes from Gibraltar:—"So scarce are midshipmen in the Channel Squadron, that in the flagship petty officers have to take the place of midshipmen for quarter-deck duty."

Calling attention to the statement in "The Truth about the Navy," that it is only during the last 15 years that the Navy has been "let down," a Rear-Admiral points out in a letter to the Pall Mall Gazette that the period named corresponds with the time when the responsibility of Naval officers at the Admiralty ceased, and he very pertinently asks:—"It is inconceivable that, had Naval officers not been deprived of their responsibility at the Board, things could have arrived at their present deplorable state?"

The almost despairing appeal which Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson has made to those who, like himself, belong to the Liberal Party, that they should judge for themselves of the forlorn condition of the Navy, and not be led by the nose, deserves the thoughtful attention of every one, irrespective of political bias. His exposure of the juggling expedients made use of at times by official apologists to throw dust in the eyes of those who more or less earnestly desire to arrive at the truth, comes with additional weight, seeing that he himself was at one time amongst the foremost advocates of reduction in Naval expenditure; and, if more was needed, his full endorsement of the startling statement as to the inefficiency of our first line of defence, which, although long known to the service, have only recently been prominently brought under public notice, should carry conviction wherever it is read.

Notice has been given that on Monday Mr. Gladstone will move that precedence be given over the orders of the day to his motion for leave to introduce a redistribution of seats Bill, and to Sir Thomas Brassey's statement respecting the ships of her Majesty's Navy. We should have imagined, with the Pall Mall Gazette, that the business of providing for the restoration of our Naval supremacy is quite important enough to occupy at least one entire sitting. Of course, if it be true that the Government do not intend to ask for a vote, they might as well not make a statement at all. But it is more likely that the Bill will only be introduced pro formâ on that day, and opportunity will be given on Tuesday for discussion at leisure, or that the announcement of the Daily News is incorrect that "it is proposed to arrange that the promised Ministerial statement relating to the Navy shall be made in Parliament on Tuesday next, December 2, instead of Monday."

Believing that Lord Northbrook has attempted to throw the blame on Naval officers, on the ground that they cannot agree as to what should be done, Admiral Symonds, in a letter to the daily Press, declares that naval men see no difficulty whatever in settling what to do immediately, namely,—"Follow France, as the strongest Naval power in the world; imitate the vessels of every class in her Navy—not, as at present, with fanciful armour only one-third the length of the ship to the French full length, &c.—but have the ditto ditto of her every description of war-vessel in all possible ways, and merely double the number. If she has one A, we need two A's, as in the days of our wise forefathers, or dire disaster must befall us." We do not know how far Admiral Symonds is authorised to put this forward as the plan finding most favour in the Navy; but there is not the slightest doubt all hands would welcome such a step, if there cannot be found some equally efficacious but somewhat less heroic programme.

A correspondent writes:—"One by one the few surviving veterans who served in the Navy in the early part of the century are dying off. Commander Sir J. S. Jephson, Bart., R.N., who entered the service in 1815, and Admiral James Burney, who entered in 1807, have both recently died, one at the age of 83, the other 91. It is almost startling to think of the enormous strides that have been accomplished in the material of maritime war within the memory of these officers."

A further trial has taken place of the Active's guns under the direction of the Ordnance Committee, and with very satisfactory results. The simple precaution of scaling the guns before firing shot was taken this time, and the only wonder to us is that it should have been omitted in the previous trial. One result of the accident, however, has been to point out how easily a gun can be disabled, for the blow given to its neighbour by the fragment of the exploded piece has been quite sufficient to render that gun useless. It is questionable, therefore, whether in mounting our artillery in the new ironclads en barbette, like the French, we are not risking their being put out of action by machine-guns.

The Portsmouth correspondent of the Morning Post says that the Admiralty have under consideration the necessity of increasing the personnel as well as the matériel of the Navy, the utmost difficulty being experienced in providing crews for ships already in commission and those required as reliefs. Lord Northbrook is expected to make special reference to this subject next week, and to announce an addition of £1,000,000 to next year's Naval Estimates.

We hear that the drafts sent last week by the Himalaya to strengthen the East Indies and China stations have so reduced the reserve of seamen and stokers that the depôt-ships are virtually empty. With the personnel of the Navy in such a deficient state, it is of little use clamouring for more ships. The Treasury should, in the interests of the country, sanction the entry of at least 1,000 boys before the end of the financial year. They are easily procurable, as there is always a large number of applicants for admission during the three months following December. Provision should be made in the Navy Estimates of 1885-6 for a further increase in the number to be recruited for training.

An Assistant-Paymaster has, after waiting nearly sixteen years, at last "reached the goal" by the early retirement of Mr. Grandidier, Paymaster, whose example might with advantage be followed by several seniors on the List, who, unfit for sea-service, are simply "hanging on" to home appointments to keep themselves from idleness. The Admiralty could with justice weed out such officers, and thereby improve the prospects of less fortunate juniors.

The names of Rear-Admiral Sir Michael Seymour and Sir Frederick Richards are mentioned in connection with the commands at the Cape and East Indies, which will become vacant in April next.

A few weeks ago we took occasion to approve of some remarks made by Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., on the Navy, and we are now pleased to be able to quote him again. Speaking at Scarborough, on Monday, to a Liberal meeting in support of Mr. Caine's candidature, he remarked that:—"He was not a fighting-man himself, but he was one of those who thought that the English Navy must be strong to defend our floating wealth. They would have to remember that we imported nearly half the food of the people of Great Britain; every sea has a highway for carrying that food, and we must be strong enough to protect those highways and those caravans upon the water for supplying the maintenance of the people of this country." This honest and straightforward expression of feeling was received with well-merited applause, and we can only wish that more independent politicians would look at the matter from a similar standpoint.

The report that the Admiralty have decided to replace the Coastguard sailing cruisers on the home stations with steam gun-vessels will, if confirmed, be hailed with delight by everyone who has ever experienced the misery of being "batterfanged" from station to station along the coast in the winter months in these craft. We shall be much disappointed if it does not also provide, what is much wanted, more independent commands for lieutenants.

It is rumoured that Lord Walter Kerr, on his resigning the command of the Chatham Steam Reserve, will be appointed to the Conqueror when ready for commission.

Admiral Phillimore will not complete his full three years at Devonport, as he will have to retire by age in the spring of 1887. Captain Carter, the present flag-captain at Plymouth, will only hold that appointment a few weeks longer, as he retires by age at Christmas. It is expected that Captain Cuming, late commodore in charge at Hong Kong, will be his successor, although Captain Buller, C.B., at present in command of the Achilles, is also named for the appointment.

There is generally a simple answer to the question,—"Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" The patient decides. If he makes a bad selection, the worse for himself. In the case of the Naval experts, professional and civilian, who have been engaged considering Sir E. Reed's proposals, there has been a distracting diversity of opinion on all points except one,—that several millions of money are needed at once to enable the Navy to give the Empire guarantees for security and peace. There is too much store set on unanimity by the outside world. The natures of ships and armaments lend themselves to the formation of different schools of thought and action. We may be satisfied that if we have ships, the men in them will give a good account of themselves; and it is not to be supposed, no matter how divergent may be the views of officers and others on the best policy to pursue, that the Admiralty and its professional advisers will fail to give the country the worth of its money in the ships to be added to the Navy.

The dockyard authorities at Sheerness have received instructions from the Admiralty to commence the building of a new composite gun-vessel, to be named the Swallow. She will probably carry eight 5-in. guns, the two foremost of which will be fired from sponson ports on Vavasseur central-pivoting mountings, the stern guns on revolving mountings, while the four broadside guns will be mounted on Vavasseur broadside carriages. She will also carry one 7-pounder field-piece and two machine-guns.

Admiral Fourichon, who died the other day in France, is perhaps better known for the part he played in the Franco-German war than for his naval exploits. When hostilities broke out in 1870, the Admiral was in command of the squadron of evolution in the North Sea. This squadron might have operated a diversion on the German coasts, says the Progrès Militaire; but for some reason yet to be revealed, nothing was done in the way of harassing the enemy's seaboard, and the crews of the French vessels fought on shore. Several of the forts round Paris were manned with blue-jackets during the siege, being placed under the orders of Admirals Rigault de Genouilly, Saisset, Pothuau, &c. As for Admiral Fourichon, shortly after landing in France, he was appointed by the Government of September 4, or National Defence, Minister of Marine and War, and he was busy organising an army when Gambetta suddenly descended from the clouds and assumed the part of Jupiter. The Admiral handed the War Department over to his youthful, eloquent, and inexperienced colleague, who proceeded to wage war on the old revolutionary lines, with what result is well known. Little was heard of Admiral Fourichon after the conclusion of peace until 1875, when he was rewarded with a life-Senatorship, and served as Minister of Marine, first in the Dufaure and then in the Jules Simon Cabinet. The Admiral, who died quite suddenly, had attained his 76th year. He entered the Navy in 1826.

The leading civic magnates of the City of London have on recent occasions displayed a keen sense of the unsatisfactory condition of the Navy. This encourages the belief that the great commercial bodies will support any good measure that might be proposed to remedy a condition of affairs which tends to endanger the prosperity and extension of British commerce on the seas. In proposing "The Army, Navy, and Reserve Forces," at a dinner of the Worshipful Company of Carpenters, of which the Lord Mayor of London is the Master, his lordship remarked that no Englishman would begrudge any expenditure necessary to make the British Navy the most powerful in the world, and capable, indeed, of competing with any combination of fleets that could be brought against it. These sentiments are now being generally echoed throughout the country.

In the Blue-books issued on Tuesday relating to the annexation of New Guinea, the instructions telegraphed by the Admiralty to Commodore Erskine at Sydney are as follows:—"You are to hoist and salute national flag at Port Moresby and any other points along the coast and islands where you think desirable. On your departure from New Guinea, leave Romilly temporarily in charge, giving him such instructions as you think fit, which he is to follow pending appointment of High Commissioner. Government approve of your giving suitable presents to principal chiefs at reasonable cost. Report date you will leave Sydney, and what arrangements you propose to make for keeping in communication with nearest telegraph station while you yourself are on the coast of New Guinea." Commodore Erskine telegraphed in reply that he would set out from Brisbane for New Guinea on the 27th of last month.

The Foreign Office have lately, through the Admiralty, expressed to Commander Robert W. Craigie, of the Flirt, their sense of the valuable services performed by him in August of this year, when conveying her Majesty's Consul for the Oil Rivers to various parts of the Niger and other West African rivers, where, in conjunction with the commander of the Flirt, he was engaged in annexing a large amount of territory, and concluding treaties with various native chiefs. We understand the satisfactory results obtained were greatly due to the promptitude and alacrity of Commander Craigie, as the Flirt had scarcely finished this duty when a German gunboat arrived on the coast charged with a similar duty. We trust the Admiralty and Foreign Office expression of approval will not be a mere empty formality.

Mr. Caine has not lost his seat at Scarborough, although he had a tough fight for it. The question asked in the House last Monday, as to whether his appointment was to be taken as indicative of an intention to stop the issue of grog in the Navy, was not wholly devoid of reason, seeing that Mr. Caine is only second to Sir Wilfred Lawson as a prominent advocate of total abstinence, and that he has already, on more than one occasion, attacked both the Naval rum ration and the canteen system of the Army, in the House.

It is very exasperating! But Lord Northbrook must bear it. Let him remember the case of the American in "Martin Chuzzlewit," who asserted that the Queen "lived in the Tower of London" as a fixed fact. If people will insist on knowing what his plan was, and what has been its fate better than he does, why, it cannot be helped. The Government shares the same fate. It is informed that, without knowing it, proposals have been sent forth to the various European Powers respecting the settlement of the difficulty in Egypt.

Are we coming to Government by newspaper? Apparently not quite. Lord Northbrook, at all events, is dead against it, and Mr. Gladstone has "no time to read the papers" in the midst of all his post-card and other correspondence. But the attempts to establish the system are vigorous, and the success achieved by the Pall Mall Gazette in the Navy Reform movement has encouraged the editor to make a bold effort to take the helm at the Admiralty. We are told that when Lord Northbrook arrived in London from Egypt, the professional interviewer who is generally engaged in the business by our spirited and enterprising contemporary—to whose remarkable industry and keen outlook we acknowledge our obligations—waited on his lordship, with a request that he would give him the substance of his Report; and that on his lordship's refusal to entertain the proposal, the Pall Mall put its rod in pickle, and kept it there till occasion arose for free flagellation. On Thursday there were some savage switchings, and we are told that Sir Cooper Key, Sir T. Brassey, Lord Alcester, &c., "are doing more than any other men in England to secure and perpetuate the present comparative weakness of our first line of defence," and that Lord Northbrook will not restore our Naval supremacy. Now, we believe that the Naval Lords are as deeply impressed as even the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette with the necessity of strengthening the Fleet, but that they have no more power than he has to do it. Certainly they are not opposing measures in that direction.

The Pall Mall Gazette states that the Cabinet Council to-day will consider what Lord Northbrook is to tell Parliament, and promise the country on Tuesday next. It will not be from want of popular backing, professional advice, and general outcry that the Government can affect timid councils, or lack courage, and if they have convictions at all, they have every reason to hope their proposals to carry them out will find acceptance. The only fault likely to be found just now with any official programme is that it does not go far enough. All parties are agreed to support "Oliver in asking for more."

We have no time or space this week for a review of Lady Brassey's pretty, pleasant, and useful tome, really the sort of book a Lord of the Admiralty's wife ought to write, though we do not call to mind any predecessor in the fashion; but we cannot agree with the critics who hail the time of its appearance as especially appropriate. That, in fact, is the only fault we have to find with Lady Brassey's charming pages; that we should have to read of sunny skies and amaranthine seas, purple and mauve bougainvillias, brilliant sunsets, cloudless skies, and the like, in the drear and dull November, though we admit gratefully it has so far been almost "fogless."

Prince George of Wales left Greenwich on Saturday, on a very brief visit to Sandringham, for his Royal Highness returned to his studies on Sunday, so as to be in time for work on Monday morning.

Those who stated that Lieutenant-Colonel Maurice's appointment on the Intelligence Staff was to be kept open for him during his absence in Egypt were a little bit out of it; for Major L. A. Gregson, half-pay, who has been selected to fill the vacancy, is to be considered as holding a permanent appointment for the usual term of five years.

The Duke of Cambridge left London early this week for a shooting party at Lord Dacre's, in Cambridgeshire, and returned to town on Thurday.

Mr. Little, in his book on Madagascar, states that the Malagasy Prime Minister told him the white traders were ruining the people by the sale of spirits, and that the Malagasy Government would gladly prohibit the admission of a single bottle of the poison into the island, but "that the British Government would not allow this." Surely this is incredible! That a Christian Government prevents the Ministry of an independent State from passing port and customs' regulations to protect their people from frightful evils seems too monstrous for belief. It is well that Mauritius does not produce and sell cholera bacilli and microbes, and export them at a profit to Madagascar, as the Malagasees would have to grin and take them. And they would be less deadly in the long-run.

It seems a departure from the custom of the Royal House that the eldest son of the Prince of Wales should not be a soldier; but it is not to be inferred, we suppose, from the entry of Prince Albert Victor (or Prince "Eddie," as his Royal Highness is called), as a student at the Middle Temple, that he is finally to become a Barrister-at-Law after keeping all his terms. The Prince of Wales is a member of the Middle Temple, and the additional kudos given to the Honourable Society, by the appearance of the heir to the Throne in the Common Hall, will be a great feather in the cap of the Benchers.

The delay in filling the post of Chaplain-General with a successor to Bishop Claughton causes some people to think that the vacancy will not be filled at all, and that there will be no Chaplain-General in future, or till some necessity is shown to exist for the revival of the office.

The paragraph referring to the vocal indulgences of the men of a battalion quartered in Ireland, which appeared lately in the Army and Navy Gazette, attracted the attention of the authorities, but it is not known whether they have "located" the delinquents. When a number of cheerful boys are associated together in a breezy camp on "a blasted heath" or common, without any non-commissioned officers whose age and service entitle them to respect, it is likely enough that they will give vent to their feelings in sounds which, if not military or musical, are the outward and articulate expressions of their objections to discipline and authority.

Punch is not quite right in ascribing to Lord Beaconsfield the idea of settling complicated questions by reference to sensible men at a round table. When Lord Ampthill, then Mr. Odo Russell, came to the German camp at Versailles to announce that, "with or without allies, England would go to war" with Russia for her denunciation of the Treaty of Paris, Prince, then Count Bismarck, announced before he saw the British Envoy that "he thought it was a matter to be settled by five or six sensible men sitting at a round table, and that he would propose 'a Conference,' no matter where." And a Conference there was accordingly, in which England did not get much by her motion. Out of a later Conference we were supposed to have got "peace with honour," but there was certainly no profit from Berlin for us, and the insistance on the stipulations of that famous Treaty being carried out would probably lead to war to-morrow. Somehow our diplomatists do not shine in conferential business, unless, like Lord Granville, they knock it on the head; but Sir E. Malet, assisted by Mr. Meade and Mr. Anderson, appears to be conducting the work relating to that Basin of Congo with great skill and success.

A correspondent from "Dublin," who asks us why "the 5th Lancers or the Hussars now in the Irish capital were not sent to Egypt in lieu of the extracts or essences from the whole of the Cavalry in the three kingdoms," is informed that we have no reply, except the surmise that it would never do to act in accordance with the usual custom, and send a complete and efficient regiment on service. "Dublin" will observe that we take it for granted the regiments he alludes to are ready for service. We believe they are both efficient, and we know Colonel Chichester's was most favourably reported upon at the Duke's inspection.

The friends of Colonel R. Harrison, R.E., will be grieved to hear that his health has given way, at Sarras, under the severe strain of his duties on the line of communications. Colonel Harrison is a man of robust frame, and if it is really the case that he has broken down, it is to be feared that many weaker vessels will yet be shattered on the Nile ere Gordon is relieved.

The Zhob Valley Expeditionary Force is returning to India, having completed its work in a most satisfactory manner. It is not known whether the officers and men of the expedition will be given any reward for their services, but we understand that Brigadier Tanner is likely to get the Star of India, he being already a K.C.B. It has been ascertained that the main route from the Gomul Pass to Candahar does not lie, as has been supposed, through the Zhob Valley, but through the valley of Khwandar, and that the route is practicable for a large army. The Zhob Valley itself appears to supply no resources for an army, save some excellent grazing-land.

A good-service pension in India of £100 per annum has been conferred on Colonel G. T. Chesney, Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, Military Secretary to the Government of India, from July 27, 1884, vice Major-General A. B. Johnson, C.B., Bengal S.C., who has succeeded to colonel's allowances.

The following General Order by the Commander-in-Chief in India was issued on October 30:—"Major-General Sir George Greaves, K.C.M.G., C.B., relinquishes to-day the high office of Adjutant-General in India. The past five years have witnessed events of historical importance, for within that period are comprised the occupation and defence of Cabul, the battles of Ahmed Kheyl, Maiwand, and Candahar, and the withdrawal of the British Army from Afghanistan. Throughout these operations, and during the expeditions in the Wazari country and on the North-Eastern frontier, the Commander-in-Chief in India has relied with confidence on the matured judgment and military sagacity of Sir George Greaves. So also, in the discussion of the many grave questions of Army administration which have arisen during this period, Sir Donald Stewart found reason to value the Adjutant-General's sound sense, independence, and scrupulous honesty of purpose. In Sir George Greaves the Army of India possesses a true friend and a genial comrade; in its name the Commander-in-Chief bids him a very hearty farewell."

Mr. Holman Hunt has painted two pictures of the "Flight Into Egypt." Perhaps this time twelvemonth he will begin his sketches for the "Flight Out of Egypt." Some one must undertake the subject.

A correspondent, "Volunteer," finds fault with the remark we made that it was to be regretted the whole of the force proceeding, as it must seem now re frustra, to Bechuanaland, were not "Regulars." We admit that the volunteers under Colonel Methuen are exceptionally good, and that they are likely to prove of immense service if it comes to fighting the "skallywag squatters;" but we hold that the principle on which the corps are raised is objectionable, and that a great nation like England should have an Army on which the Government could draw for any force that might be required in the execution of its policy in the field, without having recourse to what in the States would be called "filibustering." There are hot spirits, no doubt, and unruly members of good character always ready for a fight in this country, but there is very great difficulty in keeping out the mere "buccaneer" and loafer from the ranks, and incurring trouble and discredit from them in the field. If the latest news as we write be true, the "Goshen freebooters" will not fight; but then the news from the Cape is generally untrue, or, at least, liable to modifications, which renders it substantially false. One telegram says that Montsioa will have nothing to do with his protectors; and, indeed, if the Cape Government annexes Bechuanaland, he will probably not care very much whether he is ruled by Dutch Boers or British Afrikanders. The Pembroke Castle is off and away; but if the intelligence be confirmed, a telegram at Madeira may recall her. We hope not. The voyage will do the men good; and, after all, their presence at the Cape may be useful—and desirable, too. As Sir H. Robinson may not be quite certain of the stiffness of the backbones of his Cape Government, or of the tractability of the Boer squatters when the immediate danger of pressure is removed, the expeditionary force will be very welcome at Cape Town, even if it goes no further. It is probable that a number of the volunteers will eventually settle in the Colony, and Colonel Methuen will speedily be back at his post in the Horse Guards, where he worked so well and is much missed. The volunteering spirit is very good for the State, but it may be carried too far sometimes.

The announcement in the Gazette of Tuesday with reference to Major A. Warry, R.A., is simply a confirmation, for this officer has been "acting" as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General at head-quarters for the last three months.

The Prince of Saxe Altenberg, who is on a visit to the Prince of Wales at Sandringham, was attached by the Russian Government to the German head-quarters at Versailles during the war of 1870, and saw a good deal of service in the expedition to Géok Tépé. His Highness, who is reported to be a very excellent officer, is stationed at Warsaw.

The letters to the Morning Post anent the Reserve of Officers simply confirms what all officers of that rather hybrid "force" have long since felt to be the case, viz., that the whole thing is a farce. It sounds well, of course, for the Secretary of State for War to refer now and again, from his seat in Parliament, to this Reserve of Officers, and to tell confiding Houses that the War Office has taken steps to organise such a Reserve; but, for all practical purposes, the list of reserve officers is about as useless as though it had never existed, for there is no officer on the list who has ever been employed, or, we venture to think, ever will be, so long as the present Warrant remains in force.

Lord Dorchester, known in his Guardsman days in the Crimea as "Dudley Carleton," is lying ill at his house in Berkeley Square, under the care of Sir Oscar Clayton.

Another court-martial prisoner, a deserter from the Commissariat and Transport Corps, escaped from one of the hut guard-rooms at Aldershot on Wednesday last, making the fourth man who has thus escaped during the past three weeks. In the present instance the Military Mounted Police, owing to the usual activity of the corps authorities, were soon on the trail of the absentee, and after a night's hard work he was captured some miles from Aldershot on the road to London, and speedily relegated to his insecure house of detention. The escape of prisoners at the Camp is the cause of much trouble to all concerned, and especially to those who are immediately responsible for their safe keeping, and who are liable to be tried by court-martial. All this trouble might be avoided if prisoners remanded for serious offences were confined in a suitable central building surrounded by a high wall, from which escape would be impossible. As it is, greater pains are taken to safeguard the few tons of coal in the camp coal-yards than the prisoners confined in the camp guard-rooms, awaiting their trial for serious offences—the coal depôts being surrounded by concrede walls, topped with formidable chevaux-de-frise. It is impossible that there can be any safe custody of prisoners at the Camp while the present bad system continues.

The appointment of Clerk of the Cheque and Adjutant of the Royal Body Guard of Yeomen of the Guard has become vacant by the death of Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Sutton, on the Retired Full-pay List, late Cavalry Depôt. Colonel Sutton, who had held the appointment since January 9, 1862, died at Ealing on the 26th inst., aged 72.

The latest issue of the "Journal" of the United Service Institution of India, just to hand, contains five interesting essays, one of which has obtained the Institution's gold medal. The subject for the prize essay was "The Best Method of Devising a System of Reserves for the Native Army of India, as at Present Organised;" and the medal was awarded to Captain E. G. Barrow, 7th Bengal N.I.

A correspondent of the Morning Post makes some startling revelations—revelations to civilians, though not to soldiers—as to the way in which official returns are "cooked." In a letter, recently published by our contemporary, the statement that five per cent. only of the Marines at Suakim were on the sick-list was discredited, and it was insinuated that 25 per cent. would be nearer the mark. With reference to the statement, one who speaks from his own personal knowledge writes from Egypt:—"That letter in the Morning Post is absolutely correct. . . . . . I will tell you one very curious incident that happened not very long ago. An order came down for a general return of all the sick to be sent in; with the order came also a special injunction that the return was to be as small as possible. The authorities waited till the next ship for Suez had taken up a large consignment of about 100 men, and then sent round an order that every man convalescent was to go on duty who could be possibly sent. Then the return of the sick was made out, sent home, and published for the benefit of the public. What object the Admiralty can have in doing this sort of thing, I can't think; it makes one rather savage." If this is done by the Admiralty to disprove the truth with regard to the Marines, who are all seasoned men, how must the case stand in respect to some of our Line battalions composed principally of unseasoned youths?

We learn from the Cape that, in view of possible difficulties in Bechuanaland, the following troops embarked at Durban in the Danube on October 29, sailed the same day, arrived at Cape Town on November 2, and landed on the 3rd:—General Staff—Major Spence, D.A.A. and Q.M.G. No. 8 Battery, 1st Brigade, Western Division, R.A.,—Major Dugdale, Lieutenant Hutchinson, 3 serjeants, 2 trumpeters, and 56 rank and file. 2nd Battalion, Northamptonshire (58th) Regiment,—Major Chaytor, Captains Jopp (Adjutant) and Edwardes, Lieutenant Prichard, 14 serjeants, 6 drummers, and 116 rank and file. Army Medical Department—Brigade-Surgeon Skene. The three companies of the Northamptonshire Regiment were those stationed since July at Fort Northampton, Rorke's Drift, where they were relieved by three companies of the 2nd Battalion, South Lancashire, under Lieutenant-Colonel Cardew. The mounted company of the Northamptonshire Regiment, under Lieutenant Collinson, and 30 of the battery of Royal Artillery, under Captain Fletcher and Lieutenant Smith, remain at Fort Northampton. With these exceptions, the battalion and battery are now concentrated in Cape Town. The force at Rorke's Drift also includes a squadron of Inniskilling Dragoons, the whole being commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Bennitt, of that regiment. The 32nd Company, R.E., under Captain Savage, sent up last May from Cape Town, remains for the present at Pietermaritzburg.

The case of "Thorburn v. Crawford" has happily ended in a verdict the effect of which will be to exonerate both officers from all blame. It arose, it may be remembered, out of the proceedings in India some time ago against Surgeon-Major Thornburn, A.M.D., in connection with some racing transactions. Dr. Thornburn was accused of "pulling" a pony at a race-meeting, and whilst denied a court of inquiry, was placed on the Retired List with a gratuity. This treatment the doctor held to be high-handed and unjust, and he therefore commenced an action against Dr. Crawford as Director-General of the Army Medical Department—from no feeling of animus, but simply to enable him to re-establish his character. The case came up for hearing on the 20th inst., when Mr. Justice Manisty summed up as follows:—"Gentlemen of the Jury,—You have heard the clear statements which have been made to you, and I think my duty will be best performed by saying, and probably you will agree with me in this, that both parties have acted as honourable men,—the one doing his duty, the other feeling aggrieved, and wishing his character clearly vindicated in public, so that anything like dishonourable conduct on his part might be ascertained and proved, or it might be admitted that he was free from any such imputation. Under the advice of the learned counsel, he has agreed that a juror should be withdrawn. Technically, that means that both parties are agreed that the defendant did his duty, and the plaintiff goes out of court without any imputation on his character, or anything approaching to it." This settlement must be considered in every sense satisfactory. For the jury to have returned a verdict with damages against Dr. Crawford would certainly have been an act of great injustice, seeing that that gentleman acted throughout in an official capacity, and could in no way be held to be morally responsible for any injury which the defendant had suffered by reason of the action of the military authorities. At the same time, it reflects credit on the defendant that he should have been induced to take a lenient view, and not press his case against the Director-General.

The Cape Times, commenting upon a recent cable message, in which occurred the expression, "an amicable arrangement with the Boers to secure the integrity of the frontier," says that, "In the loose use of language commonly observed in English newspapers with reference to the affairs of South Africa, the word 'Boers' may be intended to denote the Transvaal Government; the more natural application would be to the men of Goshen, who are actually in possession of the conquered portion of the Protectorate." "Loose language," the Argus retaliates, "may occasionally be used both in England and in the Colony on the affairs of South Africa; but in this case, the 'natural application' of the term 'Boer' can scarcely be the men of Goshen, when the Boers are men with whom it is proposed to make amicable arrangements as to the integrity of a frontier. Amicable arrangements may be made with the men of Goshen, but not an arrangement concerning a frontier, —that can only rest with the Transvaal."

On behalf of the Militia, "An Ex-Staff Officer" protests, through the columns of the Times, against Colonel Methuen being allowed, by the connivance of the authorities, to deplete the already skeleton body of officers of that force by carrying off with him to the Cape some 200 of them, whom he proposes enrolling as private troopers in a corps of irregular cavalry. "Surely," writes the correspondent, "this is the last thing wanting to complete the degradation of the Militia, that our officers, who theoretically are now in precisely the same position as those of the Regular branch of the Army, should be permitted to volunteer to serve as privates, subject to the discipline of the ranks, while still retaining their commissions in her Majesty's Army." Though agreeing with "Ex-Staff Officer" that the position of these officers is anomalous we think he is wrong in his premisses. He evidently forgets that neither Colonel Methuen or anybody else could have compelled Militia officers to accept service in the ranks. Volunteers were called for to serve in the newly-formed corps of Mounted Infantry, and certain Militia officers applied to be allowed to enrol themselves. Their applications were entertained. But they are there of their own free will; they would have been disappointed had their services not been accepted. It is rather unfair, therefore, of "Ex-Staff Officer" to turn round and throw the blame on Colonel Methuen's shoulders, when that officer was, we feel certain, actuated by the best and most friendly motives in advising the authorities to provide young Militia officers an opportunity, of which many of them have been only too ready to avail themselves, of seeing active service.

The Government of India have extended to adjutants of British cavalry regiments in India the annual allowance of 20 rs. at present sanctioned to adjutants of British infantry regiments, for the preparation of musketry returns.

We believe that the terms of the address to the veteran Görgey, presented at Perth the other day, to use the words of a correspondent of an evening paper, "substantially represent the future verdict of history." But why does not Louis Kossuth speak? It was owing to him Görgey lived for thirty-six years under the opprobrium of being a traitor to Hungary. Six and thirty years! It is a long time to have to wait for justice. Surely it is not true always that "whom the Gods love die young." FitzJohn Porter is not so fortunate as Görgey. He has been pronounced innocent of the charges which led to his retirement from the United States' Army in 1862; but restitution has not yet been made, and justice has not been officially done, because it would cost too much, and political and professional rancour is at work against him.

General Campenon, in reply to attacks made in and out of Parliament on the subject of a declaration to the effect that if more than 6,000 men were sent to Tonquin the mobilisation of the army would be jeopardised and that he would resign, says that he has nothing to do with the expedition. This is true to a certain extent. All troops detached to the colonies pass under the orders of the Minister of Marine, and all the ammunition and stores furnished to those troops are paid for by the Admiralty to the War Office; but still the troops, &c., have to be supplied by General Campenon, who is indirectly responsible. The language used with respect to this affair is of the most violent description. M. Anatole de la Forge, one of the deputies for Paris, parading Prince Bismarck's declaration that he would not sacrifice one of his Pomeranians for the Eastern question, says that the Chinese question is not worth the blood of one French sailor. However this may be, the majority in the French Chamber have sanctioned the policy of M. Jules Ferry; they will, no doubt, vote all the money he asks for, and 6,200 men are to be despatched next week to the scene of action. In the Chamber, M. Jules Ferry denied that the French troops are besieged in the Delta. So far from this being the case, he said,—"Our troops have always acted on the offensive, and have always been victorious." There have, however, been reports of the Chinese attacking, and of the French having been obliged to fall back.

We learn from India that Colonel Williams, Director of Remount Operations, has reported on his recent inspection of the principal studs of South Australia, Victoria, and New South Wales. He concludes that, with four exceptions, the breeding of horses is confined to thoroughbreds and heavy cart-horses; and he suggests that prizes should be offered at all colonial agricultural shows for stallions suitable to produce horses for the Indian Artillery, and for those suitable for the breeding of hunters and weight-carrying riding horses. In addition, Colonel Williams gives some good advice to colonial breeders as to the best means of producing a medium class of horses, now so exceedingly scarce in Australia.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will commence in London on Wednesday, April 8 next, the medical examination taking place at the Academy on the previous day. The number of vacancies to be competed for will be 50. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with the Regulations. The successful candidates will be required to join the Royal Military Academy about May 27 next.

From Victoria the news reaches us that the defence scheme drawn up by Colonel Sargood has hung fire so long that doubts are entertained as to whether it will ever be acted upon. It has been much debated in the local Parliament, and generally approved. But the old question of expense has arisen to prevent its passing into law. And, meanwhile, the Colony is left defenceless.

The Indian authorities are still keeping in view the desirability of increasing the number of summer camps, and we learn from Rawul Pindee that Captain Routh, Brigade-Major, at that station, has made several excursions lately to the low hills not far from Baracow, with a view to finding additional sites for such camps. Captain Routh reports that there are several suitable places with large villages, and plenty of water. The distance from Pindee is about 20 miles; so that, if necessary, the troops could do it in one march. The height is nearly 5,000 ft., or a good deal higher than Cherat. The only difficulty is that it is in the Hazara district, so that there would be some little difficulty about civil cases. They would have to be sent right round to Abbottabad, instead of to Pindee. The report is now before the military authorities.

By a printer's error, we were made to say last week the magazines at Priddy's Hard were to be removed to "Upnor." It should have been "Tipnor."

THE FRAUDS ON BOARD THE GANGES.

The Courts-martial at Devonport in connection with the frauds on board the Ganges were brought to a close last Saturday. William Hicks, ship's steward of the Ganges, pleaded "Guilty" to charges of negligence of duty in not seeing that the ship's steward's books were properly kept, explaining that he had trusted to subordinates. He denied that false entries were made by him or at his instigation. He attributed certain fraudulent entries to clerical errors, which he should have discovered had he checked the books himself. He had been in the service 19 years, and was in possession of the long-service and good-conduct medal, with three good-conduct badges. In October next he would be eligible for a pension of £45 a year and a good-service gratuity of £20. His character was blasted and ruined through implicitly trusting others. He pleaded for leniency on account of his wife and three young children, who were totally dependent upon him. He was sentenced to two years' hard labour and dismissal from the service with disgrace.

THE NAVAL GREAT-COAT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—May I ask you to again repeat in your columns the suggestion anent distinguishing marks on the naval great-coat which recently appeared? I have had the opportunity of speaking to many naval officers lately, and all are agreed that distinguishing marks are badly wanted, and that the suggestion of "Confusion" (I think) is a good one,—perhaps the stars or crowns would be better if firmly sewed on to the shoulders of the coat itself,—without the superfluous shoulder-straps. The proposal that in number and character they should correspond with the military relative rank is admirable, as soldier sentries seldom know what salutes to pay naval officers.—I am, &c.,

A SUITABLE UNIFORM FOR TROPICAL STATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I hear that the Admiralty were recently sounded on the subject of authorising a white tunic being worn by Naval officers employed on the West Coast of Africa, and other hot and unhealthy stations; but that their Lordships refused to move in the matter, as they were of opinion it was much better left to the discretion of individual commanding officers, there being no objection to white clothing being worn on board ship at such discretion. I am of opinion this is a very unsatisfactory method of dealing with the matter—their Lordships' "opinion" was more or less "unofficial;" it leaves the white tunic still an illegal garment, and prevents any uniformity in regard to it. Even on stations where it is generally worn, such as the West Coast of Africa, it assumes diversity of shape and pattern. Some officers wear distinction marks of gold lace tacked on to it, some blue braid sewn on, others yellow braid, while others again discard any braid at all. The same remarks apply with equal force to a tropical head-dress, helmets, straw hats, and white felt ones being all in vogue, while even the helmet admits of numerous varieties in regard to shape. Some officers wear it unadorned, some wear a band or "puggeree" of blue silk round it, some white, while the present Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies and his Staff have a Naval cap badge sewn on to the front of it. Is it not undignified for the Commander-in-Chief on a foreign station to wear a head-dress he is not allowed by the Regulations? Surely it is time, under the circumstances, that the Admiralty deal with the whole subject in a proper manner.—I am, &c.,

The Royal Humane Society has awarded its silver medal to Lieut. the Hon. W. Grimston, H.M.S. Alexandra, for saving, with the assistance of two seamen of the same ship, H. Leason, A.B., in the sea off Beyrout, in circumstances of great peril. Medals have also been conferred upon Lieut. J. Casement, H.M.S. Audacious, for saving P. Magno, in the Amoy Roads, China, on Aug. 22; to Qrmr. J. Hicks and W. Hicks, for saving Pte. F. Mills, R.M.L.I., in the sea at Suakim; to Shal Wully, sepoy, of the 28th Native Infantry, for saving Alla Bux, in the Ganges, at Allahabad; to Trooper J. Dawkins, Royal Horse Guards, for rescuing Trooper Clements in the Nile, at Assiout, Oct. 14; and to Pte. Mullins, 2nd Batn. the Buffs, for rescuing a man, name unknown, in Hong Kong Harbour.

One of the new steam basins at Chatham Dockyard, with a water area of upwards of 30 acres, is to be handed over to the Royal Engineers for submarine mining and torpedo operations.

Last week, while the iron tubular mainmast of the Tourmaline, which is 110 ft., was being lifted out, one of the blocks of the shears gave way, and the mast fell on the starboard bulwarks. A large number of men were at work on the deck, but fortunately only three were slightly injured. The mast fell into the basin.

The French are about to strengthen their flotilla in Tonquin by the Lapérouse and Nièvre, who will sail this month. The Limier is ordered to relieve the Beautemps Beaupré, in Madagascar, next December, and the Sendre also sails at once for the same station. The launch of the new cruiser Dubourdieu will take place early in December.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has sent to the Archdeacons of Canterbury and Maidstone a special prayer "for our soldiers and sailors in Egypt and South Africa," with an expression of his wish that it may be used in churches in his diocese.

Admiral Lord John Hay was at Malta on Nov. 17.

Vice-Admiral Commerell was at Bermuda on Nov. 20.

On Tuesday morning a fire broke out at Queenborough, and a party of Royal Marines and bluejackets were at once ordered to assist in extinguishing it. The distance is more than two miles, and by the time the detachment arrived the fire had gained a firm hold. Their energetic efforts at first enabled them to make some headway against the flames; but eventually, water running short, they were forced to allow the fire to burn itself out.

Reviews.

[SECOND NOTICE.]

In his description of the march of the troops the author says:—

> "When seen singly and near, the camel is an ugly brute enough, often vicious and stupid; seen from a distance, crossing the plain in a long file, they are among the most graceful of quadrupeds. Their slow, solemn gait, their undulating motion, the flowing robes of their attendants, seem to embody the calmness, the poetry, and even the unchangeableness of the East. As they appear now on the plains of India, so did they long ago on those of Mamre and Bagdad. On such might Sindbad have returned with his treasures, or Eliezer brought home to Isaac his bride."

There is an exciting and romantic description of "a midnight ride," in an attempt to reach Agra before the road had been blocked. Passing on, we find a description of the author's first three days in Agra with his brother. The defences of the fort were very incomplete; half the cannon were unmounted, the powder magazines had not been made bomb-proof, and a variety of other works had been either not commenced or were still unfinished. In the author's opinion, Mr. Colvin will, for his connection with the Mutiny, occupy a place in our Indian history, and in that respect not a favourable one. Still he was a man of great ability, and he had the rare excellence of always preferring right before expediency. It was his misfortune to be called upon to meet a crisis, which to meet successfully was impossible, and which to meet at all required qualities which he did not possess. Such was the state of things within and without the fort, when suddenly it was discovered that the rebel army was in full march on Agra, and soon after were strongly posted at Shahgunge. "For three days we had been guarding against an imaginary foe, and had remained within the fort, for fear of an army that existed only in our imaginations." The arrival of the enemy caused great excitement and divided counsels. The General took one side, the younger officers the other. Some advocated making the impending battle an artillery fight, to take out the heavy guns from the fort, and drive the enemy out of their position; but the General had decided to move out with his field battery alone, and was so impatient as to start with a half supply of ammunition. It was late in the day when one English regiment, the Agra Mounted Militia, and a single battery of field artillery, marched out to meet the rebel forces. The English soldiers were much exhausted from the heat, and the thick cloth uniforms which had been served to them. The village in which the mutineers were posted was slightly elevated above the plain, and gave the enemy an advantage in firing. The General was strongly urged to let the English soldiers charge, but he preferred trying an artillery fight, although he had left half his troops behind him. The General, to the shame and indignation of his men and officers, gave the order to retreat, not from cowardice, for he was personally brave, nor from confusion, for throughout he was cool and collected—his conduct was the result of simple incapacity. The news of our disgrace flew rapidly to where hundreds were awaiting the result of the battle. Many were murdered, and numbers succumbed to fatigue and starvation. To all this must be added the terrible fact that not the slightest preparation or comfort for the wounded had been prepared—all was chaos and confusion. There is one feature in Mr. Thornhill's volume which is pretty well familiar to most readers—it is "Ghost-Stories" and "Secret Passages," which suggest ghosts—in fact, the fort was believed to be very full of evil spirits and ghosts, the great Emperor, Akbar, reigning supreme over them, although he was never seen. Nothing could be more distressing than the state of confusion into which everything was suffered to fall. Mr. Colvin no doubt was, in the words of the author, a man of great ability, for ordinary times a most excellent governor, but he was constitutionally unfitted for a crisis such as the Mutiny; he lost alike his judgment and self-reliance, and threw himself for advice and guidance into the hands of those around him. Great was the rejoicing on the "Fall of Delhi." But in the meantime danger was more imminent than ever. One immense army of rebels was advancing from Delhi, and a smaller one—"the Indore Mutineers"—were approaching from the opposite direction, and had arrived within fifteen miles of the fort gates. "The Battle of Agra," "The Battlefield," and "After the Battle," present vivid pictures. It may be interesting to hear the author's answer to the question, "What caused the Mutiny?" The causes assigned by the English are many and very contradictory; the causes alleged by the natives may be reduced to three,—severity of taxation, impoverishment of the country, the design of the English Government to convert them to Christianity. The author concludes this powerfully written tale with a dim foreshadowing that at any moment a similar catastrophe may come upon us, and find us unprepared, as we were at the time when the great Indian Mutiny broke out, with scarcely a sound to intimate what was threatening. "It is never to be forgotten that the Mutiny came upon us without sign or warning. The country was never so prosperous, the people were never more apparently contented than when it burst into insurrection. It was from a cloudless sky that that thunderbolt descended."

The Italia Militare has a remarkable article on the military position of Italy, which has been largely discussed by the political press. It is shown what Italy has achieved within the last fourteen years in the way of military reorganisation. From an imperfectly organised army, badly equipped, and, in consequence of the events of 1866, discredited even at home, the military forces of the present day have been formed, which will include within a very short time 450,000 men of the first line and 200,000 reserve, or landwehr, besides a second reserve, or landsturm—the territorial militia—all equipped with modern weapons. It is significant that the semi-official Italia Militare publishes such an article at the present time. It is, at the same time, an apology for the newly-appointed War Minister, General Ricotti, who in a similar capacity in 1870 introduced general liability to military service. The moment chosen for the retrospect shows that the journal believes in the possibility of a turning-point.
